On "Missing," a very dramatic production, Mr. Myrick put on a setting that was entirely in contrast with the circus one, but just as convincing. The house was gradually darkened until there were none showing except the exit indicators, and then there gradually became visible the figure of a marine with flashlight searching for some missing one. After he had crossed the stage and was half way back on his return trip there was a single shot fired from the balcony, with the marine dropping into the trench as if wounded.

Footlights then came up in a blue green and nine men in the uniforms of marines came up to the top of the trench and fired a volley of three rounds, immediately disappearing. Then from the left of the stage came a girl searching for the wounded and

Buffalo Manager Humanizes His Theatre and Finds New Patronage Is Drawn to His House

EDWIN O. WEINBERG is human.

And that is why the Elmwood theatre, his province of night and day activity, is vibrant, breathing warm with the spirit of fellowship.

"Ed." Weinberg is the embodiment of success. He has hit the lofty degree and is keeping there. He is THE humanizer of humanizers.

The smile that has fastened itself upon Ed. Weinberg grips his picture house in the fashionable district of the Queen City of the Lakes. His sympathetic, chatty personality glows there, too. That is why the ELMWOOD isn't merely four cold walls with a screen and an orchestra.

Mr. Weinberg one day saw that community singing had set Buffalo by the ears. The elite and the not so elite gathered in thousands in sing songs, new and old. It became the rage. Instead of the movies, it was community singing. Ed. Weinberg didn't mourn. He likes to sing himself. So community was introduced at the Elmwood, making it more attractive, more alluring than ever as an amusement place. And community singing is there yet and will be for many moons. You couldn't stop it if you tried. The bon ton wouldn't stand for it. They like to hear their own voices blended with those of others—and Ed. doesn't care. So everybody's happy.

"They tell me that you have 'em all singing out here?" half queried, half asserted the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. "It's getting to be the talk of the town."

"You bet they sing!" replied Manager Weinberg.

Just then there was a burst of about 2,500 voices. Men's baritones and basses swelled. Women's altos and sopranos blended. The song was a popular one. There was no hesitation, no embarrassment. The audience liked it, liked to lift their voices and reflect the romance and good cheer that they had just seen visualized upon the screen.

"There's your proof," chuckled Manager Weinberg. "Business is big, singing is big. Everything's big."

No Leader Is Needed

There is no leader in the Elmwood for the community singing. The bon ton has no frills when it wants to enjoy itself at the movies, and Manager Weinberg, realizing that, figured out that the best way to handle the proposition was to make it the most natural way and not a forced arrangement.

"The slide announces the song and carries the words," explained Manager Weinberg. "The orchestra plays softly and soon everybody in the house is singing or humming. It is only one of our efforts to make 'em feel at home here. When you are happy anywhere you usually hum or sing. The public is generally happiest when at the theatre. They've thrown aside their cares. Why not let them sing?"

"You see, the audience unconsciously becomes a part of the show. The pictures are over with for the first show. It's almost time for intermission. It's a good time to sing. Those waiting and those in the seats get a chance to sing. And at the close of the first show of the evening they all sing 'The Star Spangled Banner.'

Like to Entertain Themselves

"I wouldn't dare to stop singing at the Elmwood now. It is only secondary to the films and the orchestra. It is a well known fact that a man or woman is most pleased with his or her own entertaining. I'm for it."

Community singing isn't the only reason why Ed. Weinberg has made the Elmwood a leader in the film exhibiting domain.

He hasn't missed a chance to "humanize." He has gotten on a level with his patronage; sometimes making the level high enough that the audience had to look up.

"I don't believe in playing pictures below the mental level of your audiences," said Ed. "I'd rather play above than below. Let 'em shoot high. There isn't a person in the world who isn't trying to aim higher, to get ahead, to be better than he or she is. I wouldn't think of lowering a standard. The novelties introduced at the Elmwood have got to be clean and human every time."

"Heart to Heart"

"I get at my patrons heart to heart. I send out 5,000 little program folders every week. It's modest and chatty, I think. It is not stuck-up nor full of the ordinary program bunk. It tells 'em straight, minus the adjectives. And it reaches 'em. There is no dead wood in our program mailing. The mail men bring back those that are not received or where the recipients have moved away. My mailing list was obtained by patrons signing their names to a coupon on the program. They asked for it. Anything that is worth asking for gets more attention than anything that is thrust upon one. Every week in the mails they get their program. It's only a tiny thing, one that slips in a woman's vanity kit or in a man's vest jockey. But it helps.

"The Elmwood plays consistently to big houses. Why? Because the patrons feel at home. They feel that the entertainment isn't mechanical and they know that I'm doing my best to find out what they want and what they don't want."

Then Ed. darted down an aisle. The show was over. About 2,000 arose, sang "The Star Spangled Banner," and departed.

"Good Night!" thousands of cheerful voices were heard to say.

They were exchanging the community spirit with Ed., the manager who loves his work.

just as her figure faded out there appeared Red Cross nurses and stretcher bearers, giving first aid and removing the wounded soldiers from the stage. "Rose of No Man's Land" was the accompaniment for the entire prelude, which occupied three minutes. Mere verbal description gives little idea of the dramatic quality of the setting and the applause that it evoked.

During the showing of William S. Hart in "Riddle Gawne," there was a clever exterior effect used. The marquee of the Liberty is always kept attractive with the use of flowers and vines, the effect being carried through to the sidewalk below. In addition to the electric sign which reproduces the figure of the Goddess of Liberty Mr. Myrick often uses additional display on the current picture. In this case he used a large cut-out of Hart on horseback and this was studded with electric lights and then connected with the "flasher" so that there was constant attention being drawn to it.

On December 24 of each year the Liberty always remembers the young folk of the city with a free show and the past holiday was no exception. These performances are given in the morning and the mob shown in the picture bears out the statement that the house was "filled to overflowing." In addition to the free show the Liberty was able to arrange with a candy concern to provide a box of high-grade chocolate for each "kiddie." To prove that he did this Mr. Myrick sends us along one of the boxes so that we can try it ourselves—and he is right.

The bill for that day was W. S. Hart in "Border Wireless," and Fatty Arbuckle in "The Sheriff." Mr. Myrick does not believe in giving just any sort of a show because he is giving it free, but in getting the latest and the best pictures that are available.

Universal Sets High Mark After Months of Experiments with Striking Poster Designs

IN response to the demand from all sections for posters that stand out as original and compelling instead of the gaudy, meaningless paper that has been the rule for years, Universal's poster department has been spending many hundreds of dollars experimenting.

P. D. Cochrane, manager of the poster department, is exhibiting a number of specimens of the splendid results achieved, some of which are reproduced on this page.

There has been made a one sheet on "Vanity Pool," with Mary MacLaren, with the purpose of attracting attention to the star. In short, it is an "eye catcher"; it familiarizes the public with the star's features and secondarily calls attention to the play. The one sheet is so designed that the head may be cut out and used for other purposes if the exhibitor desires. Stock one sheets of this character are also made so that if necessity ever arises a strip containing the name of another picture in which the star appears may be "sniped" across the bottom of the sheet. Likewise there is a one sheet of Priscilla Dean, and is so designed as to serve a double purpose. It can be used for any Priscilla Dean attraction or cut out and mounted on any special piece of lobby or billboard display at little effort and little cost.

The three sheet on "When a Girl Loves," featuring Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, like the one sheets, also serves a double purpose. This head may be cut out of the sheet after it has been used for "When a Girl Loves" advertising and used for some other Mrs. Chaplin picture.

This poster, designed by Joe Hirt, head of Universal's large staff of poster artists, shows a new departure in poster designing. Though the head of Mrs. Chaplin is the outstanding feature of the design, the lariat which encircles her head and the small cupi in the upper left hand corner with the cowboy's sombrero suggest all that is really necessary—that the film is a Western love story.

The three sheet on "Destiny," shown as a rough sketch also, is a new creation. It presents a portrait of the star, Dorothy Phillips, in a new way and the mirror is backed with sketches showing portions of the action of the film. These sketches convey the correct impression of the drama and add meaning to the sheet as well as balance it up in an artistic way. The six sheet on "Destiny" not only is something new, but every unit of the display suggests the theme of the film play in a new, deep-rooted manner. The iron wheel is symbolic of labor and the figures pushing it give out the impression of the great struggle of man against great odds as brought out by the film. The six sheet might well be studied for many minutes, yet the impression that it has would become only the more interesting and symbolic of the theme of the film. In dark blues and greens, with a touch of ochre here and there, this six sheet stands out as a poster of the first rank and as very much of an artistic achievement.

In developing the posters on "Destiny," designs showing the two male characters about to strike each other, being prevented from so doing by the feminine lead, who in the film play is the "spark of love" that

TOOK THE TIP Biggest Jensen and von Herberg House Follows Suggestion

IN the December 7 issue we printed a Special Service Section on Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," which included suggestions that the lobby display be confined to cut-outs made from the striking paper available. Evidently this advice has been taken by the Liberty, Jensen & von Herberg's largest house in Seattle.

Cut-outs from the 24-sheet stand were mounted in three different sections. One entire panel was used for the big head of the Solomon Island savage. Palm tree decorations were sketched on the beaver board background. Above the panels in which the big cut-outs were used the Liberty employed a border of cannibals, using for this cut-outs from the 1 and 3 sheets. The especially ferocious head shown in one of the 1-sheets had a panel all to itself. From the border and around the entrances were hung tropical foliage, vines and palm leaves.

Suggestions made to exhibitors in the NEWS will be found sane and sensible and business building—not mere freak ideas of "armchair exhibitors."

builds up the strength of one man and brings realization of his greed to another, but such a picture poster would not be half so attractive as the one reproduced above.

Whenever opportunity arises Universal's poster staff creates new styles of serial posters. In advertising serials a certain number of scene posters are necessary, but it is hoped that the number to be used in the new serial, "The Red Glove," will be greatly reduced and supplanted by attractive paper of unique character. Work on the poster campaign for James J. Corbett's first Universal serial "The Midnight Man," has also been begun, and Poster Director Cochrane expects to make this advertising the most unique ever offered in connection with the release of a serial.

Live News from the Producers

Film Zones Are Now Predicted Serial Tops Pathe Program for February

Fox Exchange Manager Declares That Obsolete Booking Methods Handicap the Finer Productions

LOUIS ROSENBLUH, manager of the New York exchange of Fox Film Corporation, declares that sooner or later the country will be divided into zones and exclusive franchise rights for big features will be on a basis of 100 per cent returns from each zone.

He says it will be impossible to continue making fine features if, through obsolete booking methods, they are to be shown to only a small percentage of the theatre-patronizing population."

His plan is to show a big production simultaneously in a number of theatres on the same street or in the same section. The argument is that all the theatres benefit from the concentrated and cumulative advertising, that new patrons are created for motion pictures and that conflict with house policies is avoided. One theatre does not precede or follow another and the whole district is effectively covered with advertising.

There have been a number of tests made of the plan, all of which, according to the William Fox interests, have had most gratifying results. Last week several theatres in 116th street, Manhattan, ran "Salome" simultaneously, one of these being the Mt. Morris. The manager of this house, J. Edelstein, is quoted in a Fox statement as expressing himself thus:

"I could not have done a bigger business. My house was crowded and I am certain the wide publicity given to the picture all along the street was a help. Special features always bring in many new patrons, and I am strongly in favor of any plan that will give them the widest publicity. The more new patrons secured in a section, the better it is for every exhibitor."

During the following week this type of booking was tried out in other parts of New York State, outside the metropolis, and in New Jersey.

"It resolves itself into a matter of efficiency," according to Mr. Rosenbluh, "and it certainly isn't efficiency to book a fine feature so that you show it to only 5 or 10 per cent of the possible patrons in a given section.

"This is admittedly what happens under the old plan of giving first-run privileges to one house to the exclusion of other houses in the same town which charge the same admission price. To use the word 'run' in this connection, however, is a joke. Think of calling a three-day engagement a 'run!'"

The week of February 2 will find the Pathe program, headed by the fifth episode of Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," "The Brass Key." For ingenious invention, rapid action and surprise, this episode is held by Pathe to be "the new perfection in serials."

The comedy picture for that week is "The Rest Cure," a Rolin comedy, featuring Stan Laurel, the English comedian, at one time associated with Charlie Chaplin in the Karno Comedy Company. It is said that Hal Roach, the author-director, has furnished a high-speed laugh-creating vehicle.

Pathe Review No. 2, magazine of educational, scientific, humorous and scenic subjects, is the news reel offering. The slow motion pictures are grouped under the heading, "What the Eye Misses." In athletic sports many movements are too rapid for the eye to perceive, but by means of the ultra-rapid Novagraph camera, which in projection slows down the action to one tenth of the normal, we can compare what the eye sees to what actually takes place. The subjects are an acrobatic man dive and a diving woman.

The short Diando serial, "The Terror of the Range," featuring George Larkin and Betty Compson, shows the opening episode as "Prowlers of the Night." It is a western story of mystery, hidden perils and daring deeds.

Drews Are Pronounced Very Cosmopolitan

There has never been any couple in the motion picture world as cosmopolitan as Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, whose new two reel comedies are produced by the V. B. K. Film Corporation, of which Amedeo J. Van Beuren is president. This is the declaration of an official of Famous Players-Lasky, distributors of the new Drew Comedies.

He stated that it was no uncommon situation for Mr. and Mrs. Drew to be greeted on the public streets or in public places, by perfect strangers to them, as "Polly" as "Henry," and nothing seems to amuse or flatter them more than this.

When in New York City last Mr. Drew accompanied his versatile wife to one of the department stores and seating himself on a chair patiently waiting while "Polly" did her shopping and with thoughts farthest away from all things theatrical picturewise, a kindly lady of about six years of age, evidently from some suburban town and also engaged on a shopping trip rushed up to Mr. Drew and cried out "Henry, where is Polly?"

Y.M.C.A. Branches Support Goldwyn Picture

"TOO FAT TO FIGHT," the Rex Beach picture starring Frank McIntyre, has received unprecedented support from the executive officers and branch secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. throughout the country, according to Goldwyn exchange managers.

In addition to local co-operative campaigns, direct-mail solicitation, etc., the Y. M. C. A. ran the following editorial in the January number of "Association Men," the official organ of the "Y."

"Rex Beach's 'Too Fat to Fight,' in the January issue of The Cosmopolitan, deserves to be read as one of the best told and most humorous stories of the war. The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation filmed it. Association secretaries and friends will be interested in seeing it.

"The story is full of heart interest. If it is not booked for your city, particulars concerning it can be obtained from the Publicity Bureau of the company filming the story. Many an Association may wish to present it as a part of its own cinema program."

William Sloane, Chairman of the National War Work Council, has endorsed the picture to Rex Beach in the following manner:

"I have just spent a most delightful hour in viewing your remarkable production, 'Too Fat to Fight.'"

Universal Outlines Its Policy for 1919

Courtesy" and "Co-Operation" Are the Outstanding Features of Distributing Methods As Outlined by President Carl Laemmle—Past Year Counted a Big Success

CARL LAEMMLE, President of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, stated that only very recently an editor of international renown declared that Universal had made bigger strides in 1918 than any other film organization, and in his statement regarding the future policy of Universal President Laemmle tells why the success of his organization last year was so marked, and gives his reasons why the year 1919 is to be an even more successful twelve months for Universal and Universal film stars.

He declared that "Courtesy" and "Co-Operation" are the outstanding features of Universal's distributing policy for 1919.

Box Office Values

According to Mr. Laemmle, Universal's success during 1918 was due chiefly to the fact that only pictures with box office value, possessing original themes, pleasing stars and handled with artistry and cleverness in direction, were marketed.

Mr. Laemmle also points out the timeliness of many Universal pictures which made screen history during the year. The executive calls attention to "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," "Crashing Through Berlin," "The Geezer of Berlin," "The Winking of the Lusitania," "For Husbands Only," "The Talk of the Town," and numerous others which proved great box office assets because of their timeliness and the assistance Universal lent exhibitors in booking them.

Speaking of the features just referred to Mr. Laemmle states that in marketing them Universal realized that its success with the subjects did not end with the booking of them to exhibitors; in fact it realized that these films would not be the success they served to be unless the exhibitor received more from the exchange than just the celluloid reels.

In co-operating with exhibitors who booked the films Universal scored, Mr. Laemmle explains, Universal was confident that all of the films marketed during 1918 would "stand up well," but was not satisfied with just sales. Maintaining that co-operation and courtesy brought success, and more, and better sales, Universal's entire organization worked directly for the exhibitor.

"The best advertising men in the film industry, the best poster artists and publicity writers were obtained to make Universal's co-operative ideas possible," declared Mr. Laemmle.

"As a result hundreds of clever ideas were brought out and placed at the exhibitors' disposal, novel advertising and publicity stunts were evolved and put into press books that exhibitors all over the world might profit by them and posters that were original, compelling and attractive, in many styles and sizes made expressly for the exhibitors' use in developing the unusual pictures into record breaking attractions.

Co-operative Ideas

That Universal's co-operative ideas are good cannot be questioned. As proof of the co-operation lent by exchanges

"Blame It on the Ford," Is What the Gentleman in the Middle Says. Blame What? Ask Universal brought unthought of success to exhibitors, I refer you to several large scrap books containing thousands of clippings, letters and records showing what Universal's help amounted to," continued Mr. Laemmle.

"Having enlarged our sales organization, and established new policies at Universal City, the attention of Universal executives in 1919 will be turned to the perfecting of the physical handling of our products," Mr. Laemmle said.

"Selling an exhibitor service is a certain kind of success," but those who content themselves with just sales can never hope to succeed for any length of time. The real success of the producer and distributor depends upon three things.

"The first step toward permanent success is selling the exhibitor a film that is as good as represented; the second, getting the exhibitor his films, in good condition, in time and without hitch and third, helping the exhibitor make a success of his showings.

"Too many distributors believe their service ends with the shipment of a case of film to an exhibitor, but such is not the case. It is possible for the greatest film ever produced to be a rank failure from the box office standpoint, if not properly exploited.

"This proves that it is of utmost importance that exchangemen co-operate with the exhibitor to the fullest extent and make their sales successes for the theatremen and incidentally productive of other sales.

"Realizing that the distributor's success depends largely upon the exhibitor's success Universal has prepared to give the theatremen the 100 per cent service he is justly entitled to. We are making better productions than ever before this year. We are building up our stars by giving them better stories, better directors.

"We are creating more interest in their work, but giving interesting publicity features broad distribution in the leading newspapers and magazines of the world. The popularity of Universal stars is permanent popularity, for the public has watched them develop and knows that the players featured are not "sensations," made so by publicity, but are being starred because their work merits it.

Adding to Staffs

"Universal exchanges all over the country are adding to their regular staffs publicity and service men, who will devote all of their time to assisting exhibitors with their advertising, publicity and in bringing their shows before the public in the most forceful, effective manner possible.

"We believe that the exchangemen know more about the films they sell than the exhibitors who usually do not see them until they run them on their screens, therefore they are, in a way, in a better position to make the films successful box office magnets than the exhibitors.

"With men who will specialize in developing the box office angles of the films we distribute, in the exchanges, exhibitors will know that in booking Universal products in 1919 they will receive the utmost in service.

"The addition of publicity men to exchanges is not the only improvement Universal has made on its old system. For the past eight months Dan B. Lederman, a special systematizer with many years of exchange experience, has been installing in all Universal exchanges various new systems that will expedite the handling of films and minimize errors.

"Universal exchanges have, in the past five years, tried various systems for handling films, but a majority have proved cumbersome. The system Mr. Lederman is installing in the exchanges has not only showed wonderful improvement in our distributing and recording, but has succeeded in eliminating innumerable difficulties at a time when transportation troubles were numerous and the shipping of films, at best, a very uncertain proposition.

"All Universal exchanges are being conducted by men who know the exhibitor's side of the argument as well as the exchangemen's and theatremen will find Universal willing at all times to weigh all matters in dispute carefully before making decisions and to extend every courtesy to the exhibitor.

"To insure exhibitors this courtesy Universal managers are now being rated according to a merit system. Managers will be judged not only by their sales record."

"The Midnight Patrol" Scores

So Says Select Pictures Corporation
Which Cites Many Instances of Its Drawing Powers

GLOWING accounts of its big special attraction, "The Midnight Patrol," produced by Thomas H. Ince, are being constantly received at all branch offices, according to Select Pictures Corporation.

"The Midnight Patrol" has been booked solid over Poli's entire New England route, and in all of Poli's houses where it has already played, the public answered the call of the advertising by jamming the aisles," said a Select official.

"In New York and surrounding territory the big Thomas H. Ince production more than made good. For instance, at the Hamilton theatre, in Yonkers, the special played to packed houses for two days and a week later repeated—which was the Hamilton's first repeat this season. In the New York Majestic it played three days on the regular booking, and held over for two more, while at the Greenpoint, in Brooklyn, they had three of the biggest days in the history of the house.

"Other New York and near-by theatres where 'The Midnight Patrol' played to crowded houses are the Hamilton, three days; Regent, three days; Marcy, three days; Steinway, Astoria, three days; Japanese Garden, three days; Burland, Bronx, three days; Proctor's 125th street, four days; Mt. Morris, one day, and Fox's Comedy, Keith's Jersey City, Jefferson, Fox's New Britain, Conn.; Clinton Square, Albany, and Stanley, N. Y.," he continued enthusiastically.

"As far away from New York as Detroit, Select is receiving reports which show that 'The Midnight Patrol,' if properly exploited, is one of the best drawing cards the exhibitor can handle. One instance in particular is the success reported by Charles G. Branham, manager of the Detroit Majestic. Select's branch manager, J. O. Kent, booked 'The Midnight Patrol' for a week at the Majestic, after several other Detroit exhibitors had refused to handle it.

"The first thing Manager Branham did was to post 100 twenty-four sheets—window cards, one sheet, three sheets, etc., all over the town. Then he arranged for 12-inch newspaper advertisements with special art work, decorated his house to give it an Oriental atmosphere, and wound up by dedicating the week to Detroit's police department.

"The result was the biggest week the Detroit Majestic has known since the opening of 'The Unbeliever.'"

Unsolicited Eulogies for Polo Serial

Universal declares that unstinted praise from exhibitors is constantly being received anent the merits of Eddie Polo's latest Universal serial, "The Lure of the Circus," and that it is proving one of the greatest serial successes they have as yet recorded.

Manager Barney Rosenthal of the Universal exchange, St. Louis, last week received the following letter from Manager Kerasotes, Royal theatre, Springfield, Ill.

"The Lure of the Circus" is doing a greater business for me than any serial I ever put on. You know I play every serial, but none of them has come within a mile of reaching the popularity and sustained interest that the Polo serial has. I have the crowds standing a half block in line when this serial goes on. It can't be beat for a money maker, that's sure.

"Sincerely yours, August Kerasotes."

Manager Curly Calvert of the Omaha exchange recently received among other the following letter from the Olympia theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D.:

"I am more than pleased with the reception tendered 'The Lure of the Circus.' It is Polo's greatest effort and if you could have heard the cheers of the crowd which packed our theatre I'm sure you would be as enthusiastic about the serial as we are. 1,700 people packed our little theatre to see the first episode. Any exhibitor who wants the best money maker that has been offered this season should book this serial.

"Very sincerely yours,

"Olympia Theatre, O. C. Adams, Prop."

Chicago Theatres Showin Houdini Serial

Among the Chicago theatres that are showing B. A. Rolfe's Productions' serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, and distributed by Octagon Film are: Gold, Douglas, Palace Opera House, Covent Garden, Knickerbocker, Rosetti, Wilson, Thalia, Boston, Alvin, Monogram, Oak Park, Star, Bowen, Biograph, Olympia, Michigan, California, Keozie, Lincoln Hippodrome, Pershing, Halsted, West End, Kedzie Annex, Hub, Lowy's and Annet.

Some of the larger theatres in other territories in the territory booked by the Celebrated Players who have contracted to play the serial are the New Grand, Evansville, Ind.; Crystal theatre, Joliet, Ill.; Villa theatre, Wilmette, Ill.; Palace theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind.; Temple, Elgin, Ill.; Auditorium, South Bend, Ind., and the Marion theatre, Marion, Ind.

C. J. Brabin Discusses the Art of Directing

IN a discussion of picture successes recently, Charles J. Brabin, who directed "The Raven" and numerous other notable screen plays, and now is engaged in the direction of Evelyn Nesbit in William Fox Standard Pictures, has taken up the cudgels for "the story."

"With the art and technique of photoplay production as they are today, there is only one factor which can keep every picture from being a financial and entertainment success," declared Mr. Brabin. "That is lack of story. To my mind, a good story is good whether it be told between the covers of a book or upon the screen.

"It doesn't make a particle of difference whether a picture has the war or incidents of the war as its base—if it has a strong story it will be successful. This has been demonstrated recently by a 100 per cent war picture. It is all war, but the underlying theme and the lateral incidents which go to make up the story are powerful, and the picture has appealed to the hearts and the minds of the public.

"Screen productions, in a way, are like literature; or, rather, they are capable of being made so. The strong stories of the strong writers such as Dumas, Hugo, Dickens, Ibsen, Poe, Washington Irving, and scores of others of various lands, live on and on. They are part of every person's education. They survive because they are good. They have plot, romance, human interest and heart interest. They hold strong character delineations.

"These same elements should be contained in a photoplay. Where they are, the picture pleases and becomes permanent. Where they are not, the picture is given the odious appellation of 'movie.'

"This, by the way, is an ungracious nickname for what now is admitted to be a great art—a nickname which will pass out of use if the pictures are made to live up to the standards to which they are entitled."

Missouri Is Prosperous

S. J. Baker, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange at St. Louis reports that after a two weeks' tour of rural communities he is satisfied that the exhibitors in rural Missouri are enjoying unprecedented success.

"With the boys coming home; with the influenza epidemic departing for parts unknown, and with ideal weather, the exhibitors are doing big business."

Ralph Ince Drama Is Now Available

"The Eleventh Commandment," written and produced by Ralph Ince, is now available at all Exhibitors' Mutual exchange and is described as a remarkably sensational and heart gripping drama.

Lucille Lee Stewart is the star and Exhibitors' Mutual has issued a special exploitation book on this release.

The theme of the play is written on supposition that "besides the Ten Commandments of the Decalogue, there are another, unwritten, an eleventh, which every woman knows: 'Thou Shalt Marry None But the Man Thou Lovest'—to disobey which is often to open wide the door to infelicity and even tragedy.

Frank E. Woods Busy Man on West Coast

Selected as organizer of Motion Picture Aid and Protective Association, which is said to have the backing of all who were interested and worked for the Motion Picture War Service Association, Frank E. Woods, of Paramount, is said to be counted as one of the busiest men around Los Angeles.

He has been for more than a year and a half supervising director of the Paramount pictures made at the Famous Players-Lasky studios at Hollywood, and is said to be one of the most interesting and capable men in the picture industry.

Mr. Woods was for four and a half years with Mr. David W. Griffith, starting at the Biograph and going with him to the Reliance-Majestic concern, and later to the Fine-Arts-Triangle, which was then in the zenith of its success.

During most of this time Mr. Woods was manager of Productions.

Capitol Film Opens Six Branches

Capitol Film Company, Indianapolis, announces that it has at the present time six exchanges in active operation and within a short time expects to have twenty-six branches throughout the country. Ike Schlank, president, has sent his general manager, J. E. Willis, to look after the eastern end of Capitol's business, and Isidore Schlank, his brother, to superintend the branch offices opening in the West and Middle West.

Beginning February 3, Mr. Schlank announces that there will be two two-reel subjects released, and following these there will be five of the same length subjects. Five one-reel comedies are also scheduled to appear on the Capitol list of releases. The list of releases includes "The Storm," "Vengeance of Hate," "Escaped Convict," "The Outlaw's Sacrifice," "Baffled Society," "A Square Gambler," and "Faithful Unto Death."

Schlesinger Back in New York

After Six Months' Sales Trip, Leon Schlesinger Returns with Some Real Live News

Leon Schlesinger, "Manx-Man" special representative for Inter-Ocean Film Co.

LEON SCHLESINGER, special representative of The Manx-Man Company, has returned to New York from a six months' trip through the mid-west states in the interest of "The Manx-Man." Mr. Schlesinger made some valuable observations and in the following interview he tells the NEWS readers the pertinent angles, among them the effect of the epidemic on the theatre.

"The worst case of close-down that I encountered in my travels was at Macomb, Illinois, where the local exhibitors had to put the shutters up for fourteen weeks. Very luckily I had by picture in just the week preceding the first of the 'flu' period. But a lot of communities recognized that fear was a friend of the epidemic and that diversion of thought was a prophylaxis.

"I was gratified to learn on my return to Manhattan that the exhibitors had not been compelled to close at any stage of the sickness, and that no community has had a better health record than New York. Exhibitors were very blue, during the last stages of my trip, over the prospects of the admission tax being doubled. Now that this has been settled for the best, I am sure that many of them who were afraid to sign up for the expensive features will feel differently. The exchanges handling big pictures should feel this new optimistic spirit speedily.

"My observations in dry territories through which I passed convinced me that in prohibition, too, the picture business will be benefited. The majority of exhibitors in those territories would not have 'booze' back for anything. And when the whole country becomes dry I do not see why the national exhibitor will not have that feeling.

"A great mistake was made by the producers and exchanges in neglecting to advertise in the trade papers during the close-down period. Exhibitors who were often too busy to digest the contents of the trade journals properly in ordinary times, read them from cover to cover—first line to last—when they were compelled to stop their activities. It gave them a fine chance to get a line on the market and many of them were surprised that the manufacturers and exchanges did not take advantage of this. I was glad to see the leading theatres in affected districts keep up their advertising in the local papers, although it was not devoted to any especial attraction and usually the size of the copy was cut."

Mr. Schlesinger said that the story that the NEWS printed in September about his "hopping a freight" when he missed a passenger train at North Judson, Indiana, was "substantially true as printed." Mr. Schlesinger came to New York for a conference with "Manx-Man" sales director, J. L. Kempner. As this paper told at the time of his departure, Mr. Schlesinger's mission was to meet exhibitors face to face with exploitation plans on the Manx-Man. In his work he was extended every facility by the Goldwyn exchanges, who have charge of the distribution of the picture. He visited Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Fort Wayne, Du Bois, Springfield and eighty of the principal cities and towns in Northern Indiana, Southern Iowa, Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin and secured dates for his attraction in every one of them.

Gladys Leslie Halts Personal Appearances

GLADYS LESLIE'S ability in making her diametrically opposite roles in "The Beloved Impostor" convincing, has, it is said, implanted a strong desire in the minds of her screen admirers to view her personally and many exhibitors who ran this feature were besieged by their patrons to arrange for a personal appearance of Miss Leslie at their theatres.

So the tiny Vitagraph star has been working overtime penning declinations to the many invitations. Much as she would like the experience of meeting all her friends, the demands upon her energy made by Vitagraph production plans make plenty of rest absolutely necessary and personal appearances, therefore, must cease.

"The Beloved Impostor" is from the pen of Mrs. Elizabeth J. Mariani, and was directed by Joseph Gleason. Huntley

Gordon, Denton Vane, Miriam Miles, Mrs. Hurley, Frances Grant and Gwen Williams are prominent in Miss Leslie's support.

"The unique talent of little Gladys Leslie, the Vitagraph star, of being able to appear, in the same picture, as a twelve-year-old girl and a woman old enough to capture the heart of a mature man of the world is perhaps partially responsible for the success of her latest Vitagraph feature," declared a Vitagraph official.

"Miss Leslie has been with Vitagraph just one year, and it would appear that she is the sort that grows upon her admirers. A glance at the Leslie booking-sheet discloses that business on each succeeding Gladys Leslie release has shown a decided increase over its predecessor, the final report on 'The Beloved Impostor' showing an enormous increase of business.

New Automatic Ticket Seller

Recently Perfected Automatic Register Pronounced Last Word in Ticket Selling Machines

WHEN the most prominent motion picture circuits in the country install a new invention, E. S. Bowman, secretary and general sales manager of The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, considers that the recently perfected "Automatic Register" represents the finished product, and the last word in ticket selling machines.

Marcus Loew's recently erected Metropolitan theatre at Brooklyn has installed the new invention and so has Harry M. Crandall circuit of theatres at Washington, D. C. The former machine manufactured by this same company is installed in the Rialto, Rivoli, and in fact the leading theatres throughout the country, according to Mr. Bowman, and the new invention is expected to be even more fully represented, as two hundred unfilled orders are reported to be now on file.

The Strand in New York City received the first newly perfected Automatic Register and the engineers who perfected the machine are Goss, Bryce and Johnson, who also do the designing for Remington Arms Company and other internationally known concerns. They pronounce the newly invented Automatic Register as the absolute and final standard in ticket selling and accurate registering.

While the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company prints the tickets used for the new machine, the exhibitors are at perfect liberty to have their tickets printed anywhere they desire.

"We have found, however," said Mr. Bowman, "that our company, in printing so great a quantity at a time, is able to furnish these tickets a great deal cheaper than any printer, who is supplying just a few exhibitors."

The newly perfected machine has only been out thirty days and is described as a mechanical marvel. Explanatory literature, profusely illustrated, which thoroughly describes the simple manipulations of the newly invented Automatic Register, are on hand at the company's offices at 1733 Broadway, New York City, and will be mailed to exhibitors upon request.

It sells from one to five tickets at a time and issues a different price and color ticket for each price of admission while at the same time permitting the cashier to give full attention to making change.

The new machine permits a thorough registration without using numbers on the tickets. This prevents competing exhibitors from checking up on the business done by their opposition, which is often said to be done where tickets are numbered.

Goldwyn Drive on Ford Weekly

Sales Organization Determined to Close Contracts with One or Two Thousand Additional Exhibitors Within Week

FORD Educational Weekly will be placed into two thousand of the smaller towns in a single week if the intensive drive of the Goldwyn sales force is successful.

This campaign is in keeping with the wishes of Henry Ford, whose ideas concerning picture distribution are consonant with his own remarkable success as America's greatest merchant-manufacturer.

In a brief but dramatic sales campaign, that began the day after Thanksgiving, it is announced that Goldwyn booked several thousand contract customers for the Ford Educational Weekly prior to the first release of this attraction under Goldwyn auspices on January 12.

The larger portion of this business at the outset began at the top, assuring in the beginning the big first-run accounts, then the neighborhood or second-run houses in every community.

With this accomplished a big war map of the United States took its place in the selling mechanism of Goldwyn as applied to the marketing of the Weekly, and the campaign now under full headway calls for the placing of contracts in every county in all the States and Territories of the Union in which there is a motion picture theatre.

Simultaneously sales effort is being directed toward placing the weekly with every grange or farmers' organization in the United States, as well as with fraternal and lodge organizations and churches in little communities.

The Ford Educational Weekly is described as more than a mere portrayer of interesting events and achievements in the life of the nation. It is said to be a university of the human eye; a great school brought to the home towns of the whole population of the country.

"It exerts a greater entertainment and educational influence than any other one attraction of the screen, because it possesses the greatest weekly circulation," said a Goldwyn official. "Its gross results are recorded in terms of 'circulation,' and the word is used in the same sense as newspapers use it to denote the average daily number of copies printed and sold. Its motto, like that of newspapers, is: 'Nothing succeeds like circulation.'"

"Great insistence is laid upon representation and showings in the small towns because such points are farther removed from the great educational institutions located more nearly adjacent to the centers of population."

"Easy Payments" Not Easy

The plan of "a-dollar-down-and-a-dollar-a-week," with its attendant difficulties, is the basis of "Easy Payments," a Strand comedy starring Elinor Field, released January 26 through Exhibitors' Mutual exchanges, and it shows that the payments are not always so easy.

Field Changes Announced by Exhibitors' Mutual

Announcements have been made by S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation, of many appointments in the field.

R. C. Herman, formerly with Mutual in Omaha, and with Universal in Milwaukee has been appointed branch manager at Oklahoma City.

L. L. Pennybaker, branch manager Oklahoma City, has been transferred to the managership of the Kansas City branch.

H. L. Conway, a salesman for Select in Milwaukee, has been appointed branch manager at Indianapolis, vice Isaac Belmont, who had been acting branch manager and who returns to the road.

Fred G. Sliter, formerly branch manager for the Mutual at Albany, and later at New York City, who resigned to become film commissioner to Mexico for the Committee on Public Information, has been appointed special salesman and assigned to the Pittsburgh territory.

Keeney's Late Picture Released February 3

Frank A. Keeney's latest production "Marriage for Convenience," starring Catherine Calvert, will be released through the William L. Sherry Service in New York, Northern New Jersey and Western Connecticut and in other domestic territory by the General Film Company. The release date is set for February 3. The picture is in five reels and was adapted from a story by E. Lloyd Sheldon by Benet Musson.

Barnett Opens Offices

The Star Feature Film Service, controlled by Bert Barnett, distributors of A. Rolfe's serial, "The Master Mystery" starring Houdini, in Ohio and Kentucky has established offices in Rooms 510-5 Sloan Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

Walter Law, the Detective in "The Thirteenth Chair." Acme Pictures Feature

"Lion and the Mouse" Soon Available

"The Lion and the Mouse," featuring Alice Joyce, will be released February 24, and Vitagraph announces that a private view of the film just before it entered into its final stage indicates that it is a super feature.

Tom Terriss directed "The Lion and the Mouse," the whole production being under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company.

All that Vitagraph has put into the making of "The Lion and the Mouse" is considered worthy of the subject, for it is said to rank as one of the few outstanding dramatic successes that has endured for a period of years while other plays in great number have come and gone and been forgotten.

Blackton at Symphony

J. Stuart Blackton, Herbert Rawlinson and Lawrence Grossmith appeared in person at the Symphony theatre in New York City one night while "The Common Cause," released by Vitagraph, was being shown.

M. Kashin, managing director of the Symphony theatre, reports that the picture went over splendidly with the audiences, stating that it played to some of the biggest business in the history of the house. The Seventy-seventh Street theatre, on Broadway, following the success of "The Common Cause" at the Symphony theatre, booked the picture for January 27, 28 and 29.

Says Director Introduces Very Novel Idea

Goldwyn says that Hobert Henley, who directed their first Pauline Frederick picture, "The Woman on the Index," has inserted a very novel idea into the picture. It occurs when Miss Frederick as Sylvia Martin is telling another character the great changes which have occurred in her life since they last met.

Walter Law Portrays Detective

Former Screen Villain Plays Lead in Leonce Perret's Screen Version of "The Thirteenth Chair"

WHEN Leonce Perret wanted a leading man to portray the detective in his screen version of "The Thirteenth Chair," from Bayard Veiller's stage success of the same name, he selected Walter Law, the all-around bad man and villain in so many of the Theda Bara and William Farnum productions.

Ever since his entry into the realm of motion pictures, which dates back some six or seven years, Mr. Law, who is a striking specimen of physical and mental manhood, has been fated to appear in films, with but few exceptions, in the unsympathetic roles of villain of more or less despicability.

His "shadow," as Mr. Law's negro valet has come to be known, has perhaps most tritely and uniquely paraphrased Mr. Law's screen activities by boasting referring to his employer as the "Fighting Fool," which in the vernacular of local Africa is considerable compliment.

In the "Thirteenth Chair," however, this paraphrase would not fit. On the contrary, it is said, the former "Fighting Fool" enacts the role of a detective in a manner which is perhaps new to the screen and which should earn new honors for the one time screen bully and wife-beater, as an actor of broad conception and varied virile interpretation, and not an actor of the "one-part" variety.

Mr. Law's interpretation of Donohue, the detective, is declared to be far superior to the old third-degreeing, bullish screen interpretation of the detective and will undoubtedly bring about the demise of this latter type of screen characterization. In the "Thirteenth Chair" the character Donohue is first introduced as a domestic home-loving individual and the father of a family—a real human being, with whom the detection and prevention of crime has become a profession, which is true of the police officials of this city and every city in this country.

During the legitimate stage presentation of "The Thirteenth Chair" at the Forty-eighth Street theatre last season, Bayard Veiller, the author, received grateful acknowledgement from the then Police Commissioner of New York City, Arthur Woods, for having placed before the public the first true characterization of the detective.

Mr. Law's contribution to the motion picture presentation of "The Thirteenth Chair" has been highly praised by Director Leonce Perret and a number of the executives of the Acme Pictures Corporation, the producers, who witnessed Mr. Law's acting in the studio.

Says "Cannibal" Pictures Register Heavily

FROM the Rivoli theatre in New York to Grauman's in Los Angeles and from the Hippodrome in Fort Worth to the Orpheum in Sault Ste Marie, the Exhibitors Mutual branch managers assert that Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" is registering heavily and breaking house records.

Every day is said to bring new reports of triumph into the New York headquarters of the Exhibitors Mutual. Exhibitors as well as the theatre-going public are said to be enthusing over the production, which from novelty, thrills and education is declared to have never been equalled by any attraction of this type.

The drawing power of the films is said to be best evidenced by a report from little Independence, Kansas, where in two days more than $1,100 was taken in at the box office.

Assistant General Manager A. S. Kirkpatrick, of the Exhibitors Mutual, said he had never handled such a live wire proposition as the "Cannibals" is proving. In a statement he said:

"Martin Johnson's 'Cannibals' are figuratively running wild throughout the country.

"From every section reports are pouring in to us, telling of the remarkable success which is greeting the thrilling adventure films.

"House records are being swept aside everywhere, and the intense interest shown by the public in 'Cannibals of the South Seas,' to snap which Martin Johnson and his little wife risked their lives, is even second to the eagerness exhibitors are manifesting to book the two episode thriller."

Priscilla Dean Going Big, Says Universal

THAT Priscilla Dean is rapidly becoming one of America's favorite motion picture stars is considered evident by Universal, and officials declare that they base their conclusions from the great number of letters received by Universal exchange managers daily relating of the success of her latest releases, "She Hired a Husband" and "The Wild Cat of Paris."

Manager I. L. Lesserman of the Universal exchange, Chicago, has reported an increase of over 70 per cent in bookings of Priscilla Dean pictures during the past two months, and from California and Washington come reports that Miss Dean is becoming very popular with exhibitors and fans, "The Wild Cat of Paris" being greeted with great enthusiasm.

In Atlanta recently "The Wild Cat of Paris" is said to have played to overflow crowds at the Tudor theatre, and in St. Louis, Herman Overstolz, manager of the Royal theatre, maintains that "The Wild Cat of Paris" ran second to the "Kaiser, Beast of Berlin" only, as a box office attraction. In a letter to the St. Louis Universal exchange, Mr. Overstolz explains his success with the latest Priscilla Dean attraction:

"The Wild Cat of Paris" which ran for a week at the Royal theatre, in so far as receipts and crowds go, ran a close second to 'The Kaiser' which smashed all records. However, let me add that the opening day's receipts on 'The Wild Cat' would have equalled if not passed the high mark of the 'Kaiser' picture had the admission prices been the same.

"But for the fact that I had another picture booked in advance I would have continued 'The Wild Cat' engagement another week. And I am positive it would have stood up, as the interest kept on increasing, which was plainly in evidence the last day I ran the picture, the crowds standing in line as they did on the opening day."

Truly yours,

HERMAN OVERSTOLZ, Royal Theatre.

Two Dalrymple Stories Are Purchased

Robertson-Cole Company has obtained the rights to two more of the best known stories of Leona Dalrymple, whose $10,000 prize novel, "Diana of the Green Van," is now being produced by the Winsome Stars Corporation, with Alma Rubens portraying Diana.

"The Heart of the Pines" and "White Rose," stories which in every way measure up to the standard set by Miss Dalrymple with "Diana," are the literary works which the Robertson-Cole organization purchased.

"Diana of the Green Van" will be an Exhibitors Mutual release. Alma Rubens was accorded the leading role.

"Heart of Humanity" for Chicago

The latest Jewel production, "The Heart of Humanity," opens in February at four Chicago theatres during the same week, and this is declared to be a record for first run of any photoplay in Chicago. A feature has been given as many as three simultaneous first runs in Chicago previously but never before has any film, especially of the magnitude of "The Heart of Humanity" ever been shown in four theatres at once, says Universal.

The Pantheon, the Casino, Twentieth Century and West End theatres have all contracted to run the feature at the same time.

Gaumont Company Completes Photo-Novels

Gaumont Company announces the completion of a two-reel subject which it terms a photo-novelty because of the unusual production which has been given it. More than two months were spent in production. The picture is titled "Satan on Earth," and tells a story of a man's progress and civilization to the present time.

The Gaumont Company claims that "Satan on Earth" may properly be called a "feature." It will be a revelation to theatregoers, as illustrating just how much interest can be crowded into two reels of film.

Bessie Love Beats High Cost of Living

In "The Enchanted Barn," a recent release, Vitagraph claims that in addition to providing most excellent entertainment should serve as an object lesson in contentment, for it shows that with ingenuity even the most unpromising material has possibilities.

"The Enchanted Barn" is from the popular novel of the same title by Grace Livingston H. Lutz. David Smith directed the production, and Vitagraph says that it gives promise of exceeding the success scored by Bessie Love in her first Vitagraph picture, "The Dawn of Understanding."

"Once to Every Man," Is State Righted

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, president, Frohman Amusement Company, will place his latest production, "Once to Every Man," a screen version of Larry Evans' work of the same title, on the independent market and announces that an intensive exploitation campaign will be opened in its interest. The publicity campaign will extend to the theatres as well as the independent buyers.

Mr. Sherrill believes that "Once to Every Man" will be in greater demand than any of his former successes, and in view of this belief, he states that he has set aside a larger amount of money for exploitation that he has expended on any other attraction. A press book is now in preparation which will contain colored miniatures of the lithographs and slides and vest pocket duplicates of the lobby display photos.

In order to establish permanent contractual relationship with responsible state right buyers on all of the future releases of that company Mr. Sherrill has determined upon the policy of first offering to the state right buyers who secure the production "Once to Every Man" all of the future releases of The Frohman Amusement Corporation avoiding sales to different exchanges.

"The idea of this," said Mr. Sherrill, "is not so much to create a preference for any certain exchanges as it is to confine our business dealings with one exchange in each territory without awarding a permanent franchise, just so long as each exchange maintains its standing. This of course will permit of our making greater concessions than if we were to scatter our business connections on each release. We feel that the exchange will appreciate that they can depend upon at least one independent concern for all of its productions and our enlarged policy which provides for the production of two reel western dramas together with special features should place the independent exchanges in a position where it may depend upon a minimum number of releases during the year."

New Advertising Campaign a Big Success

THE results of the new national educational campaign which Pathe inaugurated on the exploitation of Pearl White's new serial, "The Lightning Raider," have exceeded all our hopes," reports Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. "We expected to accumulate a considerable amount of business," he continues in his report, "but the results have far exceeded our fondest wishes."

"We have just completed a canvass of all sections of the country through our branches to ascertain the quantity of new serial business that was directly traceable to our campaign and it has been most satisfying. The reports from our branches pay a direct tribute to the method of 'consumer advertising' we have instituted. By means of our extensive poster campaign we have undoubtedly created a vast new army of serial fans, for our branches report that all over the country theatres that have hitherto shunned serials, advancing all of the old arguments against them, are now playing 'The Lightning Raider' and in not one instance has there been any sentiment other than complete satisfaction at the business expressed."

"Our New York branch reports 16 theatres won over to the serial idea and are now playing Miss White's new serial to capacity business.

"Whatever argument these exhibitors may have advanced against serials in the past I am sure they have completely changed their minds by this time. For Pearl White serials insure capacity."

Regards Serials Now as Box Office Asset

Manager John Burke of the Electric theatre, Independence, Mo., has come forward with the admission that his ideas regarding serials as box office assets has been changed during recent months by the success of his experiments with the continued films.

In a letter to Manager Barney Rosenthal of the Kansas City Universal exchange recently, Mr. Burke had the following to say:

"As you have often asked what I think of serials, I think my experience in serials will give you a fair idea of what I think. The facts follow:

"Prior to March 25, 1917, my experience in theatre business was as a spectator only. On above date I bought the theatre of which I am now owner, and started out to get my experience. My predecessor had run this theatre 4½ years and informed me that serials did not pay, so I was a hard one to handle on serials. I decided to book Eddie Polo in 'The Bull's Eye,' which I did in February, 1918.

"I believe then, and believe now more than ever that the best way to start a serial is to be short with the public—that is let your patrons be your best advertisements, viz., advertise plenty without spending a fortune. My way is to advertise in my daily paper, and give a big free show to my patrons matinee and night the day I start my serial.

"Does it pay? Listen: Before I started serials, Monday was my poorest day in the week, not making expenses, but from the second episode of 'The Bull's Eye' my business increased from $40 to $45 each Monday, so I say it pays.

"Serials if properly started make the exhibitors more money than any other pictures he can run. Further, I will say this, if an exhibitor is too lazy to push his business every day in the year, then he need not expect serials or anything else to pull for long.

"Thanking you for the interest the Universal has always shown in the exhibitors' welfare, I am, sincerely yours,

JOHN BURKE,

Mgr. Electric Theatre, Independence, Mo.

Star Laughs and Lies

In "The Prodigal Liar," which Jesse D. Kampton produced for release through Exhibitors Mutual exchanges, the story is by George Elwood Jenks, and it is stated that William Desmond virtually laughs his way through the film, principally at the expense of Hope, played by Betty Compton, but in the denouement suffers the fate of all manhandlers of the truth.

The atmosphere of the West abounds in "The Prodigal Liar," but the sordidness of many tales of "God's Country" is said to be totally missing.

Says Demand for High Grade Bill Posting

WALTER E. GREENE, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, believes that there is at this particular time a demand for high-grade bill posting and therefore announces that an exceptional line of paper has been prepared for the February Paramount and Arcraft releases.

It is asserted that many exhibitors who never before used more than an average amount of billboard advertising, are doubling and trebling their orders, because they have learned that their public has received a broad education in reading and following the impulse conveyed to it through the many types of billboard propaganda that has flooded the country for the past two years.

"There will be seen exceptionally striking designs, as well as variety, in our February 9, Marguerite Clark, in a picturization of that famous and lovely story, 'Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch,' there will also be a twenty-four sheet that exhibitors should post on every one of their twenty-four sheet stands. 'The Two Brides,' a Paramount picture, features Lina Cavalieri, released on February 9, and 'Paid in Full,' featuring Pauline Frederick, may also be advertised with twenty-four sheets, as well as the other paper mentioned."

Roosevelt Picture Rentals Are Discussed

ANENT the proposition of first showing a picture at advanced rates through the various legitimate houses throughout the country, Frederick L. Collins, head of the McClure publishing and motion picture interests, who produced the Roosevelt picture, declared as follows:

"During the past ten days a great deal of influence has been brought to bear to get us to delay the exhibition of 'The Fighting Roosevelts' in motion picture theatres, in order to take advantage of a very large cash offer for the right to show the production first in legitimate houses at $2 top. It is not fair to claim that I have not given consideration to these offers, as their size and the sources from which they came made a very thorough consideration inevitable.

"I even took the matter up with the officials of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit while that body was in session in Los Angeles, forwarding to them the suggestion that the picture be shown first in the legitimate houses and later at the picture theatres, in accordance with my contract with them. The price which the Circuit set upon this privilege of a pre-release showing was so large—running into six figures—and demands of individual exhibitors for the immediate release of the picture were so insistent, that I finally decided, at considerable financial sacrifice to myself, to give the picture immediately to the exhibitors.

"Having made this decision in favor of the motion picture exhibitors as against the legitimate houses, it is not my purpose to insist on penalizing the exhibitors by excessive rentals because of the extreme timeliness of the picture.

"It has been our idea from the first that the rental price paid by the exhibitor for the Gerard picture, on which nearly all exhibitors made a very large profit, constituted a fair schedule for the Roosevelt picture, and generally speaking, it is still our idea to adhere to this schedule."

Promises Real Surprise

Through his new Paramount comedy, "Love," some real surprises will be shown by "Fatty" Arbuckle, it is announced. It is released February 16, and there is said to be an automobile driven by "Fatty" while en route to the old farm to see his girl with whom he is so deeply in love that he has no room for other thoughts.

The machine is said to be one of the wonders of the age.

How Peace in Europe Was Won

"Made in America" Is Heralded as Showing How Autocracy Crumbled and America Achieved the Impossible

THE scenario of "Made in America" was furnished by the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information, and it will be preserved in the Government Archives at Washington with the official records of America's part in the great war.

"Made in America" will be released one reel each week, and is described as a patriotic dramatic story with an excellent cast furnishing continuity for the series. It features three typical American boys against the wonderful background of camp life here and abroad and American heroism on the battlefields of France.

It is published and distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through Pathe Exchange, Inc., and will be released Sunday, February 16.

"It is generally agreed that one of the greatest achievements of this nation during the world war was the transformation of the peaceful populace into a trained army. The German military authorities sneered at the idea, and many of our own people as well as the Allies were sceptical," declared a prominent official.

"Yet in a little over a year after the United States entered the war, she had four million men under arms, more than two million in Europe and the rest in the great training camps in this country.

"How great the effect upon the resistance of the Central Powers this wonderful achievement may have had can only be surmised, but that their military power began to crumble as America's armies began to pour into France is now historic fact.

"For the first time, the story of the making of the armies of liberty has been pictorialized in its completeness. "Made in America" in eight one-reel episodes, follows the career of the American soldier from the time of the first draft until he returned to his native heath, crowned with the laurels of victory.

"It is a glorious story, told with a wealth of detail and with authority, for Ashley Miller, the producer and director, has had the cooperation of the Government in every step of its production. The camp scenes, with which its episodes abound, were taken in one of the great army cantonments.

"Heart of Humanity" Pleases Ohio Censors

REPORTS come from Cleveland offices of Universal that the Ohio State Film Censorship Committee, which they declare is considered one of the most critical and severe in the entire country, viewed "The Heart of Humanity" at a private showing given by E. J. Smith, manager of the Cleveland Universal exchange, January 24, and passed the film without a correction or omission.

Manager Smith displayed the big Jewel drama before several hundred exhibitors, city and state officials and Red Cross executives, at the Winton Hotel, and the film was declared to have been enthusiastically received. The Red Cross executives were reported to be so enthused over it that they sent out a notice calling attention to the showing of the film at the Stillman theatre, to every member of Cleveland units.

So great was the interest said to be in "The Heart of Humanity" January 26, when the film began an indefinite run at the theatre, that Manager Kuhn arranged to show the film three times each evening.

His evening performances for the first week commenced at six, eight and ten o'clock. It was originally arranged to screen the film once in the afternoon and twice in the evening.

Robertson Resumes Direction of Marguerite Clark

John Robertson, who has been ill with influenza, returned to Famous Players-Lasky Fifty-sixth street studio last week and took up the work of completing Marguerite Clark's latest Paramount picture, "A Honeymoon for Three." Due to Mr. Robertson's illness Hugh Ford started the production.

Miss Clark's Paramount release for February 9, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," was completed recently under the direction of Mr. Ford. This is an adaptation from Alice Regan Rice's story of the same title, the original stage production of which was staged by Mr. Ford. Eve Unsell did the scenario. In "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" Miss Clark is supported by Gareth Hughes; Mary Carr, as Mrs. Wiggs; Vivian Ogden, Gladys Valerie, Jack MacLean and Robert Milasch.

Two Comedies Completed in Florida

At the Klutho studios in Jacksonville, Florida, the Town and Country Film Company, producing Montgomery Flagg two-reel comedies for Famous Players-Lasky distribution, has just completed two comedies.

The players were in Jacksonville several weeks and used the Klutho artificially lighted studio by which, it is said, one two-reel comedy was produced in less than a week.

They consider this quite a remarkable accomplishment in so short a period of time.

Star Assembles Cattle

Louis Bennisson, for his next starring vehicle produced by Betzwood studios, is said to have proved his true Western capabilities by assembling the immense herds of cattle needed. "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar U" is the name of the feature and it will be distributed through the Goldwyn exchanges.

World Thinks Florida Is Ideal for Producing

World Pictures believes that the number of companies producing pictures in Florida almost equals those now operating in California, and that the necessity for semi-tropical climate has always made the Far West desirable to many of the producers even though there was the natural disadvantage in being so far from the base of distribution.

It is for this reason that World Pictures did not listen to the lure of California. It felt that if it became necessary to have southern climate then Florida being only thirty hours away offered a solution to the problem.

At the present time World has at work in and around St. Augustine all of its stars including Montagu Love, Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, not forgetting Johnnie Hines, Jack Drummer and a score more. Dell Henderson is directing the making of the picture which will bear the title of "The Price of Doubt." It will be released by the World in the spring.

Big California Circuit Contracts Pathe

Turner and Dahnken's Circuit of California theatres has signed contracts booking all of the Pathe Extra Selected Star Photoplays, which feature Fannie Ward, Frank Keenan, Bessie Love and Bryant Washburn, according to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe. "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, is said to have proved a record-breaking success in all parts of the country, and is included in the Turner and Dahnken booking.

Fannie Ward, in "The Narrow Path," based on A. H. Woods' Broadway success, will be seen as the first of the Extra Selected, followed by "The Midnight Stage," with Frank Keenan, a production, which he considers one of the most perfect of either his stage or screen experiences. Then follows "Todd of the Times," in which Mr. Keenan also stars.

Pathe Exploits "Common Clay"

Intensive Campaign for A. H. Woods' Seven-Act Screen Presentation of Cleves Kinkead's Play

DIRECTED by George Fitzmaurice from the scenario of Ouida Bergere and produced by the Astra Film Corporation, "Common Clay," A. H. Woods' screen presentation in seven reels, of Cleves Kinkead's play of the same name, starring Fannie Ward, will receive intensive exploitation by Pathe, according to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager.

Mr. Brunet feels sure that this Harvard prize play, which ran in New York for a full year, will prove a phenomenal screen attraction. Six companies made it known throughout the United States and Canada; it played to crowded houses for five months in Chicago; in Boston eighteen weeks; in Philadelphia a month.

Every city of 10,000 population and upward has seen the play, and the Dominion of Canada was just as fully covered.

The cast, specially selected to meet, in the smallest detail, the characters of the play include Easter Walters, Mary Alden, Helen Dunbar, W. E. Lawrence, Fred Goodwins, Andrew Arbuckle, John H. Cossar and John Barrows. It is declared to be as capable and well balanced a cast as could be grouped for any screen production.

It took five months to write the play, which won what is known as the Harvard prize. The play was written in Professor Baker's course on playwriting. The manuscript was begun in February, 1914, and the play was produced at the Castle Square theatre, Boston, the next January, running in Boston for about five months before A. H. Woods undertook to bring it into Broadway.

Mr. Kinkead's theme is man's injustice toward erring women. Ellen Neal is a mere girl, who frequents a low dance hall to get away from sordid conditions at home, and is beguiled by a young profligate. Ellen is brought to a realization of her wrong by a night in jail, following a raid, and seeks honest employment in the Fullerton home. There she is confronted by the profligate, who informs the son of the house of her past.

He nevertheless makes love to the girl and is not repulsed. Less than a year later the elder Fullerton is forced to call upon his lawyer, Judge Filson, to help him hush up a scandal. His son is the father of Ellen's child.

The chief witness against the girl is the profligate. In the police trial it develops that Ellen Neal is Judge Filson's own child, who was supposed by him to have died when the mother committed suicide to save Filson from disgrace early in his career.

Goldwyn Praises Cast in "The Border Legion"

Released as a special by Goldwyn, "The Border Legion," a picturization of Zane Grey's famous novel, starring Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth, is declared to have a cast rarely equaled in screen history.

Blanche Bates, one of the most famous of David Belasco's feminine stars, is said to have a role in her first motion picture appearance as forceful and thrilling as the character she portrayed in "The Girl of the Golden West."

Hobart Bosworth, one time leading man for stage stars and long a favorite picture player, has a powerful role in "The Border Legion."

Eugene Strong, Russell Simpson and Henry Morgan also have prominent parts in "The Border Legion."

Tarzan Reported Big

According to S. A. Hayman of Grand Island, Nebraska, "Tarzan of the Apes," followed by "A Dog's Life," smashed the after-effects of the influenza epidemic.

"I had crowds out in front all the time," says Exhibitor Hayman. "They forgo they ever were afraid of the flu."

Feature Carries Sea to Screen

The Call of the Sea Exemplified in Alice Joyce Vitagraph Feature,
"The Captain's Captain"

ALICE JOYCE'S latest Vitagraph offering, "The Captain's Captain," is said to bring the glamor and romance of the booming surf to the screen. It is stated that this feature is being booked far more extensively even than had been anticipated by its most enthusiastic admirers at the Vitagraph studio and executive offices.

While Miss Joyce's popularity may account in large degree for the success of this feature, the comments that Vitagraph reports, anent the nautical atmosphere, give root to their belief that no happier selection could have been made for Miss Joyce, either in style of story or type of role.

Miss Joyce's success in the past is said to have been built on her outstanding ability as an emotional artiste, yet in "The Captain's Captain" she is described as appearing as a happy-go-lucky, hoydenish sort of Miss. The Madonna-like sadness fading from her eyes to give place to expressions of brimming-over mischievousness, and the stately glide of Alice Joyce, dramatic actress, breaking into the girlish romp of Alice Joyce, comedienne.

Tom Terriss, who directed the picture, is said to have put a wealth of atmosphere and realism into the detail of the scenes in the Cape Cod fishing village where most of the action takes place.

The story was adapted from James Cooper's novel, "Cap'n Abe, Storekeeper,"

A new portrait of Alice Joyce, Vitagraph star and the salt that saturates the pages of the book is declared to have been absorbed into the screen story.

Arthur Donaldson, Percy Standing, Maurice Costello, Julia Swayne Gordon, and Eulalie Jensen support Miss Joyce in "The Captain's Captain."

While "The Captain's Captain" is announced as proving popular in all parts of the country, it is said to be a flattering little commentary on the correctness of detail to learn that the number of prints are proving entirely inadequate in the districts out of the Boston and St. Johns, N. B., branches, where it is stated the patrons are, presumably, more adept in judging the correct reflection of nautical, and particularly Cape Cod, atmosphere.

Shuberts Choose Select Picture For Stage

MESSRS LEE AND J. J. SHUBERT announce that they will produce for the spoken stage "Scandal," by Cosmo Hamilton, which was Constance Talmadge's first Select picture.

According to the announcement the Messrs. Shubert, in association with Walter Hast, have already placed Mr. Hamilton's "Scandal" in rehearsal with Charles Cherry and Francine Larrimore heading the cast. Both Mr. Cherry and Miss Larrimore are prominent players of the spoken stage and have appeared in featured roles for a number of seasons.

In the spoken stage production of "Scandal" the role of Beatrix Vanderyke, which was the part played by Constance Talmadge in the Select Pictures production, will be played by Miss Larrimore, while Mr. Cherry will have the part taken by Harry C. Browne in the original motion picture version.

The rest of the Messrs. Shubert cast has not been announced, but the cast in support of Miss Talmadge when "Scandal" was originally produced contained the names of Gladden James, J. Herbert Frank, Aimee Dalmores, Ida Darling and W. P. Carleton. Charles Giblyn was the director.

The translation of a successful motion picture into a stage play for New York's critical theatre patrons is declared to now make necessary a reversion of that popular catch-line, "based on the successful stage play of the same name." Future advertising of the prospective production may read: "Based on the successful Select Picture by Cosmo Hamilton in which Constance Talmadge starred on the silver sheet."

In the meantime Constance Talmadge, whose latest picture is "Who Cares?" another Cosmo Hamilton story, is busy on her forthcoming Select attraction, "Romance and Arabella," "based on the successful stage play of the same name by William Hurlbut."

Big Publicity Campaign for Select Feature

"The Belle of New York," starring Marion Davies, will have one of the biggest publicity campaigns ever arranged in the support of a moving picture production, it is announced by Select Pictures Corporation, and will reap the advantage of serial publication of the story in thirteen of the largest newspapers in the country.

"The Belle of New York," the Gustave Kerker and Hugh Morton musical comedy hit of twenty years ago, is still playing on the spoken stage in London. During the last score years it has been played in a dozen different languages, and gallons of ink and tons of paper have been used in its advertising.

Willis and Inglis Issue Unique Appeal

In a bid for business Willis and Inglis, located in the Wright-Callender Building, at Los Angeles, have issued a hanging piece of office and studio advertising that calls attention to their "Fourteen Piece Program for 1919."

The fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh points embrace their appeal in a general way and assert that: "We mean to make our service a feature, full length, no padding, no subtitles, all action."

"We will endeavor to keep our characters good. Our character actors and actresses are good. We purpose you shall give us a lead, and we will give you several, male or female. We will produce actors, actresses, stars and stories. We act as your assistants."

"Cannibal Film" Praised in St. Louis

The St. Louis Republic describes Martin Johnson's picture, "Cannibals of the South Seas," the Robertson-Cole purchase released through Exhibitors Mutual exchanges as "the most realistic of actual nature pictures," adding that "the vivid romance of the most out-of-the-way places was never more interestingly told."

"These films will be found as thrilling as any standard tale of adventure," according to the Des Moines Register, "and with added merit of absolute truth."

Lovely with Hamilton

Louise Lovely portrays Ann Travers in Hale Hamilton's Metro production, "Johnny on the Spot." Until recently she was starring in her own right and is considered very widely known to screen fans through her former connection with Universal.

She is an Australian and has appeared in both vaudeville and musical comedy.

Pays Tribute to Pathe on "Hands Up"

In a letter to F. B. Picknell, manager of the Pathe exchange at Oklahoma City, George A. Pollard, manager of the Gem theatre, at Guthrie, pays a very high tribute to Pathe's serial, "Hands Up," as follows:

"I thought you would be interested in knowing what success I have had with 'Hands Up!' 'I ran the fourteenth episode last Friday. My total admissions to date on the 14 days have reached 20,804 to a total gross business of $2,244. My total expenses for the 14 days were $490, leaving me a net profit of $1,754. Part of this admission was charged at five and ten cents straight, but since the re-opening after the flu ban I have charged five and fifteen cents. 'When you consider the fact that this serial was out of business for six weeks straight on account of being closed by the flu I think this record is nothing short of remarkable. As you know we have played every Pathe serial released but 'Hands Up!' has broken all records. Needless to say, we will never be without a Pathe serial."

"GEORGE A. POLLARD."

A letter along the same lines has also been received by W. A. Raynor, manager of Pathe's New York branch, from Murray Pearl of the Globe theatre, 2186 Third avenue, New York City.

Mr. Pearl states that the new Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," has broken all records for business in the history of his theatre by $40. On the first matinee performance of "The Lightning Raider," Mr. Pearl was forced to close his box office at two o'clock as every available seat and bit of standing room had been sold.

Fine Exchange at Dallas

W. S. Wessling, Southern district manager for Pathe Exchanges, Inc., states that the new Pathe offices at Dallas, Texas, is the most up-to-date exchange in the country.

The new Pathe offices are now occupying the premises recently vacated by the Dallas Gas Co., at 1715-17 Commerce street. The location is ideal, being one-half block from the post office, and diagonally across the street from Film Row, and the entire office is finished in mahogany, and equipped throughout with mahogany fixtures and furniture. The poster department and projection room occupy the spacious daylight basement. The horseshoe balcony on the main floor is used by the Pathe sales force, also the Hodkinson and American representatives.

Under the administration of Manager Jimmie Hill, jr., business increased to such an extent that Mr. Wessling appointed W. T. Yoder their south Texas representative, to the position of assistant branch manager.

Viola Dana Is Baby Vamp

In "Diana Ardway," Viola Dana portrays a baby vampire. The story is from Van Zo Post's novel, directed by Herbert Blache under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director-general of Metro.

Milton Sills, loaned to Metro by Goldwyn, is Miss Dana's leading man. Others in the cast are Lloyd Hughes, Frank Currier, George King, Lilie Leslie and Alice Knowland.

Electric Signs Advertise Selznick Pictures

News of "Upstairs and Down"

Huge Electric Sign on Broadway Flashing the OLIVE THOMAS receives great advertising through two big electric signs, advertising Selznick Pictures, which have been installed at Times square. These carry the simple announcement, "Myron Selznick Presents Olive Thomas in 'Upstairs and Down,' Direction Charles Giblyn." This is said to be the first step taken by Selznick Pictures Corporation in what is heralded as a nationwide campaign of advertising.

One of these signs, 32 ft. x 34 ft., is located on Broadway between Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth streets and is of an especially novel though simple design. The letters of the word "Upstairs" in "Upstairs and Down" run upwards on a diagonal, each letter standing on the outline of a step of stairs.

The lettering in the sign burns steadily, only the outline of the stairs flashing on and off. Each step flashes separately, giving the impression of an ascending movement. This installation was worked out as a suggestion for exhibitors who will later be booking the picture.

The other sign, at Forty-second street and Seventh avenue, is about the same size, but owing to the shape it was impossible to use the stairs design, which calls for an almost square area of illumination.

Negotiations are now said to be under way for still a third Selznick Pictures sign. Arrangements have been practically completed for this structure, which when in operation will be the largest amusement sign of its kind in the city and will practically blanket Times square with Selznick Pictures illuminations, so that from no point of this center of the world's theatrical life will it be possible to escape the Selznick advertisements.

From the response which has been received to the preliminary advertising to exhibitors, it is obvious that the new corporation has awakened keen interest throughout the country. Applications for franchises are being received steadily and the company expects to make an important announcement of its plans concerning these franchises within a short time.

Four Under Way and One in Preparation

WITH four productions rounding into shape for screen presentation and the fifth in the casting stages, Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro, has things humming on the West Coast. The four under production are "The Blind Man's Eyes," starring Bert Lytell; "The Island of Intrigue," with May Allison in the principal role; a fast-moving Hale Hamilton picture, "Johnny on the Spot," and a comedy-drama for Viola Dana entitled "Diana Ardway." The title of the fifth production, in which Miss Wehlen is to appear, has not been announced.

"The Blind Man's Eyes" has to do with the fight of a man wrongly accused of murder to vindicate himself before the world and the girl he loves, and to bring retribution and justice to those who broke faith with him. Opposite Mr. Lytell in this drama appears Naomi Childers. The remainder of the cast includes Joseph Kilgour, Frank Currier, Richard Morris, Morris Foster, Gertrude Claire and Mignon Anderson. June Mathis adapted the photoplay from the novel by William McHarg and Edwin Balmer. John Ince is directing.

Many of the scenes for "The Island of Intrigue," in which May Allison is starring, are to be taken on the island of Santa Cruz, off the California coast near Santa Barbara.

Hale Hamilton will be seen in "Johnny on the Spot" as a young man under a double handicap. He is afflicted with literary aspirations and carries a misguided notion that everything comes to him who waits. Playing opposite Mr. Hamilton is Louise Lovely, as the young girl who wouldn't come to the calmly waiting Johnny. Lilie Leslie, Ruth Orlamond, Edward Connelly, Philo McCullough, Hardee Kirkland, Fred Warren, Neal Hardin and Oral Humphreys are others in the cast. Harry L. Franklin is directing.

Viola Dana has the part of a tomboy vampire in "Diana Ardway." Milton Sills, by arrangement with Goldwyn, has been chosen as Miss Dana's leading man. Mr. Sills will be remembered as the star of "The Honor System." Lilie Leslie, who appears also in "Johnny on the Spot," is included in the cast of "Diana Ardway." Frank Currier, Lloyd Hughes, George King and Alice Knowland are in support. The story is one adapted by John H. Collins from the original narrative by Van Zo Post. Herbert Blache is directing.

Ford Will Take Company to Japan

Francis Ford, who sail for Japan the middle of March to make an Oriental serial, will be accompanied by Mae Gaston, Elsie Van Name, Phil Ford, Pete Gerald, Jerry Ash, Johnny Thwaites and Harry Ellis Dean, business manager of the company. The serial will be produced in Japan.

James J. Corbett Is Publicized

Universal Finds It Easy to Secure Newspaper Publicity for Its Newest Star, the Former Champion

UNIVERSAL believed that James J. Corbett was known to many millions of persons who would anxiously await his screen appearance. When it recently signed the former champion to appear in serials it was confident that it had secured a star of the first magnitude.

As a test, however, of Mr. Corbett's popularity, and to find out if people had by any chance forgotten what Corbett looked like, the Universal publicity department sent a picture of the star, with a bandana handkerchief covering half his face, to photoplay editors and sporting editors throughout the country with a caption, "Who Is He?" Several hundred newspapers published the cut with a brief sketch of the "mysterious stranger's" life.

During the past week hundreds of letters from all parts of the country are reported as having come into the Universal offices, having been forwarded by the editors, and they maintain that it takes more than a handkerchief to conceal the identity of the man who won millions of admirers by his work in the squared circle and as a star of many big theatrical successes.

Corbett is now working on the third episode of his first serial at Universal City under the direction of James W. Horne. According to Joe Brandt, who is at the Pacific Coast studios supervising the production of three serials, "Gentleman Jim" is taking to film work like a duck to water. The story of the serial, "The Midnight Man," is partially built around Corbett's experiences and the former boxer and stage star is among the first to arrive at the studios for duty in the morning and among the last to leave.

So enthusiastic about his screen work is Corbett that at his Hollywood bungalow he has established a gymnasium and practices various of his proposed "stunts" with a corps of "supers" every day.

Since his arrival at Universal City Corbett has received many visitors daily, among them being a number of old friends from Los Angeles and San Francisco, in which cities Corbett explains he "got his start."

Casting Director Arthur Hoyt states that he is having difficulty in obtaining "extras" to appear in scenes in which "Gentleman Jim" is required to demonstrate his fistic ability.

Comedy Drama Now Viola Dana's Specialty

METRO considers that the success of its recent comedy dramas starring Viola Dana has been so pronounced that during the coming twelve months they will provide her with stories of the comedy drama type.

They declare that the heartiness of the reception accorded Miss Dana in this sort of story is found in the welcome given "The Gold Cure," her most recent release.

The production now in work at the Metro studios at Hollywood, "Diana Ardway," is of this same type. It finds a young girl very much in love with a playwright. She is rather a tomboy type, and to win the man she wants she has to assume an absurd amount of dignity and manner.

From what can be learned from the director and from reports upon fragments of the early parts of the film already developed, Miss Dana has never been better than in this rollicking, human comedy of youth.

Metro declares that it would seem that the public does not want Miss Dana ever to grow up—quite, and that they would rather see her as a girl of the age before that of the "young lady," when there is still something of the boy left in her character.

The popularity of all those pictures in which the little Metro star is found inserting herself every now and then in boys' clothes is declared to be evidence of this demand for everlasting youth on the part of the public.

Blackton Has Completed "A House Divided"

J. Stuart Blackton has completed the actual filming of his newest production, "A House Divided," and is now engaged on the cutting and titling of the picture.

"A House Divided" is Anthony Paul Kelly's screen adaptation of the widely read novel, "The Substance of His House," by Ruth Holt Boucicault, and is described as one of the most dramatic problem stories ever screened by Commodore Blackton.

It is a modern story of love, marriage and divorce, the plot dealing with the sanctity of marriage and the sacrifice and renunciation to be expected of love.

The novel is said to contain that romantic appeal which film devotees, particularly the feminine contingent, whose opinion after all makes or breaks a production, demand.

Its principal locale is England, with several scenes set in France and America. High political and social life, particularly of the British capital, is pictured in many settings as spectacular.

"The Unpardonable Sin" Gets Big Circuit

Garson and Neilan's ten-reel production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet, will have its premiere in New York City first instead of the West Coast, and prints were shipped from Los Angeles, January 25.

This production will tour the country as a big special production with special music and at advanced prices. A circuit of legitimate theatres has contracted for the production which will be exploited in a high class manner in leading theatres, it is announced.

After the New York opening it will have its Chicago premiere and then appear in the various combination houses in other principal cities. It is stated that at the very first view the legitimate circuit management contracted for "The Unpardonable Sin" immediately.

Ince Fairly Settled in His New Studios

At his new studio at Culver City, California, it is stated that Thomas H. Ince is now getting fairly settled, and as one facility after another is provided, it promises to be one of the most completely and satisfactorily equipped plants for making motion pictures in the world.

In effect, it is said to have more of the appearance of a Southern manor than anything in the nature of a manufacturing institution. The administration building resembles George Washington's home at Mount Vernon, only being much larger in size.

There is a sweeping front yard which will be in lawn and dotted with trees and flowers. The administration building practically hides from view the studio stages and other buildings.

Norma Talmadge Pictures Are Reissued

Seven Norma Talmadge pictures will be re-issued by Southern Triangle Pictures Company, according to announcement.

They are entitled "The Devil's Needle," "Fifty-fifty," "Missing Links," "Martha's Vindication," "Children in the House," "Going Straight" and "The Social Secretary"; two pictures, "The Girl of the Timber Claims" and "Betsy's Burglar," in which is starred Constance Talmadge, and "Peggy," the production with Billy Burke as a stellar attraction.

This series will be released through Triangle offices in Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha, where bookings can now be arranged.

Sais with Hayakawa

The leading woman playing opposite Sessue Hayakawa in his newest screen production is Marin Sais. The feature is entitled "Bonds of Honor" and was made by Haworth Pictures Corporation.

Miss Sais is a native daughter of California and is considered one of the best known leading women on the West Coast. Exhibitors Mutual exchanges will distribute the picture.

Discusses United-World Pact

President J. A. Berst of United Picture Theatres Declares Combination Will Simplify Marketing and Distributing

DETAILS of the agreement arranged by United Picture Theatres of America and World Film Corporation, as published in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, have since been emphasized from Los Angeles by J. A. Berst, president of United, and the acquisition of the Peerless Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., is also explained.

According to announcements, the work of enlarging the studios has already started and a stock company organized for the purpose of making big productions at Fort Lee.

It is contemplated to make only big features of the type of "Stolen Orders" and "Sporting Life." Some of the productions will feature big stars while other productions will present all-star casts.

It developed that some of the backers of the Peerless Studios were also interested in the World Film Corporation and the advantage to distribute through the World became immediately apparent, as it was considered that the World organization, under the presidency of Mr. Ricord Gradwell, had improved to the highest degree of efficiency.

Mr. Berst in the interview said: "It is certain that the combination of the sales organization of United with the distributing organization of the World, will make the greatest business force in the marketing of film in the industry."

"Without creating any stir, the United has spread its propaganda among the most potent forces in the film industry and, by gathering around us men of known business judgment, we have attained enormous strength of membership. Right now, the United is the greatest outlet in the United States, if not the entire World, for the distribution of pictures."

"Thirteen hundred theatres throughout the United States are now enrolled as members of the United Picture Theatres of America, and the number is daily increasing. Every important city and town in the country is represented in the list. From far-off New England to Los Angeles great theatre chains have joined the circuit.

"Poli's circuit of New England, stretched its friendly hands across the continent to join with the California and the Alhambra theatres in Los Angeles. Turner and Dankin of San Francisco, and the Peoples' Amusement Company of Portland, Oregon, are represented."

"Between those distant points, other great theatres are members of the United. The Crandall Circuit of Washington, D. C., with nine houses; Lubliner and Trinz, of Chicago, with fourteen theatres, are evidences of the strength of the new combination."

"Important figures in the film industry are also identified with this movement. Grieves and Ellison of Denver, Herman J. Brown of Boise City, Idaho, head of the Idaho Exhibitors' Association; W. D. Nevills of Dallas, Texas; Richards and Flynn of Kansas City, Mo.; Saul S. Harris of Little Rock, Arkansas, the Schaffer houses in Chicago, in which controlling interest is held by Peter J. Schaffer, president of the Exhibitors' League of America; Charles H. Miles of Detroit and Cleveland, who is a power in the vaudeville world; Tom Sax of Milwaukee, Whitehurst and DeHoff of News and Garden theatres, Baltimore, the Stanley Mastbaum interests of Philadelphia, the Mark Brock interests of Syracuse and Buffalo, N. Y., also owners of the Strand theatre of New York City; Jake Wells Circuit of Richmond, Va.; Ruben and Finklestein of Minneapolis; Max Spiegle of the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J.; Barton and Olson of Indianapolis, Ind.; Joe Ricketts of Phoenix, Ariz.; the Nick Diamis Circuit of Arizona; the Majestic Amusement Company of Memphis, Tenn., and the Harris-Davis Enterprise controlling first-run theatres in Pittsburgh, Louisville, Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus and Detroit."

Six Universals on February List

Edith Roberts, Monroe Salisbury,
Mary MacLaren, Fritzi Brunette,
Priscilla Dean and Carmel
Myers Are the Stars

SIX photoplays, each possessing a distinctively different theme, are released by Universal during February.

The first of the six was "Sue of the South," which features Edith Roberts. W. Eugene Moore produced the story from a script suggested by Maud Reeves White's novel. Ruby LaFayette, James Farley and P. S. Pembroke are in support of Miss Roberts.

February 10 brings two film dramas produced by Rupert Julian, one featuring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford entitled, "The Millionaire Pirate," and the other a Special Attraction starring Mary MacLaren and entitled "Creaking Stairs."

"The Millionaire Pirate" deals with buccaneers ancient and modern and has been produced from the screen adaptation of Emil Nyitray's Hungarian story. Harry Holden, Clyde Fillmore, Jack Mower and Lillian Langdon are in support of Mr. Salisbury and Miss Clifford.

Evelyn Campbell wrote the story from which "Creaking Stairs" has been adapted, and in support of Miss MacLaren are Jack Mulhall, Herbert Prior, Clarissa Selwyn and Lucretia Harris.

February 17 will see the release of "The Sealed Envelope," a Douglas Gerrard production, featuring Fritzi Brunette, supported by William Sheer, Joseph Girard and Martha Mattox.

On February 24, Priscilla Dean in a vehicle now bearing the tentative title, "The Rose of the Night," will be released.

Mae Murray Plying Her Trade in "Danger—Go Slow"—Universal Special

Tod Browning produced the film play, and Waldemar Young prepared the scenario for the film from the story by Evelyn Campbell, Wellington Playter, Lon Chaney Spottiswoode Aiken and Gertrude Astor are in the cast.

Simultaneously with the release of the Dean feature will come a Carmel Myers feature entitled "The Little White Savage," produced by Paul Powell from Waldemar Young's scenario of Francis Greene's story.

First Paramount-Drew Comedy February 2

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew return to the screen in "Romance and Rings," the first of the Paramount-Drew comedies, produced by the V. B. K. Film Corporation, of which Amedee J. Van Beuren is head. The first of the Drew comedies under the new management was released by Paramount February 2.

"Romance and Rings" was written by Emma Anderson Whitman and pictures the wedding of Henry and Polly. Henry, with characteristic forgetfulness, discovers at the last moment that he has left the wedding ring behind, but his old friend, Jimmy Teasdale, comes to the rescue and prevails upon his wife to loan hers for the occasion. But when the ring is placed on Polly's finger it is there for keeps, and the efforts of Henry and Jimmy to placate Mrs. Teasdale and at the same time keep Polly in ignorance of her husband's neglect are productive of much merriment.

"Restless Souls" Features Alma Rubens

"Restless Souls," featuring Alma Rubens with Jack Conway, Miss Rubens' former director, playing the leading male role, is the Triangle release for the week of February 2. It is a screen version of a story by Cosmo Hamilton. William C. Dowlan directed. In the supporting cast are seen J. Barney Sherry, Harvey Clark and Eugene Burr. The story tells of two women, friends since girlhood, both unhappily married and both living unsatisfactory lives in their different environment.

Northrup Has Heavy Role in Nilsson Feature

Harry S. Northrup has been engaged by Maxwell Karger, director general at the Metro studios in Hollywood for the "heavy" role of Austin Leyburn in "The Way of the Strong," a forthcoming Metro production in which Anna Q. Nilsson is to be featured. "The Way of the Strong" by Ridgewell Cullum, adapted for the screen by Finis Fox, is a story of Alaska and the great northwest. Edwin Carew is directing the production under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger.

Paramount Offers Five Two-Reel Comedies

FIVE two-reel comedies for the month of February are offered by Paramount, according to Walter E. Greene, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of distribution.

"For the first time in the history of our company," says Mr. Greene, "we will release in a single month an average of more than one comedy a week. This forward step is made possible by the acquisition of the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, the first of which, 'Romance and Rings,' is released February 2. Our original schedule called for fifty-two comedies during the year 1918-19, and our contract for twelve Drew pictures adds one a month from now on."

"Also scheduled for February 2 is 'One Every Minute,' a Paramount-Flagg comedy in which are humorously chronicled the experiences and woes of a young bumpkin who believed he could become another Douglas Fairbanks 'if he only had the chance.' The leading roles are played by Olin Howland and Florence Dixon.

"On February 9 we release 'Rip & Stitch, Tailors,' from the Mack Sennett studios. The featured players are Harry Gribbon, Myrtle Lind, and the popular fat comedian, Hughie Mack, who recently joined the Sennett forces.

"The release of February 16 is the Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, 'Love,' written by 'Fatty' Arbuckle and Vincent Bryant, in which the big comedian promises more than the usual number of comedy surprises with himself of course, as the central figure. In this comedy a new leading woman, Winifred Westover, is introduced.

"The final release for the month, on the 23d, is the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, 'East Lynne with Variations,' promised as a convulsing travesty on the famous old drama. Ben Turpin, Charles Lynn, Alice Lake and an all-star cast are featured."

Mae Marsh Portrays a Porch Climber

In "The Bondage of Barbara," her recent Goldwyn, Mae Marsh is described as demonstrating that she is as agile as a professional porch climber.

The sight of the appealing star shortening the distance between herself and the roof with all the skill of a lively boy—or an experienced burglar—is declared to be one of the many interesting moments in her new play.

What is said to be genuinely amusing is that she did not have to practice the feat, but shinnied up the post like a veteran.

Lillian Walker Finishes "Fixing It"

The second Lillian Walker production for Hodkinson has been finished at the Robert Brunton Studio in Los Angeles and a print has been received and viewed by officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributors, and Lillian Walker Pictures, Inc., producers.

"Fixing It" is the title chosen for the picture, which is adapted from John Breckenridge Ellis' novel, "Fran." William P. S. Earle directed it from the scenario by himself and Arthur Edwin Krows. The release date has been set for February 24 through Pathe exchanges.

"The Wicked Darling" Is Priscilla Dean's Next

Universal announces that the latest Priscilla Dean special attraction has been given the title "The Wicked Darling." The film feature was produced under the tentative title of "The Rose of the Night" and adapted from the story "The Gutter Rose."

Tod Browning directed the filming of the story and the opinion of Universal is that it is Miss Dean's best screen work to date.

Williams Heads Vitagraph's February List

"THE HIGHEST TRUMP," starring Earle Williams, heads Vitagraph's list of February releases. Mr. Williams appears as a secret service agent.

His most popular characterizations have previously been given in this type of role, and this, together with the fact that he is co-author of the story, which is said to be of the most unusual ever brought to the screen, holding many moments of dramatic tensi and surprising climaxes, is perhaps responsible for the heavy pre-release write-up.

Mr. Williams himself classifies it as the most satisfactory photoplay in which he has ever appeared. His role in "The Highest Trump" presents him with the first opportunity he has ever had to interpret his own dramatic creation.

His collaborator in this story, H. H. Van Loan, is well known as a writer of scenarios and dramatic playlets, and he is also a frequent contributor to many leading American periodicals.

Mr. Williams has a dual role in this feature, said to be different than is generally seen in connection with this dramatic classification. He is first seen as Richard Paget, summoned from his work in Washington to the home of his twin brother, John, who has been lured along the path of dishonor, finally taking the only way out for one of his weak character—suicide.

Then follows the discovery of his brother's body by Richard, and it is in this scene that the only piece of double-exposure of the production appears. In a production handled with less finesse, it is stated that this bit of technical perfection could perhaps have been dispensed with and the continuity of the story would not have suffered.

But James Young, who is again directing Mr. Williams, decided that the insertion of these few feet of special camera-work would tighten up the story and make it triply convincing, and the double exposure was then made.

Stage Women War Relief Films Are Shown

First showings outside New York were made January 26 and 27 of the first five two-reel photoplays produced by the Stage Women's War Relief for distribution through Universal exchanges.

H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges, and Tarkington Baker, general director of publicity, staged special showings of the films at Pittsburgh on Sunday and at Chicago the day following.

At Chicago the first five films of the series of twelve to be made by the Stage Women, and known as the Stage Women's Green Room series, were displayed before several hundred exhibitors, editors, critics and city and state officials, and presented with special music.

Alice Joyce Makes Hit as Comedienne

Alice Joyce's latest Vitagraph release, "The Captain's Captain," presents the star in a light comedy role. Since the picture's release, Vitagraph reports that exhibitors have commented on the question whether Miss Joyce is more likeable as a comedienne or as an emotional actress. Tom Terriss who has handled the megaphone in the production of many of Miss Joyce's late successes, directed "The Captain's Captain."

In chief support of the star is seen Arthur Donaldson, one of the screen's best character actors. Others in the cast are Percy Standing, Eulalie Jensen, Julia Swayne Gordon and Maurice Costello. The screen version was made from James Cooper's "Capt'n Abe-Storekeeper."

Bimberg Verifies Fox Re-Issue Contention

FOLLOWING investigations into experiences which exhibitors throughout the country have had with revised editions or reissues of pictures previously released, the William Fox Exhibitors Service Bureau reports that William Fox's contention that the revised editions of the Great Nine Fox reissues are affording exhibitors unusual opportunities for making profits.

A case in point is cited, in reports received from B. K. Bimberg, who operates five theatres in New York, among them being the Schuyler and the Broadway Photoplay, two of New York's West Side theatres in the upper Broadway section. In speaking on this point Mr. Bimberg said: "I think this condition will be true in the case of practically every exhibitor in every city.

"It is a fact that screen patrons have increased by many thousands during the past two years. A very great number of present regular attendants never had been in a big theatre two years ago. Why shouldn't they want to see these fine pictures?

"Price, of course, is a consideration, but it is obviously true that the producer can offer pictures like the Great Nine at a lower rental than he would have to charge if he were producing these same pictures now. Costs have mounted skyward in the past two or three years. So I, for one, am quite ready to accept Mr. Fox's contention that it would cost him a million dollars to bring out the Great Nine today. Reasonable price, of course, means nothing if box office value is not there; but in the Great Nine I have such stars as Theda Bara and William Farnum and two such plays as 'Regeneration' and 'The Soul of Broadway.' The Great Nine are more than meeting the exacting demand of my clientele.

"I booked the Great Nine because I know they are excellent photoplays that would be actually new to most of my patrons. I have already shown two of the releases, 'The Servant' with Theda Bara, and 'Fighting Blood' with William Farnum. My business has been big and my patrons are highly pleased.

"Faith" Is Released Starring Bert Lytell

RICHARD WASHBURN CHILD'S story "Faith" in screen adaption was released by Metro February 3 and has Bert Lytell in the stellar role.

The story is said to be no less thoroughly American, straightforward and effective than the young Metro star. It concerns the regeneration of a young man through the constant faith of two women: one the girl of his boyhood dreams, the other his former teacher, who in the absence of a mother to guide him, undertook the task herself.

Playing opposite Mr. Lytell in "Faith" is Rosemary Theby. Never before in any of the many parts whose impersonation has won for her the place she holds on the screen and in the hearts of the picture public has Miss Theby been more radiant or as entirely charming as in the role of Charity Garvice, it is declared.

So extraordinary were the possibilities of the original story that especial care has been taken with the scenario. This is the joint work of George D. Baker and A. G.

Kenyon, of the Metro scenario staff.

The part of the eccentric banker is played splendidly by Edwin Stevens, and that of his wife by Nancy Chase. Edythe Chapman has made the most of the sympathetic part of the loyal school teacher, Martha Owen.

Pearl White Will Battle Fifteen Rascals

Fifteen villains, one for every episode of her new Pathe serial, will clash with Pearl White, according to the fight news coming from Pathe's publicity department.

"In Secret" is the title of the Robert W. Chambers serial and the story has been so constructed that unlike the ordinary serial, one villain cannot harass the star throughout the entire thirty reels.

In each episode Miss White is scheduled to dispose of a villain. George B. Seitz, the director, has been confronted with the task of finding fifteen screen villains for his serial.

Novel Role Provided for Gladys Leslie

In the Vitagraph feature released February 10, a very novel role is said to have been enacted by the star, Gladys Leslie.

"Fortune's Child" is the name of the feature and the story pictures Miss Leslie beginning as a little drudge in a cheap boarding house but when circumstances force her out of her home, such as it is, she falls in with a prize-fighter who has run across a lost baby.

The story was written by Lawrence McCloskey and directed by Joseph Gleason, and the supporting cast includes Miriam Miles, Denton Vane, Kempton Greene, Stanley Walpole, Frances Mann, Jessie Stevens, Fred Smith, Shirley Brule and others.

Jewel Production Commended by Baker

Following the presentation of Jewel's production, "The Heart of Humanity," before members of the Press Club, Washington, D. C., the Washington Herald quoted Secretary of War Baker as making the following statement in praise of the picture:

"It is a valuable picture. It brings to us in a forceful manner the sacrifices which were made both at the front and at the fireside to free the world and place love in its rightful place. The picture has touched me deeply and as it speeds towards the end I hope that it will help in bringing about some sort of league of nations, binding together civilized men, which will chain the hyena, gone mad with lust and ambition."

"Made in America" Is Released Feb. 16

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that "Made in America," produced by Ashley Miller and published and marketed by Hodkinson, will be released for distribution through Pathe exchange on Sunday, February 16.

Independent Books Heavily on 10-20-30 Series

According to reports received from all sections of the country where Independent Sales Corporation's 10-20-30 series have shown, by Lynn S. Card, general sales manager, the series is giving every satisfaction.

"Since the announcement of our first release, Evelyn Nesbit and her son, Russell Thaw, in 'Her Mistake,' on this fixed-price plan," said Mr. Card, "the exhibitors of the country began to get their contracts in, but since the release of our second picture, J. Stuart Blackton's production, 'Life's Greatest Problem,' in which Mitchell Lewis is starred, our branches throughout the country have gone way ahead of all expectations in the matter of securing contracts, the largest percentage of them coming from first-run houses.

"In launching this $10.00-$20.00-$30.00 fixed price plan for this series Frank Hall, president of Independent, worked on the idea that an equitable contract and a fair price would induce a volume of business, giving double the number of playing days or the pictures sold under this plan, which would more than offset the difference between the uncertain elastic prices and the extremely reasonable fixed prices of the independent. That Mr. Hall's idea has proved practical and profitable beyond a doubt is evidenced by the contracts."

Two Billy West Comedies Under Production

Billy West has completed the first two of his comedies under the Bull's Eye banner and is working on the third and fourth. To make up for lost time owing to an attack of influenza, the comedian is working on two comedies simultaneously. Nat H. Spitzer, studio manager, discovered that with a sufficient number of settings, Billy could go from one to the other, since his "make-up" is almost the same. And Billy is doing so, with the result that two of them are being made at the same time in the Hollywood studio.

The Independent Field

Considers Canadian Exhibitors

Initial S-L Feature, Starring E. K. Lincoln, Is Made to Meet Requirements of Theatre Managers of Canada

CONSIDERABLE interest is being manifested by the leading exhibitors of Canada in the progress of the initial S-L Production shortly to be presented under the auspices of Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin.

Prior to their recent advent in the field of picture making through the acquaintance of E. K. Lincoln as the star of a series of special S-L Pictures directed by Ralph Ince, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin were recognized as successful distributors of special productions in the Dominion.

For several years they handled the entire feature output of the Metro program in Canadian territory, during which period they were responsible for many successful innovations in the matter of exhibitor co-operation and original film exploitation.

Due to methods of fair dealing during their control of the Canadian Metro Franchise, the organizers of S-L Pictures possess the confidence of the leading showmen in that territory.

In forming an organization for the production of a series of special vehicles presented E. K. Lincoln as star under the personal direction of Ralph Ince, Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have borne in mind the peculiar requirements of the Canadian exhibitor.

Understanding the type of special picture best fitted to please motion picture audiences of the Dominion and with a thorough knowledge of the wants of the Canadian exhibitor, it is believed the first S-L Picture will carry an appeal to theatre audiences both in the United States and Canada.

It is understood that certain scenes have been especially filmed for incorporation in the prints which will go to Canada and particular care has been exerted in the matter of titling in this respect throughout the entire length of the film.

The producers of the first starring vehicle in which E. K. Lincoln will appear have endeavored at all times to capitalize their knowledge of the Canadian film situation and it is believed that the exhibitors and distributors of that country will find S-L Pictures admirably adapted to both their commercial and artistic requirements.

It is said to be probably the first time that this angle of picture-making has been given serious consideration by the various manufacturers.

Items in Gaumont Current News Weeklies

Gaumont News No. 44, released last Tuesday, presents as its feature "news" item how the different states of the Union have acted on the "bone-dry" amendment to the Constitution and what will become of the big distilleries.

It also illustrates some of the causes which have resulted in this absolute prohibition.

President Wilson's tour through England is also fully pictured. Many scenes are given showing his reception, not only in London, where he and Mrs. Wilson were personally entertained by King George and Queen Mary, but also in the other English cities he visited. This subject includes the first showing in this country of Mr. Wilson's visit to Manchester, England's great manufacturing center, and Carlisle, where he visited the birthplace of his mother.

Gaumont Graphic No. 444, released on Friday, January 24, contains interesting topics of current interest. In Boston, the emblems carried by the 301st Field Artillery in the European war are turned over to the custody of the State of Massachusetts through Governor Coolidge. In St. Louis the Salvation Army has outfitted a clubhouse for sailors and soldiers at a cost of many thousands of dollars. In Washington, D. C., Uncle Sam is selling his surplus stock of airplanes, 1,200 of which, with 2,000 extra motors, are offered to the highest bidders. On the Pacific Coast, Mexico's navy, consisting of one lone vessel, the "Morelos," has been junked after many battles with the insurrectionists. Interesting views from Hoboken show the embarkation officers under whose supervision nearly two million soldiers were safely embarked for Europe.

One of the most interesting installment in Gaumont's popular series, "Flying for Uncle Sam," is covered in this number of the Graphic, showing how airplanes are used for bombing purposes.

Robbins Reports on Fox Independent Plan

HERMAN ROBBINS, acting general manager, Fox Film Corporation, reports, in the following statement, the success attendant upon William Fox's releases on the independent market. He selects as an example, Fox's production of "Salome," starring Theda Bara.

"Never have I known a feature to jump into such immediate favor with exhibitors. We have received numerous wires and letters regarding 'Salome' bookings, yet we have hardly started a selling campaign. The mere announcement that 'Salome' was on the market as an independent attraction was, apparently, all that was necessary. If I may judge from the present demand, this feature is going to outrank the earlier Theda Bara super-production, 'Cleopatra,' as a box office attraction.

"Another matter of interest is the large number of week and two-week runs. Even one and two-day houses realize that they cannot meet the demands of their public on this photoplay with a short-time showing. Our New York City branch office, where 'Salome' has been shown at a number of local houses, informs us that such a heavy business is being done that in many cases box offices have had to be closed because the theatres were packed to absolute capacity."

Big business has resulted from every showing of the film. From many letters reaching the Fox offices, one is from A. J. Mack, manager of the Hill theatre in Newark, which has a seating capacity of 1,800. "We played 'Salome' for the second time in this city January 9, 10 and 11," writes Mr. Mack, "and although we were handicapped by adverse weather conditions, we played to capacity at every performance."

In Bridgeport, where "Salome" originally had an extended run at the Park theatre at $1 top prices, Manager P. F. Shea is going to show the feature for another run and charge the same $1 top as before. Engagements of three and four days are so numerous as to include already over 100 leading picture houses, it is stated.

Screens Another Drury Lane Melodrama

THE screen version of another Drury Lane melodrama is now under production under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, who produced "Sporting Life." Mr. Tourneur is now engaged in rounding out the cast and "shooting" the initial scenes at Culver City, for the screen version of "The White Heather," written by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton. "The White Heather" will be the fourth independent production by Mr. Tourneur. "Sporting Life," "Woman" and the screen version of Jacques Futrelle. "My Lady's Garter" are the first three of Mr. Tourneur's productions, produced independently. "My Lady's Garter" has not yet been released, but Hiller and Wilk, selling agents for Mr. Tourneur's productions, announce that the production will have a Broadway showing soon.

"The White Heather" was first produced at the Drury Lane in London in 1897, and at the Academy of Music, in New York later. Amelia Bingham played the heroine and Miller Kent had the leading masculine role. Richard Bennett had a small role. "The White Heather" is not a racing or sporting story, Hiller and Wilk announce, the title being the name of a yacht which is lost at sea. The plot revolves around an unscrupulous nobleman's marriage to a young woman and his subsequent efforts to repudiate the wedding.

Billy West Making Third for Bulls Eye

The third of the new series of comedies that Billy West is now making for Bulls Eye Film Corporation is slated for release on February 15. Work is progressing in the Billy West studios on this feature, and those who are familiar with the story say it will measure up to every standard Billy West has set for himself in this new series. The title will be announced later.

Frank Hall for Efficient Service

Believing that the exhibitor has not had the advertising accessories and copy that he deserves and needs in placing his run before the public, Frank Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, has issued orders to his advertising and publicity staffs that the old routine be abolished—that the advertising department of the Independent Sales Corporation must give careful study to every story and every piece of matter they issue, and that they must view the whole situation from the exhibitors' angle.

"To help accomplish my desire to give a service that will benefit the exhibitor," said Mr. Hall, "I have engaged men for the department who have had practical show experience. They know the conditions to be met, they know the weak points of the routine advertising matter, and they know the kind of stories the newspapers can best handle.

"Having taken everything into account and having viewed the matter entirely from the exhibitor's angle, I believe the advertising service that goes out with our specials and our 10-20-30 series will be found to be exactly what the exhibitor wants to help him sell seats at his theatre."

Major Thaw Not in Carlton Production

Owing to the impression gained in Boston during the extended run of "A Romance of the Air" that Major William Thaw himself appears with Lieut. Bert Hall and Edith Day in Carle K. Carlton's aerial production, Mr. Carlton makes the statement that Major Thaw is not in the picture, but that Herbert Standing, a supporting player of exceptional ability is the man who was mistaken for Major Thaw.

"The Romance of the Air" is being booked by the Independent Sales Corporation, of which Frank Hall is president and distributed by the Film Clearing House.

Interiors Finished for "Thirteenth Chair"

Acme Film Corporation announces that Leonce Perret, who has adapted and is directing the motion picturization of Bayard Veiller's work, "The Thirteenth Chair," for them, has completed the filming of all of the interior scenes for that production, and accompanied by the star and staff Mr. Perret left for Saranac Lake, where the final "shooting" will be done.

There is from four to six feet of snow up near the lake and Creighton Hale, Yvonne Delva and Fraunie French, who went with the company, report that they are devoting their time between scenes to advantage by participating in the outdoor winter sport carnival which is now well under way.

As the photographing of the exterior scenes are said to be generally the last things to be done, it is asserted that announcement of the completion of the production will be forthcoming shortly.

Grace Darling Returns to the Screen

Grace Darling, internationally known to patrons of the movies through the trans-continental trip which she made some time ago for a motion picture weekly, has returned to the screen. The young lady, who numbers among her acquaintances the leading public figures of every town and hamlet in the United States, has been engaged to support E. K. Lincoln in his forthcoming special starring vehicle.

Miss Darling's latest efforts in the film world will be under the auspices of Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, who are at present producing the series of "S-L Pictures" directed by Ralph Ince.

She is a native of New York, has never appeared on the speaking stage and is said to be one of the first film players to appear in special gown creations exclusively designed by Lucile and other famous modistes, in order to properly dress the various roles she has essayed from time to time.

E. K. Lincoln's First S-L Picture Finished

THE final scenes for the special S-L Production starring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince was shot last week and the important work of assembling, cutting and titling will be begun at once.

Due to the importance of the theme, which forms the basis of the first special production to be issued under the banner of Sawyer and Lubin, extreme care is promised in the editing of the many thousands of feet of film which were exposed during the several weeks that the picture was in course of making.

A complete staff of expert assemblers and cutters have been engaged to do the preparatory work of breaking up the various scenes of the picture. In order to preserve the secrecy which has surrounded the entire details of the first S-L Picture as to the nature of the story, the title, etc., private quarters have been secured to which no one but the actual workers will have access.

Several of the highest class sub-title artists of the motion picture industry have been engaged to co-ordinate their various efforts in turning out a series of exclusive and beautiful pictorial back-grounds to accompany the sub-titles of the production. In order that this art may be in perfect harmony with the theme of the story throughout, preliminary sketches are being prepared to use temporarily while the first S-L Picture is in the course of assembling and cutting.

When the final editing of the production is begun, the artists will start work on the finished sketches, which will be used to enhance the beauty and pictorial dressing of the film.

New West Series Selling Rapidly

Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls Eye Film Corporation, now producing Billy West comedies, reports that territory on the new series is selling rapidly and that the only remaining territory on this series includes that surrounded by Seattle, Denver, St. Louis, Minneapolis and eastern Canada.

McClure Syndicating Serial on Roosevelt's Life

A newspaper serial, founded on the dramatic episodes in the life of Colonel Roosevelt, and bearing the same title as the picture, "The Fighting Roosevelts," has been prepared by Charles Hanson Towne, managing editor of McClure's Magazine, and Daniel Henderson, a member of the McClure editorial staff and also in charge of McClure's motion picture advertising. The serial will run in the Atlantic Journal, Chicago Post, Louisville Herald, Denver Times, Springfield (Mass.) Republican, St. Louis Star, Pittsburgh Press, Seattle Times, Everett Herald, Buffalo Courier, Los Angeles Press, Indianapolis Star, Syracuse Herald, Lexington Herald, and contracts for it from scores of other newspapers are pending.

C. Beecroft in Big Foreign Deal

Robertson-Cole Sells Rights of Entire Film Output for Continental Europe to Chester Beecroft

CHESTER BEECROFT, the American exporter, obtained the rights to the entire film output of the Robertson-Cole Company for France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, and also Egypt, and the moneys involved is declared to be between $800,000 and $1,000,000.

Prior to the consummation of this new transaction, which is said to be the biggest involving an American, that has ever been recorded in the film world, Mr. Beecroft was in control of the Robertson-Cole attractions in Russia, Finland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Mr. Beecroft is now on his way to Europe. He sailed for London, and on his arrival will start immediately for Paris, and will go to Copenhagen, Norway, where he will make his headquarters. Mr. Beecroft also has headquarters in Paris, but transacts most of his business from the Copenhagen office.

At the time of his departure he expected to remain abroad for about two months, making preparations to exploit the great list of stars that will come under his control in Europe through his arrangement with Robertson-Cole.

Nearly two hundred productions are involved in the contract just closed. In addition to thirty independent productions, fifty-two Billie Rhodes comedies and twenty-six Jester's. Beecroft will now have to exploit in continental Europe the following stars of the screen world:

H. B. Warner, Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, Henry B. Walthall, Billie Rhodes, William Desmond, Alma Rubens and Grace Darmond in the big special production now being made by Jesse D. Hampton, "What Every Woman Wants."

Each of these stars, with the exception of Miss Darmond, will be featured in eight productions under which the domestic distribution rights are held by Exhibitors Mutual and the world rights by Robertson-Cole.

Beecroft obtains the Continental rights, not only to the productions now handled by Robertson-Cole Company, but also to all the offerings that will be made for them during 1919.

European motion picture enthusiasts are declared to have already seen and admired most of the players who are featured in the Robertson-Cole pictures, and it was said to be this fact that led Mr. Beecroft to negotiate what is announced as one of the biggest motion picture deals of recent times.

The United Kingdom rights to the Robertson-Cole photoplays will be handled directly out of the London office of the big export concern.

Marcus Beeman, formerly of the Film Division of the Committee on Public Information, will have charge of this office, and will leave shortly for his post. All prints will be made in London and supplied to the London office of Robertson-Cole.

Ford's Character of Phil Kelly Explained

FRANCIS FORD, who has made his character of Phil Kelly in his serial production, "The Silent Mystery," famous, because of Kelly's one-hundred per cent. red-blooded Americanism, tells how he came to create the character. Mr. Ford said:

"Phil Kelly is really an evolution. When I was a boy, characters on his order always fired my imagination. 'The Three Musketeers' and 'Monte Cristo' were my favorite romances, and I think it was shortly after I read the latter famous novel that Kelly began to take shape in my consciousness. I had always wanted to act ever since I was old enough to remember anything at all, and about this time I was filled with an overwhelming desire to impersonate the role of a modern 'Monte

A. H. Sawyer Goes South to Recuperate

The latest prominent figure in the motion picture industry to undergo the ravages of the influenza germ is Arthur H. Sawyer. The Supervisor of Productions for the newly formed organization, S-L Pictures, has been confined to his bed for several weeks with the "fashionable" illness.

He was stricken with influenza following the completion of the initial Sawyer-Lubin production starring E. K. Lincoln. Mr. Sawyer left New York for a month's stay at Palm Beach, Florida, where he hopes to recuperate his strength.

During his absence from the studios of the S-L organization, Herbert Lubin will be in active charge of the various production details.

The work of cutting, assembling and titling the initial S-L offering will be carried out during Mr. Sawyer's absence at Palm Beach. Upon his return it is believed the picture directed by Ralph Ince will be practically ready for presentation to the public.

Exclusive's Tom Mix Series Please Jerseyites

Frank Gersten reports that he has three prints working in the northern New Jersey territory, on Exclusive Features, Inc., series of sixteen Tom Mix two-reel comedy dramas. Mr. Gersten has the exclusive right of distribution for this series in the northern New Jersey territory, and says that he has never handled subjects that have given more satisfaction to the exhibitor.

Recent advices from theatre managers say that these two-reel Tom Mix comedy-dramas released through Exclusive Features have filled a long felt want, that they have been used to great advantage in building up a program and have done excellent business where a more or less "weak" feature had been booked. Theatre patrons have been enthusiastic in the reception of these films. Many people have told the house managers that they have never seen short-reel subjects that contain so much genuine interest and are so full of thrills as these Tom Mix dramas.

Cristo.' Kelly began to embody the realization of that which I held in my mind's eye.

"I admire Kelly—that's why I like to play him, and that's why I've been able to make him appealing to the many thousands of my generous friends in all parts of the country. It has seemed to me that in 'The Silent Mystery' I have embodied him a little more solidly than in any of the other serials or productions."

Mary MacLaren in "Creaking Stairs"

WHEN you come to the exploitation of this story you want to take into consideration the value of the title of "Creaking Stairs." It suggests mystery all the way through and that is the chief point to impress upon your readers in your advertising—the suspense that is maintained.

We would build the greater part of the advertising on the title, the star, the director and a few other points and not talk very much about the story, for the word-of-mouth advertising that you are going to get on this picture is going to result from the very element of suspense that we have suggested.

Keep within the limits of the story in your selling talks. You do not need to make this production more suggestive than the story itself. There is something of the sex element brought in in the introduction, but anything that you say to make this harsh and to give the wrong impression is going to result in dissatisfied patrons. We would build the selling points around the unexpected turnings of the plot.

HERE is the story: "Dearie" Lane is employed in a flower store, and she is very much in love with Fred Millard, but she constantly keeps him from asking the final question. In the meantime during one of the visits of Fred to the flower shop there appears Mark Winfield, a rich roué, for whom "Dearie" shows a marked aversion. Just as another of the girl clerks is pinning a boutonniere on him he is seized with an attack of his heart, but is finally revived. A little later when "Dearie" and Fred are having a picnic for two he urges his point and the girl finally tells him that some time ago she yielded to the love for beautiful clothes and luxuries that she did not possess—and to Winfield.

But Fred's love is so great that he forgives this girl who is so evidently sorry for her mistakes and they marry and go to their little home to live. And even when the husband comes upon her closing a mysterious trunk he agrees to never look into it, but to regard it as "her secret."

In the meantime they have taken a boarder, a woman who is known in the cast as "The Buyer." And also the wife has gotten behind with the rent. The agent has called several times, the wife each time having the negro servant say that she is not in. Finally the owner himself comes and it proves to be none other than Mark Winfield. There is a scene which fades away as Winfield asks for a drink and next we see him stretched on the floor.

MARY MACLAREN
in "CREAKING STAIRS"

Star stock cut available at Universal Exchanges

DISCOVERY of the body is made by the woman buyer and also by the negro servant. The buyer is afraid to have her reputation ruined by what she thinks to be a murder and the negress is terrorized into the plan, so the body is carried to the attic. There is a series of tense moments here with flashes of the husband starting home on a trolley car, the scenes of the women carrying the body up the stairs, then forgetting the man's coat, which he had removed, and then the hat, which as a last resort is kicked under a couch just as the husband enters.

Then comes up a great storm, and incidentally, here are some of the finest rain scenes that have ever been put into a motion picture. At midnight the three women undertake to carry the body from the house, but the creaking stairs awaken the husband, but not in time to find out what is happening. But he finds the women are absent and when they come back with their garments dripping he accuses his wife.

But a policeman discovers the body at the place where the three have deposited it, and though they have escaped, the detectives call at the various houses he owns asking whether the roué has been there during the day. There come denials, but the husband is unconvinced. Then he finds the hat under the couch. All of his jealousy is awakened. He thinks of the trunk, and while the girl seeks to hide herself in a closet he smashed into the trunk and finds there the finery that had been given her by Winfield when they were companions. Then he understands the fine clothing that she had been wearing and which she has told him she had been sold at a reduced price by the buyer.

JUST before that moment, and after dramatic scenes, the buyer and the negro servant had both deserted her and so she was now alone with the husband. Learning the content of the trunk his savagery is all the more accentuated and with the axe chops through the door of the closet and at a moment when the audience expects that the husband is about to slay her love triumphs with her pleadings and then she confesses that she has saved these clothes that Winfield had given her merely that she might be beautiful in her husband's eyes. And then it is revealed how Winfield has dropped dead with an attack of heart failure like the one that came to him in the florist's shop. There is forgiveness in the end with a promise that they shall start anew and that there shall not be for either of them again terror or suspicion in the "creaking stairs."

It is to be borne in mind in this story that the audience does not know to the very end of the picture what happened to Winfield. The entire scene is hidden until the story of the girl is told to her husband. One who had forgotten the incident in the flower store would have believed that the young wife had killed him because of his new advances. There is an Ibsen-esque element in handling the story and it keeps the heart grip mighty strong throughout.

IN brief, the name of the star and the title of the picture should be kept the most prominent things in the display, and the name of the director, Rupert Julian, who is responsible for "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and many other of the biggest Universal successes, should be mentioned.

But keep the story element strong—that is, the suspense part of it.

You might run at the bottom of your displays on picture that you show ahead of this one a few lines reading something like this:

"Search your mind for the tensest, most baffling serial story that you have ever read in magazines or newspapers. Then come to see "Creaking Stairs" and see for yourself whether the screen can present a drama that is more tense and more baffling until the final scenes."

Mystery Should be Kept the Dominant Element Here

YOU should do one or two things before you start any of your advertising on "Creaking Stairs." Either see the picture for yourself or read very carefully the outline of it that is given in their pages.

In the first place it is not a love story, as such.

It is not a sex story. The fact of the relations of the girl and the roue are told in a single title. There are no flash-backs showing anything that happened. There are none of the offensive details brought out.

There is no case of the young wife being tempted. What has happened she has faithfully put behind her and the only things that might suggest the past are those brought in by the tenseness of the story. Therefore let your references to these points be a mere recital of fact as told in the story.

Suggestions of gruesomeness should be avoided. There are plenty of ways of telling the story without this being brought out. You see no act of violence committed, but until the very end most of the leading events are left to the imagination—and are likely to prove baffling.

MOST of you are familiar with the manner in which serials are handled by magazines and newspapers, and for that matter how they are arranged when they are made into motion pictures. There is always an effort to leave the characters at the end of the last line in a situation that will compel you to buy the next issue of the magazine or come to see the episode of the picture so that you may end your suspense.

We would suggest that this plan be followed in all of your advertising, not only in advance of the showing of the picture, but during its run.

Instead of the ordinary teaser campaign with this one, we would suggest printing cards just of the size to go into an ordinary envelope or to be enclosed with your weekly program:

"We would like to tell you the

FOR ALL ANGLES

Plenty of Material for All Campaigns You Make

NO matter whether you rely largely on newspaper work or on billboards or make your own designs, you will find ample material on "Creaking Stairs" at the various Universal exchanges. Elsewhere in these pages we have made a number of suggestions for use of the matter.

Most of the paper is illustrated here. It consists of two 1-sheets, two 3-sheets, a 6-sheet and a 24-sheet, the latter being well adapted for cut-outs for the lobby by using the face of the girl and the background of the stairs.

There are sets of 8 by 10 and 11 by 14 stills and also a special picture of the star.

For newspaper use there is ready prepared advertising in one, two and three column sizes, and also scene cuts of the same sizes for either advertising or text illustration. There is also a single column star cut.

Slides are also available. The press book is complete.

story of "Creaking Stairs," the new Mary MacLaren picture in which the American beauty of the screen will be seen at the Royal Theatre starting Monday, but we believe that it would be unfair. Its tenseness and baffling turns are the chief elements. You will get all the suspense of a serial, and the solution all in a single evening."

Then quit. We dislike to repeat warning theatre owners not to ask personal questions of their readers as to what "you" would do under certain circumstances, but with nearly every picture that we have seen this is in bad taste. It is certainly out of place here and you will distinctly weaken your appeal.

You can maintain the suspense element much better by leaving the story an impersonal proposition. This story should be kept so baffling that it should impress itself as the recital of a series of events, such as never happened before.

WE would also keep away from the "preachment" in this. As we have said, the facts of the life of "Dearie" with Winfield are shown in a single line. There are none of the scenes of the girl as a mistress, none of the suggestive details, not a situation that is improper.

There is a strong moral in the picture but we would not point it out. It shows that "the easiest way" does not pay, but the girl has realized this from the start of the picture, but it does show that it is best that there shall be utter frankness between husband and wife and that many of the troubles would have been avoided.

If "Dearie" had revealed that her trunk contained the finery that Winfield had bought for her and had destroyed then content with the beauty of her character appealing to the man who really loved her instead of mortgaged finery, and instead she had told the story of Winfield's death without seeking to hide the body there would have been no trouble. But, of course, there would also have been no plot for the picture.

But the point is that this is not a "problem" picture, that the "eternal triangle" is wiped out so far as the audience is concerned at the very start and that you know every moment that there has been no swerving from the promise of faithfulness that the bride gave at the altar.

NOW let us look at a few of the sort of selling talks that you can give your public and that are apt to bring business to the theatre:

"'Dearie' Lane had wiped the past out of her life, and she told the youth who begged her to marry him

At left, scene between the husband and wife; in center, a typical pose of the star, and at right, scene when "the buyer" leaves the girl wife to her fate everything, and he forgave. But she kept the finery not as the reminder of the past, but because she wanted to be ever charming for the man she really loved. And when the other man came back into her home she feared Suspicion, and hid what she should have told—aroused jealousy when there should have only been aith.

"And you will be just as wrought up as the husband has been. You will not know all that had happened, until the bride reveals it to you on the screen. And you will see, as he sees, that she had done no wrong."

Here is another one:

"He knew her story and had forgiven her and married her. And she was loyal in her love, but she feared the suspicions of her husband if she found that the other man had been in their home—and had died there. And the business woman who lived with the young couple feared that she could be compromised. And the negro servant feared on general principles. But they found that trying to hide something always brings the wrong conclusion.

"But 'Dearie' found, too, that love is the greatest thing in the world and that when Truth and Faith march with it there can be no resistance. You will find the 'eternal triangle' turning the other way in 'Creaking Stairs,' not in accusing her of unfaithfulness, but pointing to her innocence—if she had only let her husband know."

HERE is a particularly striking advertising cut furnished by Universal which shows the feet of Mary MacLaren as she is climbing the stairs with the title wrongly placed. This is shown here. We could suggest that this would make a good mystery advertisement if it is accompanied by the proper sort of selling lines. And we would offer:

"She was innocent, but she feared the suspicion in her husband's mind. And so she tried to hide the harmless truth from him. But the stairs creaked and awakened jealousy in his heart and terror in her breast. And you will thrill through the whole story until the very end of the picture."

"'Dearie' had never loved a man before until she found the one who had become her husband. But she had loved beautiful clothes and she could not give them up, though she has wiped the other man out of her life. And when he sought to come back into it her innocent little secret almost brought a tragedy. The stairs creaked, and she trembled. They creaked again, and she almost lost her husband's love. But Truth and Faith conquered and Love ruled triumphant."

TALK about gripping drama! Talk about thrills—and suspense—and everything exciting that makes a photodrama a corker—well, you'll get them all as you never had them before in "CREAKING STAIRS," made by the same man who produced "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," featuring Mary MacLaren, the American Beauty of the Screen. Be sure to see this great picture. You'll think of it—dream of it—weeks afterwards. Now playing. Don't miss it.

This two-column cut and others require only name of the theatre

"Better less charming attire than a secret from a husband. 'Dearie' learned this after the stairs creaked, accusing her of something of which she was innocent. This master suspense story will prove that nothing pays in the end but truth."

"Fear is a terrible thing—especially when one is innocent. But the stairs creaked and accused 'Dearie.' She feared to tell him the truth, because of the terror that was in her soul. But when Love came forward with the truth Fear stole out into the night before the light of Eternal Happiness."

WE believe that there should be a series of advertisements on this picture in advance. We have purposely made the selling lines that we have suggested incomplete, and we have with equal deliberation made it plain that there is none of the eternal triangle portrayed in the main body of the picture. We believe that in that way more patrons will be brought into the theatre and more satisfied patrons sent away.

Most exhibitors know from experience that they have two appeals to make with a picture that has anything of the sex element in it—to appeal to those who want to see something off color, and the other to keep it clean. But if you appeal to the sensuousness and then show none of the suggestive scenes the people who came to see them are disappointed—just as much so as if you offered an improper film under the guarantee that it has nothing in it to give offence.

We repeat for the second time that beyond the title that makes plain the former relations of "Dearie" and Mark Winfield there is nothing off-color in this. You may get a through impression at times that something is about to happen, but the point is that what you expect to happen does not occur, but the story is always taking an entirely different shift.

So keep up the reference to this all through your display. In all of its paper and ready prepared advertising Universal has called this a "Master Suspense Drama." It certainly is and you will make no mistake in featuring this point to the very limit.

At left, one of the one-sheets, in the center a six-sheet and at right one of the three-sheets. Note that the paper all plays up "thrilling suspense drama" and doesn't give the story away

Star, Director and Lead Should All be Played

WE would advise attention be given three persons in connection with this film. First there is the star, who is doubtless already mighty well known in your community; Rupert Julian, who occupies a position at the very top of directors, and Jack Mulhall, who is one of the most popular leading men and especially in your play the serial, "The Brass Bullet," in which he took an important part.

Miss MacLaren's last picture was "Vanity Pool," and according to the box office reports has been going over to big business. Before that she appeared in "Bread" and "The Model's Confession." She was discovered by Lois Weber and made her first big success in "Shoes," a picture which caused much comment. Some of her other pictures have been "The Mysterious Mrs. M," "Saving the Family Name," and "Money Madness."

You will find an interesting story about her in the Universal press sheet and most newspapers are willing to print these accounts of a star's career. It should be used in connection with a cut of Miss MacLaren, either one of the stock cuts that are available at the exchange or for a cut made from one of the stills from "Creaking Stairs."

WE would also suggest the use of pictures of her in your newspaper advertising if you have your own designs made. There are a number of striking stills furnished with these pictures, but most of them show her in very emotional scenes and we would therefore advise a straight picture that shows her in all of her beauty. We would advise you not to use the illustration that appears on the first page of the advertising section, for that might be misleading. It might cause the impression that this represents an attack upon her by some man, while as a matter of fact the hand is that of her husband.

BY ITSELF

Mere Use of the Title Will Furnish Teaser Campaign

YOU have no reason to go into any elaborate teaser campaign in connection with this picture. The mere title and the featuring of the suspense of the story is sufficient teaser without going into further detail.

Most audiences like mystery stories provided they are exploited right, but it is ridiculous to expect one to draw if you say to the public, "Here is a wonderful mystery drama," and then take the trouble to tell in the reading matter columns of the newspaper or your program just what the picture is about from start to finish.

Make them come to the theatre to find out about this.

There is a very attractive still which we have reproduced and which shows a love scene at the start of the story. There is another which shows her in the arms of her husband. If you can combine one of these striking cuts and at the same time have drawn in the effect of the stairs and keep the title strong you will have a most effective display.

No matter what suggestion be made to you, do not allow anything to tempt you to fail to take advantage of this striking title and its mystery possibilities.

THERE should be attention called to the fact that the director of this picture, Rupert Julian, also made and played the title role of "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." Coming as one of the first of the war pictures and has been seen by thousands all over the country. That will be a recommendation for this latest Julian offering.

He is an Englishman by birth and a veteran of the Boer war, with a long stage experience in the companies of the best known of English players. His career on the screen has been meteoric from the start, some of his other big successes having been "We Are French" and "Mother o' Mine."

Jack Mulhall has been in motion pictures since the Biograph days and he is one of the most popular of leading men. In university sections you can feature him as a college man, for he is a graduate of Columbia.

Clarissa Selwyn is also well known to photoplay followers, some of her appearances having been in "Smashing Through," "The Double Standard," "Come Through" and "The Bride's Awakening."

There is an interesting feature in the fact that Miss MacLaren's negro maid plays that part in the picture and so you have no question about a genuine negress here. It will make a neat little story for your newspaper.

Now in the Universal press sheet you will find most of the press matter devoted to stories about the various players and little incidents, avoiding telling the story. We strongly advise following that course.

THERE is striking paper for your outside and lobby exploitation, all of these different designs keeping the mystery element strong, except for one of the 3-sheets, which carries a particularly striking picture of Miss MacLaren and which will attract attention in the lobby.

You will find no reference to sex questions, in fact nothing about the character of the production except the fact that this is a suspense drama.

Striking 24-sheet supplies an excellent lobby cut-out

Simple Lobby Display Gets the Most Attention

THIS is another case where there should be utter simplicity in your lobby display. As a matter of fact you do not need to use anything more than the name of the picture in big letters, together with scenes from the productions and pictures of the star.

But there is a strikingly simple display that you can make, the position of it depending on the arrangement of your lobby. If you can build at one side the start of the stairs and then have them turning across the front of the house it will be the best. Have them leading up to a door bearing a huge question mark and on the stairs have the figure of a girl in bridal raiment. You can readily borrow this for the engagement from one of your other merchants.

If you haven't the room to start these with the floor level you can suspend the stairs above the heads of the crowds and get the same effect with possibly a smaller figure.

"SUSPENSE DRAMA" perfectly describes this one. There is not a laugh in it and so you want to surround the rest of the bill with comedy. We would not be afraid to use both a comedy and an animated cartoon, one preceding and one following the feature, if you follow such an arrangement.

Keep your overture light, and in fact all of the music of that character. Reference to the cue sheet published here will show you that "Dearie" is the theme. We would suggest that it would be a mighty good idea to have a girl or a quartet sing this just before the star of the picture and then let the orchestra or organ continue the selection right in through the title.

Don't let your musician or stage employes suggest to you that you work in imitations of creaking stairs. Instead of effectiveness you are more apt to get a howl of laughter that will turn the drama into burlesque.

You will find that the music setting printed below gives you light selections for a considerable portion of the picture with dramatic movements to carry the more tense scenes. Put this picture on in your most dignified form and then letter the preludes that go before and the comedies that follow give it the necessary relief to have a well rounded presentation.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

At the Ince Plant

Dorothy Dalton last week began work on a new picture at the Ince studios at Culver City. It is to be a comedy drama, in which Miss Dalton plays the part of a saleswoman, who, according to John Lynch, the author, "spends half her life in bum hotels and the other half in catching bum railroad trains." It is said that she will be surrounded by an excellent cast, in which will be included Douglas MacLean and Edwin Stevens.

Enid Bennett has concluded her new play called "Nemesis," made under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince. A novel feature of the picture is a courtroom scene with judges, lawyers and others in which it is said no flaws can be discovered. That is to say, the scene was photographed in a Los Angeles courtroom when the official clerk, bailiff and courtroom employees were used. Every movement, under the guidance of these officials, it is said, was in strict accordance with California rules of practice.

Charles Ray has begun a new picture for Thomas H. Ince in which he plays the character of Ulysses S. Grant Briggs. The character was assigned to him by Mr. Ince. The picture is being directed by Jerome Storm. Ray starts out as a volunteer who intends to whip the Kaiser single-handed. The war ends before he leaves the training camp, which is the greatest disappointment of his life.

In announcing last week the Thomas H. Ince release of "Extravagance" for February 9, the following facts are given: "Author, John Lynch; director, Victor L. Schertzinger; supervised by Thomas H. Ince. Members of the cast—Dorothy Dalton, Charles Clary, J. Barney Sherry, Donald McDonald and Philo McCullough." It is a story in which the author refers to as "the disease of the century—a craving on the part of the principals to seem something that one is not."

Paramount-Artcraft

There was some unusual activity last week at the Famous Players-Lasky Company when at least four companies that had hitherto been idle for a few weeks, resumed production work. They were the companies of Cecil B. DeMille, Wallace Reid, Lila Lee and Vivian Martin. Mr. DeMille is preparing a story for the screen that was written by Edgar Selwyn, the playwright and producer. What stories have been selected for Reid, Martin and Lee have not been announced.

STUDIOS ACTIVE

Dorothy Dalton Begins New Film as Hart Finishes

THE Metro studios continued to be a very busy place last week. Besides the Madame Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern," which is about finished, Hale Hamilton, Viola Dana, Anna Q. Nilsson, May Allison and Bert Lytell companies are producing. Hamilton and Miss Dana have begun the filming of new pictures.

It was announced from the Lasky studios that last week the Cecil B. DeMille, Wallace Reid, Vivian Martin and Lila Lee companies would resume production work. The Ethel Clayton company is now in the middle of a new filmplay.

Work on a new Dorothy Dalton picture was begun at the Ince studios, and at the Vitagraph plant it was announced that Earl Williams' newest screen vehicle has been titled "The Usurper." The Gladys Brockwell company of the Fox studios left this week for San Francisco.

William S. Hart has completed "The Poppy Husband," and Douglas Fairbanks is in the midst of production on a new play. At the Goldwyn studios Pauline Frederick, Mae Marsh, Mabel Normand, Tom Moore and other stars are busy at work on current productions. It is also announced that Owen Moore will soon begin work at the Goldwyn plant after an absence of nearly two years from the screen.

The Universal plant continued active last week, while production work continues unabated at the Brunton, Chaplin and other studios in Los Angeles and Hollywood.

Gloria Swanson, who has been ill with influenza, is able to go about in her car again. She was a visitor at the Lasky studios last week.

Ann Little, Paramount-Artcraft star, was ill last week, believed to have influenza. She contends that it is a bad cold, but her physician has forbidden any visitors to her sick room.

Edward Jose has finished scenes for his Salvation Army picture, an eight-reel Paramount-Artcraft special. More than 750 people, representing a number of winter visitors in Hollywood, took part in a wedding scene. There were more people on the Lasky lot on this day than has been the case in several months. When the final scenes of the picture were filmed in Los Angeles, Mr. Jose went to New York, where the picture will be completed.

Fox Studio Doings

The William Fox Film Corporation posted a notice at its plant that Henry Lehrman, who has been producing comedies for the Fox Corporation, is no longer with the company. Incidentally Lehrman's name was stricken from the fences and from every other place about the Fox studios where it appeared in connection with Fox productions. Mr. Lehrman issued a statement that he has left the company voluntarily, and that he intends to produce for his own organization, which is now being formed. He said under his contract he was not making enough money with the Fox corporation.

The Frank Lloyd Company, headed by Gladys Brockwell, left last week for San Francisco, where a number of scenes will be filmed in Miss Brockwell's new play. The company will also visit the San Quentin prison. Some of the members of the company making the trip were Jean Haller, business manager; Fred Granville, cameraman; Scotty Dunlap, Mr. Lloyd's assistant; Billy Sheer and Ben Scott, members of Miss Brockwell's supporting cast.

Winfield Sheehan, general manager for the Fix Film Corporation, left Los Angeles Wednesday, January 22, for New York, after a visit of several weeks on the Pacific Coast. Before departing for the East he announced the organization of a new comedy company under the joint direction of Fred Fishback and Jack Blythstone to continue the production of Sunshine comedies, Henry Lehrman having severed his connection with the corporation. The new comedies will be produced at the Fox studios on Western avenue. On his way East Mr. Sheehan will visit in New Orleans, Atlanta and Washington. He is accompanied by Arvid Gilstrom, who has been directing the Lee children.

Before departing Mr. Sheehan gave out a statement that Sunshine Comedies of the Fox organization during the next year would number twenty-six two-reel releases, and that at the present time these would be made under the direction of Fred Fishback and J. G. Blythstone, each producing separately.

Mr. Sheehan also announced that William Fox would shortly introduce a new star in the person of Elinor Field, who has played in D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, Artcraft, and other subjects for the past year. Al Ray has been selected as leading man for this new star's debut subject, and Arthur Rosson, late director of Douglas Fairbanks and Louise Glaum, will direct the filming of the first picture.

About Metro Players

The final scenes in Madame Nazimova's super production, "The Red Lantern," were being filmed last week at the Metro studios. It is announced that the production will be finished this week. The production is made under the direction of Albert Capellani, and will be the most pretentious vehicle in which Nazimova has appeared in pictures, it is claimed. During last week much time was devoted to photographing a reproduction of street fighting in Pekin during the Boxer rebellion, or uprising. As a result hundreds of Chinese were circulating about the Metro plant, while valiant soldiers from the United States and Allied Nations were providing lively entertainment for their erstwhile Chinese enemies.

Rose Mullaney, formerly with the United Booking Offices in New York and Philadelphia, has been engaged by Metro as casting director, it was announced last week. She succeeds Horace Williams.

It was moving day at the Metro studios Friday, January 17. Every bit of furniture at the old plant was moved to the new studios, while new furniture made its appearance at the new studios, also. The day was also Director General Maxwell Karger's birthday, and a little ceremony in honor of the occasion was staged in his office by employees at the studios. The ceremony was conducted under the personal supervision of David Thompson, studio manager. The new studios are located at Sunset Boulevard and Caheungga avenue.

Here and There

Bessie Barriscale is now in the midst of her first production under her new Robertson and Cole contract calling for sixteen pictures at a price popularly referred to as $1,000,000. The title of the play is "Hearts Asleep," and is being directed by Howard Hickman. Henry Woodward is her leading man. Others in the supporting cast are Vola Vale, Frank Whitson, Thomas Guise and Mrs. George Hernandez. The story was provided by Maie B. Hazey and the continuity was written by Fred Myton.

New York men are not as chivalrous as we of the West, Bill says, and they do not even take their hats off when there's a lady in the elevator. Equal suffrage has taken effect there with respect to cars in the subway, and after receiving several freezing glances from women who thought Bill was a flirt, he glued himself to the seat. We regret to report that Bill's in a bad way. He tried to dodge automobiles and look at the beauties on Fifth Avenue at the same time, and now he's a nervous wreck.

World Says Big Demand for "Better 'Ole"

As a result of the success of the play in New York, World Pictures says that the exhibitors throughout the country have demanded the screen production of "The Better 'Ole" to such an extent that it may be necessary to issue at least 150 prints of this subject.

The manner in which the picture version of the play will be distributed is not to damage the play by running the picture simultaneously with the stage version, but to take advantage of the success attained by the play on the local stage and then release the picture in order to profit by the impression it created in the legitimate houses.

Ray Ahead of Schedule

In the completing of pictures scheduled, Charles Ray, the young Thomas H. Ince star in Paramount releases, is known as one of the most indefatigable workers in the screen profession.

For months he has been jumping from one production immediately into another at the Ince studio, with an intermission of not more than a day or two between pictures, and the result is that he is far ahead of his release schedule with four completed productions.

PROJECTION DEPARTMENT

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

729 7th Avenue
NEW YORK CITY

Dear Mr. Projectionist:

Since the death of Mr. Cory the Projection Department of Motion Picture News has continued to appear and has contained many valuable and instructive articles. More of the same nature are now under preparation.

All questions and inquiries will be taken care of pending the selection of a man worthy to take Mr. Cory's place. Therefore continue to send in any and all suggestions and questions. You may depend upon receiving authoritative replies as in the past.

We have now under consideration four men, one of whom will take over the Projection Department of the "News" and develop it beyond anything which has ever been attempted in the Motion Picture Industry in the past.

We hope to be able to make an announcement within the next three weeks as to who will have charge of the Technical Department of Motion Picture News.

THE CLEMMER THEATRE, SEATTLE, WASH., IS ANOTHER OF THOSE FINE WESTERN THEATRES THAT HAS INSTALLED THE ESTEY THEATRE ORGAN TO SATISFY THE CROWDS THAT COME EVERY DAY

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

We can give you the names of many high-class, successful motion picture theatres where the Estey Pipe Organ furnishes all the music and has played a prominent part in their success.

The Estey Theatre Organ

is the best music for the interpretation of photoplays and for a music program—for overtures, music between pictures and intermissions.

Why don't you visit some of the theatres that have installed the Estey Theatre Pipe Organ? They must have a reason for doing it. Find out for yourself.

We will be glad to give you the name of the theatre nearest you that has an Estey Organ. Without cost to you we will send an expert to look at your theatre, tell you what kind of an organ you could use best, and give you an estimate of the cost.

THE ESTEY ORGAN COMPANY, BRATTLEBORO, VERMONT

You can hear the Estey Pipe Organ at any of these branches:

Help Uncle Sam

COOPERATE with the Government in every possible way—This should be the watchword of every true American. Here are two ways:

First. The active promotion of the Thrift Stamp and War Saving Stamp campaign right now.

Second. The promotion of the Fifth Liberty Loan when it is ready to be floated early in the spring. Talk it up now and sell it when the time comes. Fill evrey one with enthusiasm, for the country will need every cent which the people can scrape together.

The theatre men of the country, which means owners, managers and projectionists, can all be of vital assistance. They can use the screen in a way which will help Uncle Sam as no one other agent can.

This can be best done through slides which the projectionist can make in a very few minutes and which if made in numbers can be repeated a few days apart to great advantage.

We are giving in the next column the text of twenty-two slide wordings, all of which should be used. They have been prepared by the Liberty Loan Committee of the Second Federal Reserve District. They are short, have the needed punch, and will turn the trick.

It is our hope that the thousand odd members of the National Anti-Misframe League will make complete sets of these slides as well as every other live projectionist in our great industry.

Remember it is your bit toward helping Uncle Sam.

Questions
Answered*Proper Care of a Westinghouse Motor Generator Equipment in a Motion Picture Booth*

THE following instructions for the care of a motor-generator set if carefully observed by the Projectionist will mean more efficient service immediately, and insure the motion picture equipment against failure to give the extended service for which it was intended.

1. General—Care should be exercised in unpacking to protect the various units from damage. In no case remove the blocking between the motor and generator until the set is anchored—otherwise the bearings may be thrown out of alignment.

Typical Illustration of a Westinghouse Motor-Generator Set in a Motion Picture Booth, showing Foundation for Motor-Generator

To keep installation charges at a minimum the equipment should be installed in or near the booth itself. Wherever installed the location must be clean, dry, well ventilated so that the air temperature will never exceed 104 deg. Fahrenheit, so placed that inspection and cleaning is easy.

2. Oiling—Use clean dynamo oil. Keep overflow plugs open. Withdraw old oil occasionally, substituting fresh oil—the old oil can be filtered and used again. After the motor-generator is started, raise the covers of all bearings and see that the oil rings are rotating properly and carrying oil up on the journals.

3. Bearings—Have spare bearings on hand to avoid delay in case of repair. Bearings will overheat if there is poor lubrication due to poor grade or insufficient quantity of lubricant or failure of oil rings to revolve. Poor alignment or leveling, causing excessive end thrust or binding, will overheat the bearing as will rough bearing surface or bent shaft. If a bearing becomes hot, feed a heavy lubricant copiously. If no relief is afforded, shut down the motor-generator, keeping the armature revolving slowly until the bearing is cool to prevent sticking or "freezing."

4. Generator Excitation—When a generator is started, it may fail to build up its voltage properly. This may occur even though the generator operated perfectly during the preceding run. This may be due to one or more of the following causes:

- (a) Slow speed.
- (b) Open shunt-field circuit, caused by faulty connections or defective field coil or field rheostat.
- (c) Open armature or commutating-field circuit.
- (d) Incorrect setting of brushes.
- (e) Reversed series or shunt coils.

Grinding Brushes on a Westinghouse Motor-Generator Set

(f) Poor brush contact due to dirty commutator or brushes sticking in holders.

(g) Loss of residual magnetism.

Examine all connections; try a temporarily increased pressure on the brushes; look for a broken or burned out resistor coil in rheostat. An open circuit in the field winding may sometimes be traced with the aid of a magneto and bell; but this is not an infallible test as some magnetos will not ring through a circuit of such high resistance as some field windings here, even though the winding be intact. If no open circuit is found in the rheostat or in the field winding, the trouble is probably in the armature. But if it be found that nothing is wrong with the connections or the winding it may be necessary to excite the field from another generator or some other outside source. Calling the generator that we desire to excite, No. 1, and the other machine from which current is to be drawn, No. 2, the following procedure should be followed:

Open all switches and remove all brushes from generator No. 1; connect the positive brushholder of generator No. 1 with the positive brushholder of generator No. 2; also connect the negative holders of the machines together (it is desirable to complete the circuit through a switch protected by a fuse of about 5 amperes). Close the switch. If the shunt winding of generator No. 1 is all right, its field will show considerable magnetism. If possible, reduce the voltage of generator No. 2 before opening the exciting circuit; then break the connections. If this cannot be done, set the field rheostat contact arm of generator No. 1 on button marked "IN," then open the switch very slowly and gradually lengthen the arc, which will be formed, until it breaks.

Westinghouse Motor-Generator Set

Westinghouse SK Generator Frame with Field Windings Complete

If a new machine refuses to build up voltage and the connections apparently are correct, reverse the field connections; i. e., interchange the field wires which are connected to the positive and negative terminals of the generator. If this interchange of connections does no good, re-establish the original connections and locate the fault as previously advised.

5. Brushes—All brush faces resting on the commutator should be fitted to the commutator so that they make good contact over the entire area. This can be most easily accomplished after the brushholders have been adjusted and the brushes inserted. Lift one set of brushes so that they will not be forced against the commutator. Place a piece of sandpaper against the commutator with the sanded side towards the brushes. Replace one brush in its holder and allow the spring to force it against the sandpaper. Draw the sandpaper in the direction of rotation under the brush, releasing the pressure as the paper is drawn back, being careful to keep the ends of the paper as close to the commutator surface as possible and thus avoid rounding the ends of the brush. After the first brush is properly ground, it should be lifted sufficiently to prevent it being forced against the commutator, after which the remaining brushes of the set may be similarly ground one at a time.

By this means a satisfactory contact is quickly secured, each set of brushes being similarly treated in turn. If the brushes are copper plated, their edges should be slightly beveled, so that the copper does not come in contact with the commutator.

Make frequent inspection to see that:

- (a) Brushes are not sticking in holders.
- (b) Pig-tail shunts are properly attached to brushes and holders.
- (c) Tension is readjusted as the brush wears.
- (d) Copper plating is cut back so it does not make contact with commutator.

Westinghouse Type CS Motor Frame, Showing Windings

(e) Worn-out brushes are replaced before they reach their wearing limit and break contact with the commutator.

(f) Any free copper picked up by the face of the brushes is removed.

6. Commutator—The commutator is perhaps the most important part of the machine in that it is most sensitive to abuse. Under normal conditions it should require little attention beyond frequent inspection. The surface should always be kept smooth, and if, through extreme carelessness, neglect or accident, it becomes badly roughened, the armature should be removed and the commutator turned down in an engine lathe.

Heating of Commutator may result from any of the following causes:

- (a) Overload.
- (b) Sparking.
- (c) Too great brush pressure.

Bucking is the very expressive term descriptive of the arcing between adjacent brush arms. In general, bucking is caused by excessive voltage between commutator bars, or by abnormally low surface resistance on the commutator between brushholders of opposite polarity. Any condition tending to produce poor commutation increases the danger of bucking. Among other causes are the following:

- (a) Rough or dirty commutator.
- (b) A drop of water on the commutator from the roof, leaky steam pipes or other source.
- (c) Short-circuits on the line producing excessive overloads.

Sparking at the brushes may be due to any one of the following causes:

- (a) The machine may be overloaded.
- (b) The brushes may not be set exactly on the neutral position. If so, the neutral should be determined by running the machine in both directions of rotation and obtaining the same voltage at full load current in both directions.
- (c) The brushes may be welded in the holders or have reached their limit of wear.
- (d) The brushes may not be fitted to the surface of the commutator.
- (e) The brushes may not bear on the commutator with sufficient pressure.
- (f) The brushes may be burned on the ends.
- (g) The commutator may be rough. If so, it should be smoothed.
- (h) A commutator bar may be loose or may project above the others.
- (i) The commutator may be dirty, oily or worn out.
- (j) The carbon brushes may be of an unsuitable grade.
- (k) The brushes may not be equally spaced around the periphery of the commutator.

(l) Some brushes may have extra pressure and may be taking more than their share of the current.

(m) The contact between some brush pigtails and brushholders may be poor, forcing the other brushes to carry too much current.

- (n) High mica.
- (o) Vibration or chattering of the brushes.

These are the more common causes, but sparking may be due to an open circuit or loose connection in the armature. This trouble is indicated by a bright spark which appears to pass completely around the commutator, and may be recognized by the scarring of the commutator at the point of open circuit. If a lead from the armature winding to the commutator becomes loose or broken it will draw a bright spark as the break passes the brush position. This trouble can be readily located, because the insulation on each side of the disconnected bar will be more or less pitted.

Ballast Resistor

The commutator should run smoothly and true, and have a dark glossy surface.

7. Heating of Field Coils.—Heating of field coils may result from any of the following causes:

- (a) Too low speed.
- (b) Too high voltage.
- (c) Too great forward or backward lead of brushes.
- (d) Partial short-circuit of one coil.
- (e) Overload.

8. Heating of Armature.—Heating of armature may result from any of the following causes:

- (a) Too great load.
- (b) A partial short-circuit of two coils heating the two particular coils affected.
- (c) Short-circuits or grounds in armature winding or commutator.
- (d) Bad commutation with consequent large circulating currents in armature coils undergoing commutation.

An Appreciation

Mr. E. K. Gillett,
Editor, Motion Picture News,

Dear Sir:

It is with the deepest emotion that I heard of the death of Technical Editor, Alfred S. Cory, on Saturday last. I had been in correspondence with him while he was in the hospital suffering with pneumonia and the last letter I received was from his home a few days ago when he appeared to be well on the road of recovery. His over anxiety to renew his work however proved too much for him, a relapse followed, and the sad end.

As a reader of the News, I have followed Mr. Cory's writings from the very beginning in 1916, when he commenced his series of articles on color cinematography which stand as the most complete and systematic account of the subject to date. These articles were followed up by chapters on the theory of photography—sencitometry, resolving power, spectrophotometry, etc.—which likewise were the first up to date articles of the kind to be presented in a collected form to the American public. Although highly technical in their nature they had the effect of educating and stimulating those engaged in the industry to the fact that theory is the basis of practice.

Mr. Cory's previous college education and practical experience as a motion picture operator and later as a camera man made him particularly qualified to handle such subjects. His later articles on optics as applied to motion picture taking and projection reflected his personal enthusiasm for optics which was his hobby for the past two years.

I became personally acquainted with Mr. Cory at the meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers in Rochester, 1917, and since that time he has been a very close and faithful friend.

Two of his qualities will always stand out pre-eminently in my mind, first his enthusiasm and love for his work, and secondly his industry and thoroughness. With such qualities anyone may hope to succeed. Whatever problem he attempted to solve he was not content to leave it until he had delved to the very depths and had a clear understanding of it.

In argument as well as in writing his masterly command of English stood him well, backed by his store of knowledge, much of it acquired by a study of books. His home was a veritable book store. In his last letter to me he was anticipating a large shipment of scientific books from Europe and if his health had been spared much midnight oil would have been burned before they were stored away on the shelves again. His knowledge was not merely theoretical. He was skeptical on most things until he had tried and proven them by experiment to his own satisfaction.

Although the nature of his work did not afford him much opportunity for original research, he was recently conducting numerous computations in optics, especially on the subject of aspheric condensers, which will no doubt play an important role in optical advance of the future.

Mr. Cory had a most pleasing and inspiring personality and his loss is not only a personal one, but a loss to the motion picture industry and to science.

Yours sincerely,

J. I. CRABTREE,

Technique*Selection of Electrical Equipment for Studio Lighting*

By H. F. O'Brien

PRACTICALLY all motion picture studios of any size at all illuminate their stages with any one or a combination of all of the three following sources of artificial light: the arc lamp, the Cooper Hewitt lamp, and the incandescent globe, the latter being very little used for this work.

When it comes to deciding what kind of electrical system will best serve the needs of a studio we find that we have really met quite a problem. So many different factors enter into the decision that it requires serious thought from many angles to select the proper system. Let us consider some of the lighting problems that have arisen in some of the large studios in and about Los Angeles, where as we all know we can find more square feet of stage than in any other section of the United States.

The most common combination employed in studio lighting is that of the arc lamp and the Cooper Hewitt lamp. This combination prevails in all the larger studios here with but a single exception.

It is not my intention to discuss the relative merits of the various types of lamps used. It seems to be largely a matter of personal opinion with the camera men and directors. I prefer to confine my remarks to the merits of the electrical equipment best suited to supply these various lighting systems. In doing so it will, however, be necessary to state that both the arc light and the Cooper Hewitt are very susceptible to fluctuations of voltage. To obtain perfect or nearly perfect results in the photography it is necessary to obtain constant or nearly constant voltage on the lighting circuits. Most any chief electrician at a studio will concede that this is one of his greatest objects in life.

Now, if an arc light is used on alternating current, we all know that the crater, which is the principal source of light, does not remain fixed but changes from one carbon to the other at each alternation, which on the ordinary frequency of 60 cycles would be 120 times per second. Using the same arc on a direct current system the crater, of course, remains fixed in the positive carbon. Strange as it may seem to the inexperienced, the differences in light intensity of an arc on an AC circuit are easily distinguished by an expert camera man or director and is commonly called "flicker." Many studios feel that they obtain satisfactory results with their AC lighting, but in double exposure or fade-outs where there is a possibility of the shutter of the camera synchronizing with this flicker it is obvious that it is impossible to obtain perfect or even good results.

While the Cooper Hewitt lamp gives practically the same results on alternating current that it does on direct, it is generally conceded that the control equipment of these lamps operate with less trouble on direct current. This brings us to the conclusion that considering matters only from the viewpoint of obtaining the best results in photography the direct current system is the best for studio lighting.

Considering other viewpoints we find it is generally somewhat difficult to obtain direct current on the stage, in fact the direct current distribution systems of ten or fifteen years ago are practically obsolete today. I know of only one small studio that could obtain DC directly from the power company's distribution system in this city, and we probably use more kilowatts per person in Southern California than in any other part of the country. The fact that DC cannot be purchased in large quantities makes it necessary for the studios to purchase alternating current power and either rectify it or generate direct current. Such installations are expensive from the standpoint of cost but the results obtained from them are valuable, so much so that all large studios in this vicinity with two exceptions have installed some kind of a DC system. One of these exceptions is now contemplating such an installation, so I feel that such preponderance of facts and results of operation leave little room for argument between the two systems; and I might further add that I have never heard of a camera man or director who ever worked on DC that was ever satisfied with AC thereafter.

As alternating current power can generally be purchased for less money than direct current can be generated, a combination of the two systems is most generally employed and excellent results can be obtained in this manner.

We now come to what we consider the more vital part of this discussion; i.e., the relative merits of the different types of machines necessary to supply current to these two systems.

Where the two systems are used in combination, which as previously stated is the most general condition, it will be found that the AC is used primarily for the overhead lighting of a "set," while if possible, all the broadsides and shot lamps are on DC. Since there are fewer types of apparatus to be considered in an AC installation let us dispose of these first.

Ordinarily the AC power lines enter the studio on a three-wire three-phase 2,200-volt circuit, this circuit is carried to the powerhouse where it enters a bank of transformers, the voltage is reduced to either 110-220-volt three-wire circuit or 110-volt three-wire three-phase circuit. Protective apparatus in the nature of an oil circuit breaker or high tension fuse blocks are provided on the high voltage side of the transformers. All low tension distribution feeders should be fused or protected with circuit.

Although practically every studio here has a three-wire 110-220-volt distribution system on their stages, there are a few who advocate two-wire 110-volt systems, the only advantage being that it is not necessary to balance the load on a two-wire system; however the two-wire system is quite a little more expensive to install as it requires considerably more copper for the same load. This reason alone would practically prohibit such an installation at any studio where the distance from the powerhouse to the stage was much in excess of 100 feet.

Now, if we desire to get the best possible results from an AC system, we can install an automatic induction regulator in the 2,200-volt three-phase power circuit. The function of this regulator is to smooth out all the voltage fluctuations in the source of supply and to compensate for the ohmic drop in the line when the load is thrown on.

To those not familiar with such a regulator it is surprising to see what excellent results it will produce. Our regulator can be adjusted to maintain any desired voltage within three-quarters of a volt, and can be adjusted to regulate from a no-load to full load in five seconds time. So when the director called for "lights" and five seconds later "camera" the regulator would have performed its duty and the voltage in the line would remain practically constant while the lights were on.

These regulators are motor operated and entirely automatic, our primary and secondary relays controlling all operations require practically no attention. Such a regulator need only have a portion of the capacity of the transformers or circuits it controls; for example, a 60-KVA regulator will control a 300-KVA load.

Thus far we have considered practically all the AC equipment generally used in studio lighting. Let us now consider the more complex problems we find when direct current systems are employed. As previously stated it is generally cheaper in most localities to purchase AC power than it is to generate it in an isolated plant, hence all of the studios I know of purchase AC power to run motor generator sets which deliver direct current.

Since we have agreed that voltage regulation was a most important factor in obtaining good results in studio lighting, it might be well to define "voltage regulation" as being the percentage of normal line voltage that we find in the variation of voltage on that circuit; for example, on a 110-volt circuit we find the voltmeter varies from 104 to 115 volts. This is eleven volts variation. This regulation would be 10 per cent.

Each different type of motor generator set has its own peculiar characteristics which make it more or less suited to some particular application. We will first consider the type most generally used.

This is a two-unit set consisting of an induction motor direct connected to, and mounted on the same base with, a compound wound 110-220-volt three-wire direct current generator.

The reason for using a compound wound generator is no doubt obvious, because it is the only type of generator tending to maintain a constant voltage under a wide range of loads, and the compounding can be adjusted so that different results can be obtained. For studio work it is desirable to have the generator slightly overcompounded to compensate for the line drop as the load increases.

Those of us who have had much experience around a studio know that the limiting factor of what a machine will carry is not what it reads on the nameplate, but what the copper in the circuit will stand, and bus bar copper makes very good fuses in most studios. Overloads as high as 150 per cent are not uncommon.

We might also use a synchronous instead of an induction motor. The synchronous has a higher power factor, which means the power bill will be a little less, and its speed is practically constant over a wide range of voltage fluctuation. On the other hand an induction motor is easier to start and will hang on and stay with a load better than a synchronous under most circumstances. As these machines are often operated by inexperienced men you can see why the induction motor is more generally used.

Another type of motor generator is finding favor, but before we discuss it, let us remember that in order to obtain a three-wire system from a direct current generator, one of the two means must be employed; i.e., balance coils must be inserted in the armature circuit to obtain the neutral point for the third wire, or a balancer set must be used for the same purpose. With either of these devices precaution must be used in balancing the load on both sides of the neutral, for if the load is so unbalanced that the current flowing in the neutral is in excess of the capacity of the balance coils on set then serious trouble will follow.

Bearing this fact in mind we have in our Los Angeles shop constructed two different three-unit sets and delivered both to the Robert Brunton Studios. These sets consist of two similar generators, each 110-volt machines, with an induction motor mounted between them, all three units being direct connected.

The first one of these was a small 50-KW set, but after a year's service another similar set of 120-KW was ordered as they were greatly pleased with the results. In such a set the generators are permanently connected in parallel, the neutral being obtained at this connection, no balance coils being required. In this manner it is not so necessary to exercise a great deal of care in balancing the load as each generator acts practically as a single unit.

Another somewhat novel equipment to be used in this work is under construction in our shop for Thos. Ince's new studios. This is a 250-KW rotary converter which will be equipped with balance coils to obtain three-wire distribution on the DC side. The application of a rotary for this service would not be practical unless very good voltage regulation could be obtained on the AC side, for as you know, the ratio of the DC voltage to the AC voltage of a rotary is absolutely fixed. In this particular instance, however, the rotary will be supplied from a three-phase 2,200-volt feeder circuit equipped with an induction regulator so the regulation will be within 2 or 3 per cent, which is very good.

We also have under construction a 300-KW two-unit set for Metro Pictures Corporation. This set will be equipped with a balancer set of 400-amperes capacity, and we are building switchboards that will provide for the parallel operation of this set with smaller units.

It might be well here to consider briefly some of the more important factors in the switchboard equipment. Let me state that out here in California we are pioneering in that our State has adopted and is enforcing some very strict industrial safety regulations which were approved by the Bureau of Standards some two years ago. These regulations safeguard human life much more than former methods, but we feel that the additional cost of installation is worth while when elements of danger are eliminated.

In laying out a power station to house the electrical equipment of a studio, endeavor if possible the allowance for future extensions; remember this in designing the switchboards and laying your conduits from the switchboard to the generators. It is possible to make a very neat and efficient installation of such equipment. Each generator, of course, will have its control panel equipped with plain overload trip carbon circuit breakers, ammeters, voltmeters, and field rheostat. It will be found advisable to furnish the same type circuit breakers in all feeder circuits having a capacity of more than 400 amperes. They afford positive protection and save many fuses in a year's time.

By using circuit breakers having individual closing arms, but a common trip attachment, it would not be necessary to provide switch in that circuit, this reduces first cost considerably and would be perfectly good switchboard practice.

Further than this I feel it would not be advisable to endeavor to cover all the details that enter into the proposition of laying out and deciding upon the electrical apparatus needed for studio work. I have endeavored in a general way to discuss the advantages of the various apparatus used, but it must be obvious to you that each case would have to be carefully considered and the selection of equipment determined after a careful review of the facts of the particular case. Allow me to suggest that these matters are important enough to deserve the consideration of men that are experienced along electrical lines, the wider the experience the better for all concerned as it costs money to endeavor to rectify errors later on.

It has been my hope in writing this article that it may help some studio solve its problems regarding equipment or at least to obtain better results along that line. I hope the article may be of service to someone in that respect.

The Demand for Hurries and Battle Agitatos

SEVERAL days ago we had the pleasure of meeting a gentleman who represents the biggest music publishing house in the United States, and after the usual bows of courtesy we began to discuss the subject of music and pictures.

"It is astonishing," said he, "how many letters we receive daily from musicians and orchestra leaders of reputable popularity, asking us why we are not publishing more hurries and battle agitatos. The majority of those inquiries are, if not similarly worded, nevertheless reveal one idea, and one purpose. All these epistles thrown together would result in the following. We cannot play the same hurries and battle agitatos every day. Besides we can play them backwards and our audiences are whistling them in their sleep. Give us something new." This statement, coming from such an authentic source, leads to the verdict that most musicians playing pictures are handling their business in an automatic manner, by simply dividing each day into two parts (in the theatre, and out of the theatre) or (while in we play, while out we rest).

No matter how beneficial such a system may be for the health of an individual, we don't believe it to be of any great value to the amusement enterprises in general. A musician playing for pictures must not forget that he is a connecting link between the screen and the audience, and that his music is representing the spoken word of the motion picture which has proven to be a subject of lasting popularity with our vast amusement-seeking audience.

Musicians of the open-air moving picture calibre must be a quantity of the past, and the automatic musician must wake up. They must realize that hurries and battle agitatos cannot be published as fast as they play them, and furthermore, could not be bought as quickly for lack of funds. It simply means work, and again more work in trying to find ready published music which can take the place of the hurries and battle agitatos in common use.

An innumerable amount of hurries and agitato movements can be extracted from the standard works, unknown to the general audience, and effectively employed for battle scenes and fights. If musicians would only take their time and search through standard works, such as those written by Massenet, Grieg, Weber, Gounod and many others, they would find a vast amount of material which is applicable for practical use, but such a process of musically portraying battle scenes and fights means, as formerly mentioned, work, patience and perseverance, and it takes a conscientious musician to produce such feats. It takes an up-to-date and modern classified library and it necessitates a perpetual expenditure of a certain sum of money (depending upon the size of the orchestra) to maintain such efficiency.

Such process needs money, and who should pay for it? In most cases the musician is underpaid or the allowance granted him for the purchase of music is too small or is not equivalent to his requirements. Experience has also demonstrated that managers in many instances are reducing their orchestras as soon as they notice a retrogression in box-office receipts. They do not seem to realize that it necessitates improvements to increase box-office receipts, and that the betterment of the musical equipment is, if not more, at least just as important as the rebuilding or redecorating of the lobby, or increasing the size of the posters.

In cases where the lone organist or pianist is presiding over the musical destinies of the house, ready published hurries and battle agitatos seem to be the strangest animals. I have witnessed performances where war pictures were exhibited, accompanied by the piano or organ, and I must confess that the improvising efforts of some of these gentlemen were the most unique contributions to musical composition. (What is a half-tone amongst friends?)

We admit that the lone pianist is confronted with a big problem in correctly fingering a hurry or battle agitato, but the organist should be able to do better, as at his command are the resources of the American organ, an instrument equipped with all the necessary effects and able to produce musical volume equivalent to an orchestra. I do not believe it is in every instance the fault or inability of the organ player where musical doggerel presides. It is probably caused, as I formerly mentioned, through insufficient funds or the manager of the one-reel days.

The editors of these columns are ready at any time to supply musicians with a list of standard compositions containing movements suitable for hurries and battle agitatos.—THE EDITORS.

"Heart of Humanity" Song Ready for Market

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY" is the title of a new ballad to be put on the market shortly by two young New York composers, Ray Perkins, former leader of the Columbia University Glee Club and a captain in the army, and Roy Turk, recently mustered out of naval service.

The new ballad was inspired by the Jewel production, "The Heart of Humanity," featuring Dorothy Phillips, and it was introduced to the public at the Broadway theatre, New York, the week beginning January 26 by Henry Berrman, a baritone. Mr. Perkins and Mr. Turk attended a showing of "The Heart of Humanity" film together about two weeks ago and were so impressed with the beauty of the film that they collaborated in the writing of the song, which promises to be one of the biggest ballad successes of the year.

The first verse and chorus of the song follow:

"World of tears—
Through long years
You have been torn by pain and sadness;
Greatest of love—mother's love,
Alone has saved you from your madness.

CHORUS

"God could not be everywhere,
So he made mothers to care
For his host of children
Safe in her cradle of love.
Though men seek glory and fame,
All creeds must worship her name;
Heart of Humanity—that is a mother's love."

Manager M. Kashin of the Broadway presented the song with a special stage setting and has prepared other ideas which other exhibitors can follow in introducing the song in connection with the presentation of the film.

Waterson, Berlin and Snyder have secured the publication rights to the song and are co-operating with exhibitors showing the film by advertising the song and boosting the film that inspired it.

Song Dedicated to Norma Talmadge

THE "Heart of Wetona" is the title of a new song just published by Leo Feist, the well-known music publisher. The words are by Sidney D. Mitchell and music by Archie Gottler. The song is dedicated to Norma Talmadge and bears an autographed photograph of the Select star on the cover.

Miss Talmadge's splendid work in "The Heart of Wetona," the picture scenarioized from the popular play of the same name by George Scarborough, was the inspiration for Mr. Mitchell's charming Indian lyrics and likewise for Mr. Gottler's lovely music.

It seems to be getting the fashion to dedicate songs to Norma Talmadge. This is the third time she has been so honored. "San San," the song written by Danny Nirella, who has several highly successful songs to his credit, was dedicated to Miss Talmadge in recognition of her artistic portrayal of the role of "San San" in "The Forbidden City."

"Heart of Wetona" will be placed on sale the last week in January, and many professional singers will shortly introduce the song in vaudeville and restaurants and concerts. Exhibitors will probably want to take advantage of this tuneful little Indian song and use it as a part of their musical program during the showing of the picture.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

- 1—"Till We Meet Again"—Waltz. A positive riot—played everywhere—the biggest song sensation in years. (J. H. Remick & Co., 220 W. Forty-sixth Street, New York.)
- 2—"Give a Little Credit to the Navy"—One-Step. A bright, snappy Jazz One-Step that they're all raving over. (Remick & Co.)
- 3—"I'll Say She Does"—Fox-Trot. Al Jolson's big hit in "Sinbad." A wonderful fox-trot. (Remick & Co.)
- 4—"The Passing Show of 1918—Selection." Containing the principal song hits from the Big Review of the Same Title. Just published—you should have this in your repertoire. (Remick & Co.)
- 5—"Peter Gink"—George L. Cobb's greatest novelty one-step. Adapted from the "Peer Gynt" Suite. Already a riot with the big orchestras in the big town. (Walter Jacobs, 8 Bosworth Street, Boston, Mass.)
- 6—"Summer Showers"—An exceptional concert number by Frederic Knight Logan. (Forster, Music Publisher, 736 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.)
- 7—"I Shall Meet You" (The Home-Coming)—March-Waltz. The psychological composition of the times. Wilfrid Sanderson's great successor to and incorporating the refrain of "God Be with Our Boys Tonight." These two melodies produce one of the finest marches and the most effective dancing waltz it has ever been your privilege to conduct—on a theme you cannot resist—"The Home-Coming of Our Boys"—and the rousing welcome it will be your pleasure to give them. (Boosey & Co., 9 E. Seventeenth Street, New York.)
- 8—"De Koven's American Wedding March"—Here's a number you can't afford to be without. Scrap the Hun Marches and play the American Wedding March the next chance you get. (Boston Music Co., 26 West Street, Boston.)
- 9—"Comedy Allegro"—It is oftentimes said that "a rose by any other name smells just as sweet," but a "Comedy Allegro" by any other name would not imply what is meant by this term. If our readers had been in the Strand theatre and seen the presentation of Charlie Chaplin's latest picture, "Shoulder Arms," in the scene where he was chasing the Huns, and had heard the Symphony Orchestra playing "Comedy Allegro," they would then have realized that correct music for the film can and does interpret the actions depicted on the screen. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Avenue, New York.)
- 10—"Birds and Butterflies"—by Paul Vely. An original concert composition of novelty and charm that suggests the joy of a cloudless summer's day. (Belwin, Inc.)

11—"The Navy Will Bring Them Back"—One-Step. The real home-coming hit. All the headliners are singing it. (Feist, 335 W. Fortieth Street, New York.)

12—"Mother, Here's Your Boy"—Another home-coming song that is being sung to big applause everywhere. (Feist edition.)

13—"I Want a Doll"—The biggest song sensation of the year, and one of the snappiest one-steps published. (Harry Von Tilzer, 222 W. Forty-sixth Street, New York.)

14—"Bleeding Hearts"—A beautifully pathetic tone poem of heart interest by Sol. P. Levy. Engraved and published in concert size. Has met with the approbation of all musicians, whether engaged in film or concert work. (Belwin, Inc.)

New Sousa Marches

IT seems that Old Master Sousa's ability to produce new works is indestructible. He has recently added two more marches to his already famous list and he again has proven that he is the "March King" of the world.

The first one is entitled "Sabre and Spurs," a march of the American Cavalry. It has a characteristic swinging rhythm and a stirring martial stride. This march unquestionably reveals again a flash of the old Sousa, the Sousa that gave the world "Stars and Stripes Forever" and many other hits.

The second one, "Sousa's Wedding March," is a composition that was written at the request of the American Defense Society, which desired to give the world a new and an American Wedding March to replace the old German marches now and forever under the ban. "Sousa's Wedding March" is a work of significance and will occupy a position of high importance in the musical world. It can safely be said that this is of such quality to surpass in a very short time the popularity of the old and banished German wedding marches.

Stanley Frame Co. Puts New Frame on the Market

WHAT will no doubt prove a boom to the exhibitors, not only in the way of improving the appearance and adding prestige to the motion picture theatres, but the enormous saving it will effect, is the patent frame made by the Stanley Frame Company, and known as the "Stanleygraph."

It is a changeable sign made any size in width or length (on the order of a banner display frame) with raised wooden letters, any size required, painted black on a gold or bronze background that can be seen and read at a great distance. It can be changed at any time and any employee of the theatre can do it by simply lifting out the letters. A set of 110 letters (a complete printer's font) is furnished, allowing a sufficient number of letters for words or names containing the same letters.

The Stanleygraph can be used in many ways, for announcing the day's feature with the name of the star as for instance: Pauline Frederick in "Out of the Shadow," also for program announcements, coming features or attractions and many other ways. The Stanleygraph can be installed over the front entrance of the theatre, also on the sides (frames being made any size to fit the spaces) or in the lobby.

It is a frame that pays for itself in a very short time, as the initial expense is overcome by the saving in the cost of new cloth signs which averages about $10.00 a week or $520.00 a year, some theatres using cloth signs three times a week and others daily.

Three of the biggest and best known motion picture men, Nicholas Schenk, General Manager for Marcus Loew; Charles Levine, General Manager for William Fox, and Mr. Saunders, General Manager of the Poli Circuit, after seeing the Stanleygraph at the offices of the Stanley Frame Company pronounced is as the greatest boon to the exhibitors, and immediately placed an order for one.

The Stanley Frame Company has put out a very handsome catalogue, which gives the exhibitor a very good idea of frames of most every description that he can use, such as the Lobby Photo Display Case for displaying photos in the lobby, the Standard One-Sheet and Photo Combination, Louis the Fourteenth style Three-Sheet Combination Case, Standard One-Sheet Frame, Special Photo Case for displaying stills and announcement cards, Program Case for displaying weekly programs, Corner Display Case for three-sheet or double one-sheet and photos, Special Stanley Lobby Case for photos, cards or one-sheet posters for in front of theatre, lobby or sidewall and many other beautiful frames.

The Stanley Frame Company has just closed a contract with Marcus Loew to refurnish the lobby of the American Theatre with display frames of a particular design, these frames having the American eagle on the top of each one. The contract amounts to $2,700.

Max Fisher Composes "The Monte Blues"

FROM the Famous Players-Lasky offices, it is reported that Max Fisher, who recently returned to the Paramount headquarters immediately upon his release from the army, had composed a special instrumental piece.

Mr. Fisher is said to be a very talented musician whose plaintive violin has drawn tears from many a star in Paramount pictures in the past, dedicated his composition to Monte Blue.

Mr. Blue is leading man for Ethel Clayton in "Pettigrew's Girl," and so impressed was Mr. Fisher by the forlorn appearance of the actor in portraying a lonesome soldier far from home that he named his composition "The Monte Blues," and dedicated it to the leading man and the picture.

It will probably be published in the near future.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston
Pres. and Editor
MOTION PICTURE NEWS
729 7th Avenue
New York, N.Y.

My dear Mr. Johnston:-

Over five years ago, I began receiving MOTION PICTURE NEWS, in fact I believe the first copy came to my desk. That first issue as I recall it was a very modest one. Today I am in receipt of the first issue for the new year. During the five year span, your publication has developed wonderfully until today, in my estimation, it is absolutely the best trade journal in the world.

In making up motion picture columns, in aiding press agents of theatres in preparing intelligent copy for the press, in helping exhibitors select their attractions, MOTION PICTURE NEWS is doing a real service for the industry. Especially do I want to commend the bright make up of the book and local exhibitors tell me that the "Exhibitor Service Bureau" gives them many excellent and business building ideas.

Wishing continued growth for the NEWS during the coming year, I beg to remain,

Yours admirably

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

"The Wicked Darling," with Priscilla Dean (Universal—February 24—6 Reels—Directed by Tod Browning)

You had better keep an eye on pictures featuring Priscilla Dean. Every new release turns out to be better than the last one; and if the present rate of improvement keeps up, no reason why she should not become a great favorite among your patrons. It seems that the producers spare no expense in securing for her the right kind of stories, the sort that give her particular talents room to expand; and no little credit goes to the man who selects them for her—he knows what he is doing.

"The Wicked Darling" is a crook play, in which the heroine is given the role of a clever shop-lifter but not without a heart. Her heartstrings are hardened, due to her environment, but not destroyed. She shows it in a realistically developed love affair with the hero, a formerly wealthy man, but now poor. Her love for him causes her real self to awaken and bring her dormant nobleness to the forefront. The hero eventually discovers she is a thoroughbred, and they become united.

Thrills, suspense, human appeal, and many other elements of the better side of human nature abound in this picture. It should furnish your patrons with an evening's entertainment that is not easily forgotten.—P. S. Harrison.

"The Law of Nature"

(David G. Fischer Production—Seven Reels)

FROM a story written by David G. Fischer, in collaboration with Captain Richard Pearson Hobson, ex-Congressman from Alabama and one of the most ardent advocates of prohibition, the David G. Fischer Productions, Inc., has produced "The Law of Nature" under the direction of Mr. Fischer, with Vincent Coleman and Dixie Lee featured.

"The Law of Nature" is not an example of our best photo-dramatic productions, nor is it a convincing propaganda subject, but it is entertaining by virtue of its timely theme. The cast does not present a star or anyone approaching stellar popularity, for the chief aim of the production is propaganda and dramatic argumentation against alcohol. The subject matter and not the personnel of the cast is its predominating note, and this note has been struck with resounding effects in many of the story's episodes, but falls a bit flat in others due to the author's eagerness to place actionable drama above plausible incidents and logical sequence.

This is why the picture has lost its full strength as propaganda material and why it is not the best from a dramatic standpoint, because in attempting to stimulate dramatic action the real essence of any medium of teaching, known facts, has been neglected.

If these points can be overlooked and the picture is accepted for what it seeks to teach, there is satisfaction for all. With the proper exploitation it should go big, because just at this time the question of prohibition is of prime importance.

The picture presents some very good moments, some clever acting by members of the cast, chief among which is the work of Frances Nemeyer in a vampire role. An allegorical prologue opens the picture and runs for about four hundred feet. In the main the story shows an individual example of the effect of liquor on humanity. It will be released in seven reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

"Wanted for Murder" with Elaine Hammerstein

(Harry Rapf Productions—Distributed Through Film Clearing House, Inc.)

The story of this picture treats of a love affair between an American private and a young French girl, which is unfolded on the battlefields of France. It is of the fantastic sort, but so well developed, that it holds the interest tense all the way through. Several of the situations will thrill the spectator.

The hero, while repairing some telephone wires in No Man's Land which were cut, is wounded. He attempts to crawl back to his trench but loses his way and falls in the hands of the Germans. On the first opportunity he escapes and reaches a French house within the German lines, where he hides. The Americans charge and take the village, but the Germans countercharge and retake it. The hero is cut off again, but escapes with the orphaned heroine, the Germans having murdered her mother and sister, and reach safely the American lines. The American regiment adopts the heroine.

Angered by the German cruelties, the Americans determine to get the Kaiser and make him pay for all the atrocities. They print pamphlets with the Kaiser's picture and the words "Wanted for Murder." The hero is taken by an aviator over Berlin and drops a large number of them. On their way back, however, they are winged by an enemy aviator and fall. Right at that time truce is declared and the American troops are ordered to march on the Rhine. While following the regiment the heroine happens to spy the hero, who is injured by the destruction of the aeroplane, but not seriously. She summons help and they take him along. He shortly recovers, marries the heroine and they come to America.

There are no gruesome scenes in the picture. It will undoubtedly satisfy most of those who will be attracted by it. The picture also contains several patriotic situations that will arouse the enthusiasm of the spectator.—P. S. Harrison.

"COMMON CLAY"—PATHE

Audiences Will Likely Praise This Fannie Ward Feature

YOU may safely class "Common Clay" among the big productions of the year; not on account of its length, but on account of the powerful influence it exerts upon the deeper emotions. It is full of human interest; it digs beneath the skin. Those who will be attracted in your theatre by it will undoubtedly go out of their way to praise it to every friend they meet.

The plot is based on the stage success of the same name. It deals with a poor but innocent working girl, who loves the better things in life. This desire leads her into the underworld from which she barely escapes uninjured; but the true meaning of those places reveal themselves to her in all their ugliness.

Thinking she went to the bad, her father throws her out of the house; so she obtains a position as maid with a wealthy family with a young son. Youth attracts youth, however, and a love union results. The lover enlists and is sent away. In time, a child is born to her.

In the course of the story she finds out that the good woman who had raised her is not her mother, her real mother having drowned herself rather than disgrace her love-father, whom she loved dearly; she is happily reunited to her real father; her sweetheart returns and marries her, thus making her happy.

The court-room scene, in which her supposed mother reveals the truth of her parentage, is very pathetic; so is the revelation of the real father's identity to the heroine. It will bring the tears.

Although the picture deals with a delicate question, it at no time is offensive; whatever offense might be conveyed by such story in an ordinary picture is thrown in the background in this one by the intense human appeal, and unless you have made it an iron rule to avoid all pictures treating on such themes, you can't afford to overlook this one.—Released March 2.—Length, 7 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Fannie Ward in "Common Clay," a Pathe picture in seven parts, will be the feature attraction at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week. Special interest is attached to this presentation inasmuch as the original play scored one of the phenomenal hits of the stage when it was presented by A. H. Woods, two or three years ago. Not only did it play for long runs in all the big cities of the country but the smaller towns as well have witnessed the production. To say that the picture is a worthy successor to the stage production will seem an inadequate remark indeed, after patrons have seen it. From every standpoint it is one of the most dramatic, well produced and lavish pictures of the year.

Miss Ward carries the role of the girl, Ellen Neal, who, as maid in the home of the wealthy Fullertons, gives herself to Hugh, the son of the house, previous to his departure for the war. Then follows her desperate fight for her baby's rights and the astounding revelation regarding Ellen's parentage when the case is brought to a preliminary hearing in court. The photoplay is too powerful and too varied to be related in all its details here but it is enough to say that "Common Clay" presents a story of the greatest dramatic power, originally treated and acted by a capable cast.

The star appears to excellent advantage, while the support she receives from E. W. Lawrence, Fred Goodwins, John Barrows and others is of a remarkably superior order. Ouida Bergere wrote the scenario from the play by Cleves Kinkead, while the direction was in charge of George Fitzmaurice.

THE STORY

Contrasting her surroundings of sordidness and poverty with the constant spectacle of affluence she sees all around her, Ellen Neal, a department store worker, becomes dissatisfied. Jennie Peters, once a co-worker in the store and now a cabaret singer, induces her to visit a cabaret with other of her friends. Arthur Coakley, a young waster, attacks her but before harm is done the police raid the place. Subsequently, Ellen decides to quit the gay life and secures a position as maid in the Fullerton household. Coakley is well received in this family but his advances toward Ellen are regularly repulsed.

Before long, Ellen finds herself very much in love with young Hugh Fullerton and before he departs for war she gives herself to him. His haughty mother intercepts all his letters to her and after a time Ellen is obliged to leave her position to care for her child. Mrs. Neal eventually persuades her to go to the Fullertons and demand her rights. Fullerton will not believe her story so she hires an attorney. Judge Filson, an old friend of the Fullertons, takes their case. During the preliminary and private hearing, it develops that Mrs. Neal is not Ellen's mother; that she had brought her up after her own mother had committed suicide over a case similar to Ellen's. When Mrs. Neal mentions the woman's name Judge Filson realizes that he is the man; Ellen's father.

He takes charge of the girl and by the time that Hugh returns has made her his daughter in manner as well as in name. Hugh is disconsolate over the absence of the girl and vows to find her, despite his parents' protests. And when at last Judge Filson arranges a meeting between his daughter and Hugh, happiness comes for both of the young people.

CATCH LINES

A great version of the celebrated stage success of the same name—the story of a girl's struggle to gain that which is rightfully her's—Miss Ward shines in the stellar role.

Judge Filson heard the plea of Ellen Neal with mingled pity and cynicism. He had heard her story before—she had loved a man—he had gone away—left her and the baby to struggle alone. Then Judge Filson started, his throat went dry and he struggled to keep his composure. He had heard a name—the name of Ellen's mother—the name of a woman who had made the supreme sacrifice for him!

Ellen Neal wanted to lead an honest life but somehow Fate willed that she should be made the toy of circumstance. She was tossed hither and thither on the waves of Life and only after untold suffering did she find the harbor of refuge—true love.

Mrs. Fullerton thought that sincerity was not a part of Ellen Neal's love. Because she was a servant she tried to think that the love of those who serve is never deep. An amazing series of situations convinces her of the folly of her idea in the great photoplay, "Common Clay."

ADVERTISING AIDS

PAPER:—One twenty-four-sheet; one six-sheet; two three-sheets; one one-sheet. All this paper serves to bring out the dramatic and emotional character of the photoplay with title and name of star prominent in display.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Eight 11 x 14 colored photographs and title card; one 22 x 28 colored scenes; one 22 x 28 of star.

CUTS:—One one-column; one two-column; one three-column. As is the case with the paper, these cuts serve to bring out the dramatic highlights of the picture in no uncertain terms. They are designed expressly for advertising uses and, used as the center of copy, will make a most desirable display.

A two-column scene cut is also supplied for use in the text columns of newspapers or house organs. In addition to this list of advertising material there are also the one and two-column star cuts available on all Fannie Ward productions.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET also obtainable at all Pathe exchanges.

SUGGESTIONS

First of all you have a corking title to display in connection with this picture. It decorated a real stage success, not one which only ran on Broadway for a full season but one which has been seen in any city of any size during the last three years. Get that point. "Common Clay" has three years of advertising back of it already! That's before you even touch it. So make the most of this title. Display it as much as you can, make use of the paper. And when you add that it is an adaptation of the stage success of the same name there aren't going to be any doubters.

The title is fifty per cent of the box office value of this picture—maybe more. And this fifty per cent of the value of this feature is the equivalent of the whole hundred per cent of the average feature. You have done the most when you have displayed this title. In addition to it in your advertising copy, use the name of the author, the director (for George Fitzmaurice has a good number of successes to his credit), and a line or so designating the character of the play or relating one of its highlights. "Ellen Neal was regarded as Common Clay by the elder Fullertons, but she proved herself of as fine a mold as they—of a finer mold, in fact, when it came to the supreme test," might be a good line to use.

And after the title of the play you have a star to play up who has done big things on the screen. Fannie Ward is an accomplished actress, experience shows in her work and she is able to take roles calling for heavy emotional acting. She has admirers and her name is known wherever pictures are shown.

"WOMAN, WOMAN!"—FOX

Deals Boldly with Sex Question; Morals of Heroine Lax

YOU ought to know by this time the type of stories Evelyn Nesbit is furnished with; and if you have played any of them, you should know how they take with your patrons. The story in "Woman! Woman!" is of no different class, except that it is bolder, dealing with the sex problem more openly. The first part of the picture is an argument of free love against lawful marriage.

The foundation, upon which the story has been built, is the heroine's sacrifice of her good name to a wealthy jeweler, who is infatuated with her, in order to obtain enough to help cure her dying husband. She saves his life, but when he later discovers that his baby son is not his own child, orders the heroine from the house, refusing to forgive her. The wealthy man, now really in love with her, is conscience stricken, and when he learns she is free begs her to marry him. As she is assured of her sincerity, she consents to become his wife, so that her child may have a name.—Released Jan. 26.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

It would seem that the title is the strongest thing about this production. It is startling to a degree and lends itself well to all sorts of advertising. If you plan playing the picture for any length of time, inaugurate a teaser campaign. Carry some space in the newspapers, use postal cards to your patrons, or use your screen, just to carry the title of the picture and nothing more. If you follow this up for one or two weeks before the showing of the production you will create an interest of some size. Previous to your regular announcements of the feature add a little information regarding the picture to the plain "Woman, Woman" announcement. In this way you will create an accumulative interest that will help considerably.

The production itself also gives you a number of sensational advertising possibilities, such as the Free Love business and the sacrifice of the wife to save her husband's life. These events of the plot can be built up if you desire this type of advertising. If you have played the other Nesbit pictures, go to it with respect to her name on this one, for she improves. And for that matter, if you have not played them, there is, as everyone knows, considerable note attached to her name.

AD TALK

"Woman, Woman!" is the unique title of the William Fox photoplay starring Evelyn Nesbit, which will be presented at the theatre on _____ of _____ week. It was expressly written for the star by Norman Lorimer and has as its central figure Alice Lindsay, a girl from a fair-sized town lying near New York City. Alice believes that destiny calls her from the metropolis and so she grasps the first opportunity that presents itself to go there. Her experiences with three of its men form the basis of the photoplay and, rest assured, that they are experiences that keep the spectator ever on the alert. To say the least, Mr. Lorimer has contrived a story of originality, unusual interest and high suspense.

Miss Nesbit has proven in her other screen vehicles that she is a capable actress. "Woman, Woman!" gives her even further opportunity to demonstrate this ability of hers and the opportunity is utilized to its fullest extent. Her work is polished and has an appeal that is undeniable. Miss Nesbit receives support from a large cast, most prominent in which are Clifford Bruce, Gareth Hughes and William H. Tooker. This trio forms the other angles of the quadrangle of the story—for "Woman, Woman!" adds one more point to the usual story of the eternal three—and their individual work is most commendable.

Keenan Buel, one of the foremost of Mr. Fox's directors, shaped the scenario and took active charge of the production of the picture.

Alice Lindsay is bored with her routine life in a small town and decides that she will make New York City her goal. She finds her opportunity there as governess in the household of Mme. Cecile Langdorf, a woman of the world. The sunny disposition and unsophistication of Alice appeal to Mme. Langdorf and she makes a companion of her. She takes her with her to Greenwich village where Alice meets a varied assortment of people. Samson Rathbone, a young civil engineer, appeals to her strongly as does Gwenne Stevens, a young English writer, who preaches the gospel of Free Love. As time passes, Gwenne invites Alice to go West with him. She bides her time and turns to Rathbone for advice. He tells her to return to her home where she may view the situation from the proper perspective and have time to think.

But life in her home town is now almost unbearable and Alice wearies for New York. And Rathbone knows this, or divines it, for the next time she reaches the city it is as his wife. He enters upon a big engineering project in the South but the fever attacks him and he is sent home, an invalid. Alice finds it hard to make ends meet and finally, in desperation, sells herself to Roy Mackay, a millionaire, to secure funds to permit her husband's recovery. His life is saved, but when Alice bears a child he finds out that it is not his and divorces her. Not knowing which way to turn, Alice goes to Gwenne Stevens and with him, leads a life of misery.

At length Mackay again finds her. He had been searching and his love for the child had caused a great change in him. He asks Alice to marry him and she consents.

CATCH LINES

All sorts of temptations beset Alice Lindsay, who struggled to attain success in New York. Not the least of these was a proposal of a Free Love union from Gwenne Stevens, a radical writer. Marriage belonged to the dark ages of the past, he told her. What was she to do?

Evelyn Nesbit in the third of her series of Fox photoplays—a story filled with all the sensations of life in New York City!

The tale of a woman and three men. One loved and married her but divorced her because he couldn't understand. One loved and would not marry her because it was not according to his creed. And one loved and, though his past was none too stainless, married her because he had lived to learn.

"Woman, Woman!" adds another point to the eternal triangle. It is a story of a quadrangle—of one woman and three men and it is just that much more dramatic than the picture of the usual trio.

New Griffith Picture Seems a Sure-Fire Winner

ONE of the famous indoor motion picture sports is to joke about THE "great American motion picture." With "A Romance of Happy Valley," D. W. Griffith has at least created A "great American motion picture." It is a beautiful, heart-gripping and genuine story of a little Kentucky town in the days before any one thought of a great world war.

In many of his productions Griffith has pictured various phases of American character, but he knows Kentucky a little better than any other place, for that is the place of his birth, and others that know the same country will appreciate how perfectly he has pictured its people. It is to that section what the stage production, "Way Down East," was to New England—and it is just as sure to have as wide an appeal to every section. We saw it in the crowded Strand theatre, crowded with New Yorkers, and we believe that many of these did not quite "get" the full spirit when the master craftsman really "kids" New York. It is going over with great enthusiasm at the Strand; it will go even better in other sections.

It is a simple little story—a story of a boy and a girl of the Kentucky village and their love: of the boy's desire to go to New York and win a fortune, but of the church-going people being afraid of his fate in the wickedness of the great city. He "backslides" and goes, promising the girl that he will be back within a year; but other years, till seven, pass without his coming. The father now faces losing his home and is desperate, and when the son returns, so changed that he is not recognized, the father is tempted to try to rob him. Then Griffith has laid a plot that grips and amazes. We wouldn't try to tell patrons the full story of the picture. They need to see it portrayed in the Griffith way.

Robert Harron and Lillian Gish do the very best work of their careers, and there is a notable supporting cast. Griffith has pictured the negro characters better than in any production that we have seen. The settings are the simple ones of the country town, with most of them exteriors. The photography is of the highest order, the close-ups being unusually convincing.

We believe that most of your patrons will laugh a lot and cry a little and that they will leave your theatre the best advertisers for this picture that you ever had. Its appeal is universal, and you needn't be afraid to put your personal guarantee behind it.—R. E. Prichard.

AD TALK

Next week the management of the — theatre will present for the first time in this city "A Romance of Happy Valley," the latest work of D. W. Griffith. In this picture Griffith departs from the war which has held his attention for his last three productions and tells the simple little story of small town folk of the South. It's a romance of a young boy and girl, in which the boy goes to the city to seek a fortune, but finds the going hard. His long years of effort, however, are finally rewarded and he returns to claim the little girl who has awaited him for seven years. The climax with which Griffith caps his tale is one of the most surprising that the screen has ever shown and we will not relate it here inasmuch as it comes as such a total surprise.

The value of a Griffith production can never be set down in cold type. The myriad human touches that he instils into his work stamp each of his pictures as the creation of a master mind. These human touches are what made his war pictures so far ahead of all the others in the field and it is these touches that make "A Romance of Happy Valley" one of the most delightfully pleasing pictures ever cast on the screen.

Robert Harron and Lillian Gish are again the lovers of the story and their work is of the same realistic order as it has been in past productions. Among others who appear are George Fawcett, Kate Bruce, George Nicholls, Andrew Arbuckle, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Bertram Grassby.

CATCH LINES

In the little southern town of Happy Valley live the Logans and the Timberlakes. There is a romance between John Logan, Jr., and Jennie Timberlake. The boy, his ambitions to go to New York, ambitions crushed by his father, and the girl strives to keep him home by dressing up in all the finery that her needle can create. It is his mother's religious faith that most influences John, but even after he has been taken into the fold of the local church he feels the call of adventure and he leaves for the city, promising to come back successful or not at all.

The days pass, Jennie counts them for a year and John does not return. In the city he labors to make perfect a mechanical toy, but is unsuccessful—unsuccessful for seven long years and then at last one day he sees his invention—a toy frog that swims—work! Back in Happy Valley Jennie has dedicated herself to the life of an old maid. Things have gone hard with the Logans. John, Sr., goes to the neighboring town in an attempt to borrow money, but fails. He sees a city man and a girl lavish with a newly acquired bank roll and he resolved to get a piece of it! The religion that he preached to his boy, that led him to turn from him in anger is not strong enough to stay his temptation.

Logan follows the stranger to his own home—or thinks he does. In reality he follows his own son. Creeping up to the dark room he attacks the man lying on the bed, then in a paroxysm of fear carries his body out to the fields. The mother discovers that the occupant of the room must have been her boy. Realization dawns on Logan! And then John walks into the room. The man on the bed had been an escaped bank robber after all! That is what John said at least, but was he telling the truth? But no matter, John makes all haste to Jennie and tells her emphatically that she is not to be an old maid.

Hayakawa Picture Should Not Fail to Please Wholly

WHETHER they like pictures with Japanese atmosphere in your town or not, they will like this one—yes, some people will even rave over it. I have seen every one of Mr. Hayakawa's features since "The Typhoon," but I cannot point to one that is more pleasing, more interesting or more entertaining.

The story deals with twin Japanese brothers; the one is a thoroughbred, loyal to his father, while the other, a dissolute, has stained the family name by a treasonable act.

The dual role scenes have been handled so cleverly that they create a perfect illusion. In two different scenes, one character holds the other in his arms as if they were two different persons. The artistic effects, on the other hand, will stand comparison with the best that can be seen in any picture. The outdoor scenes are so beautiful they make you think you are spending some leisure hours in a garden, instead of looking at a picture.

Every foot of the picture radiates with Mr. Hayakawa's sincerity and speaks aloud of his determination to produce clean attractions, and the kind that appeal to the nobler instincts. If you are a believer in good pictures, you should back these efforts. Besides, you need them, as they are different. They offer that real variety of entertainment that is so desirable.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

In which the celebrated Japanese actor portrays dual role, representing on the one hand, the forces of virtue, and on the other, the forces of wickedness. One of the strongest and most surprising of photoplays.

A tale of twin brothers of Japan. How one proved a traitor to his country and how the other saved the family name from disgrace. One of the most absorbing photoplays in which the Japanese star has appeared.

Sessue Hayakawa has been called the screen's greatest actor. At least he is up among the five greatest and his performance in the dual role awarded him in this picture, gives ample proof of this.

AD TALK

Sessue Hayakawa, the renowned Japanese star, will be seen at the _____ theatre on _____ week in "Bonds of Honor," a dramatic offering in which he plays the role of twin brothers. Hayakawa has done many fine things for the screen but it may safely be said that in "Bonds of Honor" he attains a mark of excellence seldom, if ever before, achieved by a screen actor in the portrayal of a dual role. On the one hand he is Yamashiro, the very soul of honor, engaged in helping his father draw up plans for important fortifications of Japan. On the other he is the twin brother and wastrel of the family, Sadao, who runs into debt to a German spy and attempts to steal the plans in order to free himself from obligation to this sinister man.

It may readily be seen from this brief introductory of the picture that Hayakawa is called upon to exercise his versatility to a marked degree. That he succeeds is only further proof that he is one of the screen's greatest actors; "the screen's greatest actor," as one well-known professional of the speaking stage once called him. The dramatic situation resulting from the resemblance of the two men and the manner in which Yamashiro atones for the crimes of his brother form a remarkable photoplay, the full worth of which can only be appreciated after its exhibition.

Special interest is attached to "Bonds of Honor," inasmuch as Clara Whipple, one of the popular screen "vampires," wrote the story on which it is based. It was produced under the direction of William Worthington with a cast including Tsuru Aoki, Marin Sais, Herschell Mayall and Dagmar Godowsky, besides the star.

"FAITH"—METRO

Picture with Deep Appeal and Excellent Star

METRO again selected wisely in "Faith," a story by Richard Washburn Child, in which Bert Lytell appears. Coming after the delightful picture "The Spender," this latest of the star's pictures should attract patronage and please it. It offers a human, really gripping little story of the manner in which a young man proved that his employer's faith in him had not been in vain. It is told originally and the suspense is well maintained until the end, owing to the judicious manner in which the plot was handled.

It is our opinion that "Faith" is a superlative picture. While it may not possess the sensational qualities or possibilities of certain features, it is one of those human narratives that digs under the skin with the persistence of a cootie, but with exactly opposite effect. As for the star, here, indeed, is an actor who casts aside posing, mock heroics, long hair, wierd clothes, et al. He is one of the few natural actors of the screen, and yet he is always living, feeling his part.

"Faith" has been given a good production, the vault scenes being the real thing. The supporting cast, which is small and which is headed by Rosemary Theby, Edythe Chapman and Edwin Stevens, is excellent.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 3.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

"Faith," a five-part Metro feature, written by Richard Washburn Child and starring Bert Lytell, will be the featured attraction at the theatre on _____ of _____ week. When a feature such as this comes along it is a time for general rejoicing, throwing up of hats and smiles. We can not advertise it to you as the most sensational drama ever screened or as containing moments of staggering dramatic intensity. Neither can we say that it is an hilarious comedy or a picture that is all laughs from beginning to end. "Faith" is none of these.

It is a picture that can best be described as human. From characters to situations it is human. If there is a false note in it we missed it. As the scenes of "Faith" start to unfold on the screen, a calm spreads over the beholder. He forgets the theatre, his neighbor, he forgets the walls and the screen. As it runs on, calmly, really, truthfully depicting the story of a young man who was afraid to face the truth until the faith of two women turned him to it with a new light in his eyes, he is transported from a theatrical world into one of reality, beautiful because of its very reality. And when "Faith" has run its course across the silversheet he knows that he has seen a PICTURE.

Bert Lytell in the principal role, fits into the general atmosphere with an ease and grace that is admirable. He is our best natural actor and he puts every point over with a surety that can not be missed. His support is of a high order with Rosemary Theby appearing as the girl. Don't forget "Faith." It will renew your faith in yourself.

George Farrelly, custodian of the safe deposit vaults in the Avenue Bank, has become a thing of facts and figures—just that and nothing more.

The future holds nothing for him except more facts and more figures. One day his childhood sweetheart, Charity Garvice, comes to him with a request. It seems that their old school teacher, Martha Owen, who had loved George's father before him, has grown blind with age and entertains the idea that he is in some sort of trouble. If George will but go to her, asks Charity, and tell some story—any old story—that she may be satisfied, the old lady will recover some of her exuberance, she believes.

So George goes and spins a long story regarding a necklace that Mrs. Harrington, the bank president's wife, left out of her strong box. He had taken it with the idea of returning it to Mr. Harrington. He had gone to the office and found his employer gone. Then he had been tempted to turn it into its cash value—he had resisted this and other temptations but finally believed it too late to return it. Martha Owen tells him to return it now, that it is never too late to mend. And she is happy that she has done the boy she loves a service.

Then Charity learns that the story is all true—that George had not invented it! And so with the faith of the two women he loves, George goes to Harrington to return the jewels. Harrington is a stern man and it is all that George can do to receive an hour's grace from him before he goes to jail. George returns to him with Charity as his wife and it is not until then that Harrington confesses the whole thing was a frameup to test him. The faith of the two women has been justified. George takes a new lease on life and enters on his position as assistant manager, with enthusiasm.

CATCH LINES

Bert Lytell, who scored such a pronounced success in the recent Metro feature, "The Spender," in another wonderful photoplay.

The story of the faith of two women and the courage of one man—"Faith" is one of the few HUMAN DOCUMENTS of the screen.

Here is a picture of life—life unvarnished with anything bordering the melodramatic—life so simple and sweet and pure that you find yourself wrapped up in the story before the first reel is half run.

The story of women's faith in one man—and how he rose to the situation and justified that faith.

A slice right out of the heart of humanity by Richard Washburn Child—a man who writes with a pen dipped in the ink of Truth.

Metro gave us "The Spender"—that human comedy of a man who found happiness by making others happy—now it gives us "Faith"—a human story of a man who found the Light because of a simple faith placed in him by those he loved.

SUGGESTIONS

The story presented in "Faith" is dominated by an unusually strong human note from its beginning to its end. In advertising, it strives to gain this effect. You have nothing sensational to build any advertising upon, that is, if you strive to present the truth in your copy. The fact that the action centers around a young man who stole a necklace from a strong-box in a bank, would, of course, give you some slight excuse for going into sensational types of advertising but, in our opinion, this would be out of tune with the picture.

Get the human touch into all copy, mention the name of the author, for he is well known, and then follow up with some simple line akin to one of the catch lines printed in connection with the picture. In this way you should attract the higher type of patron to your theatre. It would be a good plan to take extra space to emphasize this character of the picture to your patrons.

Points a Moral to Married Folk, or Those to Be Married

THIS picture possesses all the earmarks of success. The story is clean and interesting and, as it has been handled with the usual care that marks all De Mille contributions, it should give universal satisfaction.

The story is simple. The heroine is loved by the hero, her wealthy husband; but as he is too absorbed by his business cares, fails to show the affection due a wife. She meets a young man who tells her of his undying love. She believes him, and as she thinks she can be happier with him, asks her husband to give her her freedom. Because her husband loves her too much to see her unhappy, he grants her a divorce. The young man and the heroine marry, but she soon finds out the sort of man he is. He gambles and drinks and makes love to other women, thus neglecting his wife. She eventually secures a divorce and marries the first husband again, who receives her with open arms.

The cast includes a number of artists, such as Gloria Swanson, Lewis Cody, Theodore Roberts, and many others.

The title is catchy and should help to draw the crowds.—Released Jan. 28.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

Cecil B. De Mille's latest Artcraft photoplay, entitled "Don't Change Your Husband," will be the featured attraction at the theatre on _____ of _____ week. This startling title designates a photoplay that contains a scathing arraignment of the neglectful and slovenly husband, even as did Mr. De Mille's former Artcraft success, "Old Wives for New," attack the wife who forgot to keep up appearances after marriage. Patrons of the theatre who remember this previous picture and the great success it was, have every reason to expect a similar achievement in "Don't Change Your Husband," for the producer has put all his art and bended all his creative effort into this latest work. It stands as one of the biggest screen sensations as a result.

As usual, Mr. De Mille has assembled a cast of all-star calibre to interpret the various roles of the play. Elliott Dexter is to be seen as the "glue king," a business man before whom all others tremble but in his own home a mental pigmy. Gloria Swanson, one of the prettiest young actresses of the screen, takes the role of the wife, who finally breaks with her husband because she can not stand his slovenly ways. Lew Cody, as the third angle of the eternal trio, Sylvia Ashton, Theodore Roberts, Julia Faye and James Neill complete the cast.

How the destinies of the three principal characters are worked to an end on the screen forms a photoplay of the greatest interest. The production has been lavishly staged and includes a variety of handsome interior and exterior scenes.

Leila Porter, married seven years to James Denby Porter, the "glue king," is highly displeased. Her husband is a master of finance but also a master of bad manners—he is careless. He goes to sleep with a cigar in his mouth, eats raw onions and doesn't bother much about his clothes. Furthermore, he forgets. Forgets even their seventh anniversary dinner and the guests that he has invited. One of these is Sutphen, a globe trotter and a fascinating fellow. Mutual admiration between Sutphen and Leila follows their first meeting and Leila can not help but think what a fine-appearing husband he would make.

At a costume ball Sutphen learns that Leila is to go as Juliet. So he dons the costume of the great lover—Romeo. He cuts a magnificent figure and makes Porter's Romeo look ridiculous. The upshot of it finally is that Leila divorces Porter and marries the gallant Sutphen. For a time things go well but fortune turns against Sutphen, he grows irritable and loses his love for Leila. In the meantime Porter has blossomed forth in sartorial splendor, having undergone a complete reformation. He has undergone a complete change, for now he realizes that Leila meant everything to him.

At a gambling house Porter meets Sutphen and a chorus girl. Sutphen is attempting to sell a diamond ring Porter had given Leila and Porter offers to buy it. This precipitates a quarrel. Sutphen shoots at Porter but misses him. Leila, just then arriving on the scene, rushes into Porter's arms. And shortly afterwards Leila's second divorce and third marriage takes place.

CATCH LINES

Because James Denby Porter consumed raw onions, went to sleep with a cigar in his mouth, refused to have his clothes pressed and forgot their wedding anniversary, Leila divorced him. It was not until then that James Denby awoke to the fact that he had been living like a bum! He reformed, but Leila had married another man.

Do clothes make the man? James Denby Porter, the "glue king," didn't think so, but his wife hated slovenliness and divorced him. This shocked him into a realization of what a rotter he'd been and he began over again. But how was he to win back the woman he loved when she had married another man?

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture that you can play as a special and with good cause. There is the title which has great advertising possibilities and which carries a lot of meaning in its four words. There is the producer who is known as having turned out some of the best works ever contributed to the screen. There is the production, lavish in every respect. There is the story, unusual, daring, intelligently handled, amusing, highly dramatic. And there is the cast, a group of people well known to screen followers.

Certainly Artcraft is handing the exhibitor something real in this picture and one which he can clean up on if he handles it with proper regard to its value. The producers suggest that you tie up this picture with the previous De Mille work, "Old Wives for New," for there is a certain similarity in point of view. Whereas the former picture attacked the slovenly wife, this one goes after the husband. If you have played the other picture, this certainly is a good idea to follow out.

Last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS carried a special service section on "Don't Change Your Husband," which is well worth the reading if the exhibitor plans to get the most from the picture.

"WHO WILL MARRY ME?"—BLUEBIRD

Comedy and Pathos Blended in This Universal Film

CLEAN and wholesome comedy is blended with strong pathos in this attraction, pathos that reaches the most deeply buried heartstrings. Pictures of this type raise the level of the Motion Picture art. They are the strongest argument in favor of the possibilities of the screen.

As this picture has been reviewed extensively in last week's issue, on page 755, there is hardly any need to say much more, except to add that the title "Who Will Marry Me?" sounds catchy, and offers splendid opportunities for advertising that would arouse the curiosity and interest of the public.—Released Jan. 27.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Jerome Van Oesten.....Thurston Hall
Karl Kremer.....William Dyer
Sylvia Stone.....Betty Schade
Richard Carr.....Kingsley Benedict
Rosie's Mother.....Marian Skinner
Charlotte Van Oesten.....Adelaide Elliott
Antonio Mosconi (Tony the Barber).....Burton Law
Story by Sonya Levien.
Scenario by Fred Myton.
Directed by Paul Powell.

THE STORY

Rosie Sanguinetti, a beautiful young Italian girl, doesn't wish to marry the barber that her mother has selected as a future husband, and runs away to a settlement house, where she appeals to Robert Carr, in charge, to produce another man for her so that she will be safe from the tonsorial artist. It so happens that at that moment Jerome Van Oesten, a wealthy young fellow, who has been jilted by a chorus girl, Sylvia, comes along. Jerry has taken to drink to drown his sorrows and slightly under the influence of it, he agrees to come to the rescue of Rosie by marrying her. The ceremony is performed and he takes her home to his rooms, puts her to bed and then finds quarters for himself in another part of the house.

The next morning, Jerry's aunt, aristocratic and haughty, calls and is more than shocked at the situation she discovers. Rosie, in the short time that she has known Jerry, has grown to admire and love him, but she readily realizes that she is not his equal, and when persuaded by the aunt to return to her home she sorrowfully agrees to do so.

Later when Jerry returns to his apartment he finds Sylvia there. She has married since Jerry has seen her last and has discovered too late that her husband is cruel. Soon afterwards he invades Jerry's place in search of his wife. Seeing her with Jerry he attacks him viciously and Sylvia, to protect him, pulls a gun from her husband's pocket and kills the brute. Jerry gives himself up as the murderer to save Sylvia from jail. Rosie hears of this and going to the lawyers tells a lie to the effect that she welcomed advances from the dead man, believing that her husband still loved Sylvia. Her story is so convincing that Jerry is freed and then he realizes the true worth of the strange girl he made his wife.

AD TALK

"Who Will Marry Me?" This is the question that the pretty Carmel Myers pops in her next Bluebird picture, which will be shown at the theatre on of week. As Rosie Sanguinetti, a beautiful Italian girl, she finds herself being forced by her parents into a marriage with a barber. This doesn't appeal to her romantic nature in the least, so she flees to the nearest settlement house and frantically asks the superintendent in charge, "Who Will Marry Me?" It so happens that at the moment Jerry Van Oesten, a wealthy gentleman, deep in sorrow and slightly so in his cups, comes along and volunteers. This strange romance so unusually begun develops interestingly throughout the picture and the little Italian girl finally proves her worth when Jerry goes on the stand on a charge of murder to protect a woman's name. She tells a lie to release him and though the lie puts her in a compromising position it saves the man she loves—and he understands.

"Who Will Marry Me?" is well up to the Bluebird standard in offering surprises and unusual incidents. From its very outset it is stamped with the delightful mark of originality nor does it once lapse into a rut during its length. Written by Sonya Levien, scenarioized by Fred Myton and produced under the direction of Paul Powell, it sums up as one of the most enjoyable Bluebird subjects ever cast on the screen of the theatre.

CATCH LINES

A pretty girl fairly threw herself at him and pleaded with him to marry her. He had never even seen her before and furthermore he had just been jilted by a chorus girl with whom he imagined himself very much in love. But the idea appealed to him and he married her! See the various turns in this strange romance now at the theatre.

In which a girl from the Ghetto marries a New York millionaire "at first sight."

His wife, whom he had permitted to return to her home, because he believed her beneath him, took the stand and told a lie that smirched his name to save him from a prison sentence! This is but one of the startling moments in "Who Will Marry Me?" now showing at the theatre.

The star of "My Unmarried Wife," "All Night" and "A Society Sensation" in one of the most unusual photoplays ever produced—an Italian girl from the east side and a millionaire marry ten minutes after they have met!

SUGGESTIONS

Certainly the Bluebird Company is maintaining a high standard as regards the selection of box-office titles for its productions. "Who Will Marry Me?" will set people guessing the minute they lay eyes on it. What does it mean? What is the situation that causes the question, this question that is almost a plea? These thoughts will run through the spectator's mind as soon as this title flashes across his vision. So make the most of it, display it in as many ways as you possibly can.

If you book the show for a week's run use a teaser ad campaign. There are some titles which this sort of advertising just fits. "Who Will Marry Me?" is one. Can you imagine the interest that the mere repetition of this title alone would create if repeated in the newspapers and on your screen for a few days with no explanatory wording? Try it and watch for big results.

When you come to shaping your regular announcement there are any number of angles from which you can regard the story. A glance at the synopsis will explain from whence the title is derived. Use this situation, or part of it, as a catchline beneath the title. A picture of the star in an appealing attitude might be secured to dress the advertisement or as a background to it. But never neglect the title. It has twice as much interest-awakening power as the ordinary caption.

Situations Are Unreal, But It's a Tom Moore Production Anyway

THIS picture doesn't come up to "Thirty a Week" in entertaining value. Several of its situations are weak; they couldn't have happened that way in real life.

The hero, an idler, is reproached by his millionaire father; so he leaves home just to show that he can make his way in the world without the help of his money. He beats his way West, and lands in a mining town. Having no money to pay for his meal, he is forced to wash dishes. The town boss takes him for a boob, and seeing in him a chance to further his aims, appoints him sheriff. In a short time the hero succeeds in putting the lid tight on the town: He closes the saloons, tames the tough elements, and makes everybody go to church. Incidentally, he saves the mining property of an old miner from the hands of the scheming town boss, in the end marrying his daughter.

Although the hero sets out to make his own way in the world, he does nothing extraordinary to win the title of self-made man. Everything comes by chance to him. The overheard conversation figures in no little measure. Further, no man could have acted in a mining town as the hero of this picture does without having his body riddled with bullets.

Perhaps spectators will accept this as an evening's entertainment, but they will hardly praise it to their friends.—Released Dec. 29.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

In which Tom Moore heeds Horace Greeley's advice and takes to the western plains. A fast, breezy, comedy-drama with any number of thrills. Ora Carew is a charming heroine. Willard Mack wrote it—that's one of the reasons why it is so good.

He was a tenderfoot from the East but they made him sheriff, expecting to get away with all sorts of crooked games. But the tenderfoot came to and before they knew it he was ruling the town of Twin Bridges with an iron hand.

The lively, brisk romance of a tenderfoot and a western girl—he proved himself every inch as much of a man as the natives and cleaned up a pair of plotters besides.

There is something about the work of Willard Mack that gives it distinction when compared with the product of other screen writers. He showed us this skill in "The Hell Cat" and now in "Go West, Young Man," a picture of a totally different character, he shows it again—see it and enjoy yourself.

AD TALK

Tom Moore makes his third appearance as a star in Goldwyn Pictures at the theatre, beginning in "Go West, Young Man" by Willard Mack. Chosen carefully to present him to his admirers in a new guise, there seems little doubt that he will surprise and please them in the story of a scion of wealth who quarrels with his father and starts out to see the world. It is not from the window of a parlor car that Dick Latham does this, but from the "blind baggage" of a freight train in company with a crowd of hoboes.

In a far Western town his real adventures begin, however, the first of which is when the office of sheriff is thrust upon him by a scheming politician who plans to use Dick as a tool to mask his own nefarious doings. The actions of the tenderfoot sheriff constitute the most amusing moments of "Go West, Young Man."

But Dick is as true to himself as he is to the responsibilities of his new job and when the time comes he refuses to heed the warning sent him by one of the men associated with his supposed patron. Instead, Dick becomes a real reformer, cleaning up the town, seeing to it that a certain girl, whom he wins for his own, is not done out of her property.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a good title to advertise in connection with this picture and one which is such a popular phrase that it is bound to attract attention when displayed prominently. The start of the story, too, will bear relation in your advertising copy and will be found of interest; that is, the young man from the East going West and being thrust into the job of sheriff. Any catch lines you use should be based on this idea.

You have a good star to boost in Tom Moore. The exhibitors made him when he appeared in support of various Goldwyn female stars. Don't neglect him now that he has landed in electric lights. Play him up and also the type of production in which he appears—lively, brisk comedy-drama. If you advertise him to your people in the right way they will get to know that a Tom Moore picture means a comedy-drama of the higher type. Popularize him and his pictures. You will find that each one goes better than its predecessor as time goes on.

Dick Latham, after a quarrel with his wealthy father, insists that he can make his own living and sets out in a side door pullman for the western country. He happens to arrive in the town of Twin Bridges at the time that the bad man who rules the town, Hugh Godson, is deposing the sheriff for being too straight. Godson, in casting about for a "worthy" successor, hits upon Dick, a man that will do anything he says, so he believes. Godson is negotiating with Rosa Crimmins to buy her father's ranch. Crimmins lies ill and Rosa is tempted by the large sum offered by Godson but refuses, realizing that he must have a motive for making the offer.

Dick makes Rosa his deputy and proceeds to clean up the town of Twin Bridges. The saloon is closed and gambling prohibited. The tenderfoot from the East proves the master of the bad men. All this doesn't please Godson in the least but he makes no kick as long as Dick is ignorant regarding his plot against Rosa and her

Clean Crook Play That Should Give Complete Satisfaction

THERE isn't the least doubt in my mind but that this picture will give excellent satisfaction. It is a clean crook play, with the plot action rapid, and the situations logically developed.

The parents of the heroine die, so she goes to her elder sister, living in a big city; but she is shocked to find that she belongs to a gang of shoplifters and general crooks. She denounces and leaves her, obtaining a position with a jeweler, a wealthy bachelor. The gang decides to rob the jeweler's house, but are caught by the police in the act. The heroine is accused as being one of the gang and as having helped them to locate the jewels, but her sister's confession of the truth exonerates her. In the end the wealthy bachelor marries the heroine.

There are several exciting situations in the picture: they arouse the interest and retain it all the way through.

How a young woman from the country proved the equal of a band of crooks and schemers in a fast game of wits.

Pretty hard for a young lady fresh from the country to be thrown in with a gang of tough and hardened New York crooks! How she broke away from them and gained true happiness is interestingly told in "The Girl with No Regrets," now showing at the _____ theatre.

Peggy Hyland in her latest and most entertaining Fox picture—the story of how a country girl won out over a band of city crooks.

AD TALK

An unusual story of romance and plotters in the shape of crooks, is the basis of "The Girl with No Regrets," the Fox picture which will hold prior place on the screen of the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week. Peggy Hyland is the star of this picture and is seen in the role of a small town stenographer who comes to New York to live with her married sister. It doesn't take her long to discover that both her sister and her husband are crooks and she leaves them in disgust, securing employment as secretary to a millionaire who has a valuable collection of jewels.

How the romance between the girl and the millionaire proceeds and how it is menaced for a time by her relatives, as well as his, makes entertainment of an unusually high order. The story was written for Miss Hyland by Evelyn Campbell, who has contrived a series of situations of a highly sustaining order and which make the reels of "The Girl with No Regrets" pass quickly indeed. Miss Hyland has never been seen to such good advantage as in this picture. While the body of it is dramatic to a marked degree there are innumerable light scenes in which the star's work is guaranteed to produce smiles.

She receives support that is truly adequate from a cast including Charles Clary, Gene Burr, Betty Shade, Jack Nelson, Al Fremont, Harry Von Meter, Beverly Travers and William Ellingford. Other features on the bill of the _____ theatre for the same dates will include _____.

Signa Herrick, stenographer in a small-town bank, grows tired of her life and goes to New York to visit her married sister, Janet Durling. Janet and her husband, Jim, are crooks, which fact it doesn't take Signa very long to discover. She leaves their home and goes to a mission, through which she secures employment as secretary to Olney French, a man of wealth who happens to be a woman hater and a hard drinker besides. Signa's business is to transcribe French's dictation on his rare collection of Oriental jewels. These notes he plans publishing in book form.

In French's house live Gerald Marbury and his wife, near relatives of the millionaire's, who plot to get his fortune. It is Gerald who has made him such a drinker. The Marburys are instantly opposed to Signa, as they see that she sets right out to make a man of her employer. Because of this antagonism they employ a detective to watch her and discover that she is related to the Durlings. Gerald tells French that Signa is probably a crook, inasmuch as her sister is of the light fingered society, but French won't believe a word of it.

At a reception given by the Marburys, French and Signa enter the library just after Jim and his pals have entered to rob the safe. They hide behind the curtains. French proposes to Signa and she accepts. He gets the jewels from the safe and is showing them to her when he sees the crooks. A fight ensues and when the invaders are subdued, French learns the truth about Signa's relations. At that moment, however, Janet enters and exonerates her of any part in the attempted robbery. French takes Signa in his arms and orders the Marburys from his house.

SUGGESTIONS

Careful consideration of the story of this production indicates that the best angle for the exhibitor to look to in his advertising is incorporated in the fact that a country girl proves the better of crooks and schemers in the city. On this line you can build interesting advertising copy, stressing the girl's innocence and enlarging on the dangers that await her when she goes to live with her sister (a crook) in the city. If you play up this situation you will get a good bit of suspense in your advertisements that will result in your offering getting a good deal of attention. If you operate in a small town it might be particularly good to convey the fact that the girl from the little town put it over the wise ones in the big town. You're catering to your patrons' vanity then, which is one good way to attract business.

"HIS PARISIAN WIFE"—ARTCRAFT

Elsie Ferguson at Her Best in This, Says Reviewer

YOUR patrons, especially if they happen to be of the more cultured type, should get their money's worth out of this offering, because it is based on a story that is human. In fact, it is more human and closer to life than any of the stories furnished this star up to this day. The production end of the picture, on the other hand, should draw real comments; it is truly artistic.

The plot treats of a simple love affair between the hero, an American lawyer, and the heroine, a Parisian writer, who sells a story now and then for a living.

There is no villain in the story; though the hero's friend recognizes the injustice done to the heroine, and although he loves her, does not forget he is a gentleman.

CATCH LINES

He was a Bostonian from one of the staidest families on the River Charles. She was a Parisian, a woman used to leading her own life. When he introduced her into his home as his wife, his father and mother regarded her as something evil, something to be shunned! One of the best dramas of the year arises from this contrast of character. Don't fail to see Elsie Ferguson in "His Parisian Wife."

In which a young Bostonian lawyer weds a young woman, reporter on a Paris newspaper. Then comes the clash of ideals—of temperament. Boston frigidity vs. the warmth of the Latin! How this photoplay develops is only to be seen at the theatre.

He married a Parisian girl and was surprised to find her unadaptable to the frigid atmosphere of Boston!

Elsie Ferguson's greatest screen success—an original story by Eve Unsell in which the star receives support from David Powell and Courtney Foote, two of the most accomplished actors in the profession.

AD TALK

One of the most unusual and, at the same time, highly dramatic offerings of the year will be presented at the theatre on week when the Artcraft photoplay, "His Parisian Wife," featuring Elsie Ferguson, is shown for the first time in this city. Miss Ferguson has achieved many successes during her career of somewhat over a year before the motion picture camera, but it may safely be said that "His Parisian Wife" is the brilliant achievement of her remarkable career. The story, original with Eve Unsell, one of the most skillful scenarioists of the day and a leading authority on screen technique, offers Miss Ferguson the title role, that of a Parisian woman of letters who marries a Boston lawyer.

It doesn't take a great amount of perspicacity to foretell the character of the events which follow, although it would take more than a modicum to conjure up dramatic situations of the undeniable strength and force of those provided by Miss Unsell. The Bostonian returns to his native land with his brilliant wife and straightway his parents take a marked dislike toward her. Anything from Paris must be wicked, is their belief. And their foolish attitude toward the woman precipitates a breach between husband and wife that is only narrowed again after a highly sustained series of situations.

Miss Ferguson appears resplendent in the title part. David Powell, one of the most polished of actors, appears as her husband. Another exceptional performance is contributed by Courtney Foote while the supporting cast is, in every case, well up to the high standard maintained in all Artcraft productions.

In Paris, Martin Wesley, a young American lawyer, meets Fauvette, a reporter on one of the city's newspapers. After a brief courtship he marries her and then takes her home with him to his people in Boston. Wesley's parents treat his wife coldly. They look upon anything from the French city with a degree of horror, and though Fauvette has beauty, breeding and refinement, they instantly brand her as unfit company for the ancient New England stock that they are. This attitude of his parents toward Fauvette begins to take root in Wesley, finally, and he asks himself, "Might she not have a past, after all?" He shortly begins to treat her cruelly by sometimes ignoring her and sometimes asserting what he believes to be his rights as a husband.

On the night that Tony Rye, Wesley's friend, comes for dinner, Fauvette appears in a rather low-cut gown and this causes the cloud-burst. Wesley upbraids her. Afterwards Wesley leaves her to enable her to divorce him. Fauvette goes to New York and soon makes a success of writing. Her books bear the name of "Marie Trieste," as authoress, and she soon becomes widely known under this name. Wesley, who at first turned to drink to forget his wife, reforms and makes a name, winning an important law case. He decides to go to New York and lays a plan. He is well aware that Tony admires—even loves—his wife and his plan is to win her back for himself and then tell her that she can go to Tony!

But when he again comes in contact with her, Wesley realizes more than ever that he really loves his wife. And instead of carrying out his ironical revenge he begs her forgiveness and offers himself to her. So, each realizing their shortcomings, they arrive at a happy understanding at last.

SUGGESTIONS

It is hardly necessary to state that the great point to bring out regarding this picture is the contrast in the two principal characters. "The Parisian Wife of a Bostonian." In that line lies the whole power and strength of the photodrama. There are any number of interesting and compelling arguments you can get up, using this as a basis for your advertising. And if you follow along this line you are bound to get people interested. The comparison hasn't been drawn to any extent on the films and at present, when we are in such constant touch with France, it is bound to be of more than passing interest. So follow up this angle and go the limit on it.

Then of course there is Miss Ferguson, a star of the first magnitude. It would not be fair to neglect David Powell either—that is, fair to yourself. He has done great work on the screen in support of many of the foremost stars. Courtney Foote is another. His ability and his past record, together with his fine performance in this feature, should earn him a place on the billing.

Joan Hope, daughter of a chewing gum king, longs for a romantic life which is not hers. When her father departs on a business trip she determines to have her fling and makes her way to the railroad station. It so happens that Kent Standish, amateur detective, is on the trail of the "Countess of Crex," a Russian lady known to have a stolen necklace in her keeping. Kent, at the station, believes he has found the woman in Joan. And then Joan goes ahead and firmly establishes this idea in Kent's brain. For on the train, who should sit next to her but the bogus Countess herself! The Countess being rather fearful of detectives, suggests to Joan that they change identities for the period of a week and to Joan's romantic nature this appeals strongly. So card cases, check books, pocket books and the like are exchanged—and accidentally—the Countess' box containing the jewels and Joan's box containing chewing gum!

At the hotel Joan registers as the Countess and creates a mild sensation. When other crooks, agents of Robert La Rue, the head of the gang, arrive and make queer noises at Joan, meaning that they want the jewels, she laughs at them and they go away to report to the chief that they have been double crossed. Kent finds himself falling in love with the young lady, knowing that she is wicked and that she has a husband who wants to divorce her and what not. Joan's father returns to his home and discovers her gone. He arrives at the hotel in search of her just as the bogus Countess has returned to exchange the gum for the jewels and then the mystery begins to clear. It clears completely when, at the police station, Joan explains the whole thing and proves herself quite innocent and without a husband, for Kent's special benefit.

AD TALK

Mary Miles Minter will be seen at the theatre on _____ of _____ week in her latest American comedy, "The Amazing Imposter," by name. Miss Minter has been seen in a number of unusually delightful comedies and comedy-dramas of late, but it may safely be said that as far as the number of laughs are concerned "The Amazing Imposter" puts all her previous pictures well in the shade. Joseph Franklin Poland, who prepared the story for her, is a writer of skill. In this case he has contrived a number of situations that for sheer comedy value are excellence themselves. The complications increase as the picture goes along working somewhat after the manner of a lie; one leads to another and that quickly to another. At any rate, before "The Amazing Imposter" is done the spectator finds himself rapt in a paroxysm of mirth at the whole aspect of the heroine's predicament.

Joan Hope is the daughter of a chewing gum king, a little lady who wants to have a romance but who can't find it in papa's gum. When he goes away on a business trip her big chance comes. What could be sweeter than to have a Countess offer to change identities with her for the period of seven days! Joan leaps at the idea and shortly afterwards installs herself in a hotel under the name of the Countess of Crex. Of course Joan didn't know that the Countess was a lady crook and that a handsome detective was trailing her—otherwise she might not have done it—but on the other hand, she might have anyway. Joan was game, to say the least, as this picture well proves and the handsome detective, of course, becomes the son-in-law of the chewing gum king before the tale is done.

CATCH LINES

Papa's chewing gum factory didn't offer anything romantic to Joan. She wanted romance and wanted it spelt with a capital R. How she found it and pursued and pursued and pursued it forms the basis of this delightful comedy.

To Joan's romantic soul the idea appealed strongly. Here was a Countess with a foreign accent and everything, offering to change places and identities with her for a week! She jumped at the chance. The only trouble was that the "Countess" happened to be a crook. But it wasn't so much trouble, after all, for there was a handsome detective on the trail of the case. See other developments in this lively comedy at the theatre.

Sort of tough—just as you've told the man you love that you are lovely and innocent and unmarried and all that—sort of tough to have a rough specimen step up and serve you with divorce papers! This is what happened to Joan in "The Amazing Imposter"—see how she climbed out of the situation.

Joseph Franklin Poland has provided Miss Minter with a swift moving farce, filled with the funniest complications ever. It is a perfect riot of comedy, this "The Amazing Imposter" and the star proves that she is one by shining every scene of the way.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been playing the previous Mary Miles Minter American comedies your way is all paved for you on this one, for the star has gained more admirers owing to the new type of picture she has been doing the past few months. The exhibitor should take advantage of this fact and so publicize the star and the brand name that when a patron reads them he knows instinctively the type of entertainment that is to be offered on the screen. Indications are that Miss Minter will remain in this type of production, so it is not too late to begin now.

"The Amazing Imposter" is a farce of mistaken identities and any way that you can bring out the tangle of situations in your advertising copy will be appropriate. Treat the subject lightly of course and try to relate some of the funniest situations of the picture.

SUGGESTIONS

The wise showman need not be told how to advertise a Griffith production. All that is needed is a simple announcement of picture, producer, theatre and dates and the trick is usually turned. As Griffith has produced a number of war pictures, however, it would be wise to employ a line to the effect that "A Romance of Happy Valley" is remote from all thought of the war, merely to distinguish it from his other productions.

In advertising the production don't fail to bring out the human quality of the picture. It is in injecting this into his productions that Griffith wins out over the heads of other directors. So be sure to emphasize this quality in all advertising. Try to depart from the beaten path of picture announcements. Use simple direct language and get an appeal into it. In any arguments you print follow out the same line. Don't get "funny" with the picture.

The leads, Robert Harron and Lillian Gish, have done such good work in all the recent Griffith productions that you can use their names to advantage. George Fawcett also appears in a good character part.

Heart Appeal Is There; Photography and Sets Are Good

THIS picture should furnish fairly good entertainment to your patrons. The element of heart appeal, as well as that of suspense, have been embodied into the situations. The interest, on the other hand, is well held all the way through.

A stolen baby boy forms the foundation of the story, in which the heroine, by mere chance, restores him to his distracted mother, bringing happiness to the household. In gratitude, the mother furnishes the heroine with fine clothes and finds her lost hero, bringing them happily together.

Beth is drudge in a cheap boarding-house until one day a petty theft occurs and everyone points to her as the culprit. The housekeeper locks her in a room, threatening to send her to a house of correction, but Beth makes her escape and flees in terror. It so happens that she lands on the doorstep of Jimmie Vernon's little attic room after she has tramped the city all day until exhausted. Jimmie is an artist by intent, but a prizefighter by necessity. That night he returns from a pool-room bearing a small baby. Louis, a crook, had stolen it from the wealthy Wynnes in the hope of securing a ransom, had taken it to the gambling place which had subsequently been raided, so Jimmie had snatched the infant and brought it safely home.

He takes both Beth and the child into his place and manages to eke out a living for them. One night while Jimmie is away in the ring, Louis enters and again takes the baby despite Beth's resistance. Later when Jimmie doesn't turn up Beth again becomes a wanderer and is taken in by the Wynnes. Mrs. Wynne lies seriously ill over the loss of her child. Not knowing that the baby she cared for and the Wynne baby are one and the same, she again goes to Louis and succeeds in "borrowing" the infant for a time. Mrs. Wynne regains her health rapidly when the child is restored.

Later When Jimmie comes out of the hospital where his last fight had laid him, explanations are in order and any suspicion that rested on Beth is put to rout. Beth is given a home with the Wynnes while money is advanced to Jimmie to enable him to continue his art lessons and promises between him and Beth are exchanged.

AD TALK

Gladys Leslie, the little actress with a "million-dollar smile," will be seen at the theatre on _____ of _____ week in her latest Vitagraph picture, entitled "Fortune's Child." This was written for her by Lawrence McCloskey and provides her with the role of Beth, the drudge in a boarding house. Her only happiness in this dull position is gleaned from a book of fairy-tales. But no kind fairy comes into her life—not at the boarding house. In fact, one day she is accused of stealing and threatened with arrest and confinement in the House of Correction. So Beth makes her escape from the unhappy place and becomes a wanderer.

From here on, the film takes on a romantic interest of an unusual and pretty variety. How Beth wins the love of a struggling artist and restores happiness (happiness in the shape of a baby) to the home of the rich Wynnes, forms a fanciful and charming little tale in which Miss Leslie appears to her best advantage. It is just the sort of picture in which you expect and want to see this charming little star and while it is light and happy it contains a degree of wholesome philosophy that makes it of more than passing interest.

Miss Leslie is supported by such well known Vitagraphers as Kempton Greene, Stanley Walpole, Frances Mann, Fred Smith and Denton Vane, while the picture was made under the direction of Joseph Gleason.

CATCH LINES

Another modern Cinderella—Beth was drudge in a boarding house and her Prince Charming came to her in the guise of a prize fighter! One of the most wholesome and delightful little stories that Vitagraph has presented.

He was a painter by choice but a prize-fighter by necessity! Beth came into his life and managed to fix it so that he could go back to painting canvases instead of black-eyes. How she did it forms the charming content of Gladys Leslie's latest Vitagraph picture, "Fortune's Child."

"VENUS IN THE EAST"—PARAMOUNT

If You Get By with This Picture You Should Be Satisfied

ALL you should expect to do with this picture is to get by; you shouldn't hope to create a riot. It isn't in it.

The story is weak and inconsistent: and as there are no strong points in it whatever to detract the spectator's attention, the inconsistencies become much more noticeable. For instance, it doesn't seem probable that a man would put eleven hundred dollars in his coat pocket, and then leave the coat on a bench at the railroad station. Such instances may have happened in real life, but being only isolated cases, they don't convince in pictures.

Again, that the hero would donate to the woman he is crazy to meet a pearl necklace worth $250,000 is beyond credulity. There are a number of other doubtful points in the picture which all do their bit to destroy the illusion.

If this star is of any value to you, I would suggest you refrain from advertising this picture strong. Let a simple announcement bring in the Washburn fans. Thus, the disappointment will correspondingly be less.—Released Jan. 26.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Adapted from the Saturday Evening Post serial of the same name by Wallace Irwin.

He saw a Venus in the East and pursued her! He found her every bit as delightful in appearance as her pictures indicated and he immediately proposed and was accepted. Then he discovered that she was cold and grasping and without love for him. How he found the real Venus makes a delightful tale delightfully told in this Paramount picture.

A story of two kinds of beauty. Beauty that is only skin-deep and the other kind that penetrates deeper. How Buddy McNair got entangled by the former and freed by the latter forms a comedy-drama that is altogether irresistible.

The kind of picture that just fits Bryant Washburn. Something like the Skinner series, just as human. Something like "The Gypsy Trail," just as romantic.

AD TALK

A Saturday Evening Post serial, "Venus in the East" by name, which ran in this magazine last year, is the foundation for the photoplay which Bryant Washburn will appear in at the theatre on _____ of _____ week. Wallace Irwin, one of the popular writers of modern times, is author of this story and throughout it is so well suited to the talents of Washburn that one might easily believe that Mr. Irwin had written it with that star in mind as Buddy McNair.

Buddy is the son of a western millionaire and inherits his vast fortune. Somewhat uncouth, Buddy departs for the East in pursuit of an illusive Venus, whose picture he saw in the papers. This Venus is none other than Mrs. Pat Dyvenot, society leader who struggles along and finds it rather hard to make both ends meet. So when Buddy gains an introduction and almost immediately proposes marriage she accepts. Before long, however, the Westerner discovers that he has made a mistake. Mrs. Dyvenot is a Venus to look at all right, but Buddy wants companionship and doesn't like the idea of placing Mrs. Pat in a frame and gazing at her for the rest of his life.

How he manages to break his engagement with the cold and haughty society lady and how he finds a girl that is a Venus in mind as well as in face, concludes this spirited story in delightful style. Mr. Washburn has the benefit of an excellent supporting cast, which includes Anna Q. Nilsson, Margery Wilson, Guy Oliver and Clarence Burton.

Buddy McNair, having inherited a vast fortune from his father who discovered some new ore-reducing process, doesn't know exactly how to spend it until he sees a picture of Mrs. Pat Dyvenot in the paper. Mrs. Dyvenot is a beautiful society woman of New York and without a husband. Buddy straightway terms her his Venus in the East and decides to go to New York and win her. On the train he makes the acquaintance of a young woman with several gamblers. They proceed to cheat him of a good portion of his wealth at cards and circumstance convince Buddy that the girl is an accomplice.

Arriving in New York, Buddy soon makes the acquaintance of Mrs. Dyvenot and because of his fabulous wealth she readily accepts his proposal of marriage. It is not long, however, before Buddy discovers that his fiancée fails to possess a beauty of mind equal to that of her face. She is bankrupt besides. One day she announces the loss of a valuable necklace and Buddy buys another one for her. Mrs. Dyvenot's disgruntled suitor tells him that he is a fool and that the real necklace lies in pawn.

Buddy goes to look the matter up and—comes face to face with Martha, the girl of the train. She surprises him by handing back his money and explaining the whole matter much to his liking. And Martha, Buddy now realizes, is his true Venus in the East. How to break his engagement with Mrs. Dyvenot puzzles him, but he makes short work of the job when he announces that his fortune has been swept away. There isn't even a parting kiss between them. And so Buddy and his new Venus depart again for the West.

SUGGESTIONS

Not a very good title for a male star at first glance, is it? "Venus in the East." But don't dismiss it without careful consideration. Will it lend itself to advertising? It will and you can get more original copy out of it than you can with the average title. In the Paramount advertising (the one-column cut is shown elsewhere on this page), a statue of the Venus de Milo is shown, decorated with a hat and a rope of jewels. This, with the figure of Bryant Washburn alongside, will create a display that will command attention instantly.

This same idea can be carried out in any special lobby decorations that you employ yourself. You might also go as far as to obtain a copy of this famous statue and place it in your lobby or near the box office dressed with similar articles of feminine wearing apparel. With an announcement round about the lady's feet you would have a display that would be unusual, amusing and interesting.

Washburn's popularity is increasing, due to the fine pictures that Paramount has given him. He is doing light comedy-dramas. Let your people know that each Washburn picture stands for just such a brand of entertainment. You will be cashing in on a personality and a series of productions that stand by themselves in the field of motion pictures.

"MANDARIN'S GOLD"—WORLD

Well Cast Drama Sustained by Expert Handling and Unusual Atmosphere

UNDER the new World regime Kitty Gordon was awarded vehicles that suited her. "Mandarin's Gold" is one of these. Miss Gordon never should have played a college girl or a maid of the mountains, parts that she once had thrust upon her. Here she is awarded the role of a society woman who contracts debts by poor bridge playing and who has a dream about selling an innocent little Chinese girl to a wicked old Mandarin for a bag of gold. The dream is highly sustained and woven in with the picture proper, with the result that the spectator is taken quite by surprise when the lady awakes.

"Mandarin's Gold" is a well knit picture from start to finish and in addition to the entertainment derived from the finished construction of the plot, a goodly portion of interest is created in the Chinese atmosphere of the picture. Warner Oland as the silken clad Mandarin, with finger nails long and encased in jeweled tips, creates more than a modicum of interest on his own account and his playing of his important part is excellent.

It was Phil Lonergan who contrived this somewhat original story by combining the lady-in-debt theme with the Chinese atmosphere, and he has handled his work well. When it is added that Oscar Apfel directed its realism is safely vouched for.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 10.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

"Mandarin's Gold," starring Kitty Gordon, will be the featured attraction at the — theatre on — of — week. This is probably the best picture in which Miss Gordon has been seen, inasmuch as it offers her a role that is well suited to her appearance and talents, while the dramatic fare presented it strong and unusual. Philip Lonergan, the author of the story, contrived an original series of situations centering about a married woman who plunged at cards and lost heavily. He introduced a counterplot in which a Chinese Mandarin figured prominently and brought these two threads together, forming a climax of real dramatic force.

Oscar Apfel, a director who is always sure on detail and atmosphere and who combines a keen insight into dramatic construction with an ability to bring out the best in his players, had charge of the production of "Mandarin's Gold" and it is one of his best works. Miss Gordon, under his direction, appears to splendid advantage and plays her role of the wife who stoops to a crime to free herself from debt, in admirable fashion. Warner Oland, as the Mandarin, creates a character long to be remembered. Mr. Oland is particularly adept at playing Orientals. He is a master of makeup and an actor of long standing and ability. Some patrons doubtless have seen him in the new serial, "The Lightning Raider," in which he again appears as a Chinaman. Irving Cummings, George MacQuarrie, Tony Merlo and a number of Chinese players complete the cast of "Mandarin's Gold."

Betty Cardon is a bridge fiend, and moreover, she is not a good hand at the game. Her losses mount and mount until finally her husband, Blair, finds himself unable to keep pace with them. He asks her to stop, but the fever is in Betty and she can not. She goes in debt to Geoffrey

North, a man of wealth, who admires her as the beautiful woman she is. But even he demands his dues and when Betty learns what he expects, she suffers a revulsion of feeling. How is she to get out of her predicament? How is she to pay these notes and again be free?

In the Cardon household there is Cherry Blossom, a little Chinese girl to whom Betty had given refuge when she learned that her father had made arrangements to sell her to Li Hsun, the Mandarin. The Mandarin had often approached Betty, weighing bags of gold in his hand, offering her small fortunes if she will but give up Cherry Blossom, but Betty had always remained firm and true to her promise to protect the girl.

Now, as she sits in her chair brooding over her losses, with Li Hsun's last note in her hand, she wavers and decides to give up the girl to a horrible fate. The plans are made, all she must do is to give the girl to the Mandarin's messenger. And this she does. She receives in turn the gold with which she pays her debt and then the full horror of her act dawns on her. She rushes to the Mandarin to save Cherry Blossom and arrives while he is torturing her to give up the man she loves for him. She refuses, so she is killed, and with her her lover. Blair Cardon has gotten on the trail of his wife and breaks into the Mandarin's den with the police. The police shoot the Mandarin as he attempts to escape and with his dying breath he tells of Betty's deed. Blair denounces her.

Then Betty awakes in her chair with the final offer from the Mandarin still in her hand. With a glad cry she realizes it has all been a dream and when her husband returns from business she confesses all to him and promises to stop her gambling.

CATCH LINES

How a woman was tempted by the Wealth of a Mandarin to commit a crime against an innocent girl and her own conscience. How matters come to a happy conclusion, forms one of the most startling climaxes that ever capped a photoplay.

Kitty Gordon in a role exactly suited to her talents. A picture of superlative realism, combining the story of a horrible Chinese plot with that of a white woman's sin against herself and her sex. Presenting one of the most startling climaxes possible.

Kitty Gordon, supported by Warner Oland, than whom there is none better in the portrayal of Oriental roles. As the oily, sly Mandarin he creates a striking contrast to the beautiful star. See their battle of wits in "Mandarin's Gold"—One of the few thrilling pictures of the season.

SUGGESTIONS

Feature the Chinese atmosphere in this production and Warner Oland's portrayal of the Mandarin. Both are unusual and are worthy of being played up to the fullest extent. And decorations that you may inaugurate in your theatre during the picture's run should be Chinese, of course. Advertising should have something Oriental about it also. Anything to suggest the atmosphere will suffice.

Play Kitty Gordon's role up as the best she has had, for this is undoubtedly the truth, at least with respect to World pictures. You yourself know that some of her vehicles of the past have not suited her but this one does. So emphasize this point and also state that her performance is of high order. You won't be wrong in this either.

father. But Dick soon afterwards learns of this. Godson tries to double-cross his partner in crime and Dick gets on the trail of the whole affair. The upshot of it is that both Godson and the other bad man are cast in jail and Rosa discovers that her father's ranch is rich in gold.

Word then comes to Dick that some strangers are gambling in the hotel, and seeking them out with the idea of arresting them, he finds his father and business acquaintances who came West to buy the Crimmins property from Godson. Dick says he'll permit them to keep out of jail if they'll buy it from Rosa and so the romance ends as all good romances should.

"Romance and Rings," with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew

(Paramount Comedy—Two Reels)

"Romance and Rings" is the first Drew comedy released since the Drews left the Metro program. It may be rightly called a romantic comedy-drama. Although it may please high-class audiences, it will hardly get any laughs. The story is based on the fact that, when Henry and Polly are ready to be married, Henry has no ring, having forgotten it in his office. He borrows the wedding ring of his friend's wife, with the understanding that he is to return it immediately afterwards; but Polly, not knowing it is a borrowed ring, takes great pride in it. His friend insists for the return of it, but Henry is afraid to ask his wife for it, lest she get angry. This causes complications which are happily explained towards the end. Polly returns the borrowed ring, receiving her own in return.—P. S. Harrison.

"Creaking Stairs," with Mary McLaren (Universal.—Feb. 10.—Six Reels.—Directed by Rupert Julian)

It is too bad that so much good work should have been wasted on an unworthy story. The timber used for its construction is so weak that it really "creaks." Even Rupert Julian's skill could not pull it out of the hole.

The story, condensed to a few lines, is as follows: The hero loves the heroine and asks her to marry him. Although she loves him, she refuses. His pleadings bring forth the confession that a wealthy bachelor had taken advantage of her with false promises of marriage. But the hero forgives. So they marry, move to their new home, and are happy.

For some unexplained reason she falls back on her rent. She puts off the rent agent, until the landlord is compelled to call on her himself. She is shocked to find out that her landlord is none other than THE MAN. She begs him to go, but at that minute he drops dead from heart failure.

Fearing lest her husband misconstrue his presence there, she summons help and hides the body in the attic. She takes it out at night and places it somewhere in the neighborhood. The husband becomes suspicious on account of the odd actions of everybody in the house, and when he discovers the villain's hat, creates a scene. In the end, everything is explained satisfactorily.

Why should the heroine hide the body when she could have very easily established the fact that he was the landlord and had called for the rent? Why the police should have claimed he was murdered, when a child knows that a coroner's autopsy could have established the cause of his death? As these points form more or less the framework, they weaken the story. Besides, it is too morbid. Death scenes, especially those showing the agonies of a dying man, do not entertain.

P. S. HARRISON

"The Man of Might"

(Vitagraph Serial—Third Episode)

This episode opens showing an automobile rushing over a yawning chasm. It is followed by other dangerous tricks. A man is seen hanging over a cliff in the mid-air. He was placed there by the villains as a bait to attract the hero, but the latter, scenting the bait, quietly throws his lariat and pulls him safely to the middle of the cliff. But they are caught by the villains. Again they escape and hide in a blind shaft. The villains discover them and determine to smoke them out. But help arrives in time and they are saved. The last scene shows the hero and the man he saved in a cabin, and a fuse that was leading to the cabin, set fire by the villains, who were challenging them to come out of the cabin if they don't want to be blown to heavens.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to November 17, 1918.

OUT OF THE SHADOW (PARAMOUNT) FREDERICK (JAN. 5).....JAN. 25

"Star strikes good one after several months."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Very fair production. Better than the last two she has had."

PERFECT LADY, A (GOLDWYN) KENNEDY (DEC. 8).....DEC. 14

"Star blends the tear and the smile delightfully."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Big business solid week." "Excellent." "Well made picture, but star rather mis-cast. Madge does not look like a burlesque queen." "A delightful story. Give us more like this."

"Extra big business." "A good picture but not star's best."

"Madge Kennedy's best." "Good. Pleased." "A genuine photoplay treat." "Fine picture." "A winner. Madge Kennedy very popular. Excellent. Booked for three days and held over one day."

Consensus—"Excellent picture with fine drawing powers."

PERFECT 36, A (GOLDWYN) MABEL NORMAND (NOV. 17).....

Exhibitor Comment—"Censors spoiled this for Pennsylvania." "Average business." "Extra big to big business seven straight days."

"Fair. Story weak." "Just the kind of a picture they want to see Mabel Normand in. Went over big to extra big business." "Big business; played with 'Shoulder Arms.'" "The poorest picture we ever screened. Took it off the first day." "One Goldwyn star we could do without." "Not a picture that would create mouth to mouth advertising." "Poor business." "Fair comedy. Average Normand type."

"Two stars in a rather sluggish comedy-drama."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased. Average business first day, extra big Saturday." "Average picture. Stars help to put it over. Extra big, average to big in three days."

(Six Parts)

"Sex play considered remarkable by interviewer."—M. P. News.

QUICKSAND (PARAMOUNT) DORO DALTON (DEC. 22).....DEC. 28

"Reviewer thinks picture was wrecked at the start."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture." "Fairly good dramatic story. Held its interest and apparently satisfied." "Average business."

"Everyone pleased with it. Personally I didn't think trouble all through this picture would be liked, but I was wrong. Acting excellent. Photography also very good." "Everybody liked star and picture. Wonderful directing."

"Snappy action to this tale of those familiar German spies."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Average business."

RESTLESS SOULS (TRIANGLE) ALMA RUBENS (FEB. 2).....FEB. 1

(Six Parts)

"Skillful handling makes delicate subject very good picture."—M. P. News.

ROAD THROUGH THE DARK (SELECT) YOUNG (NOV. 25).....DEC. 21

"Moral question raised in story that looks worthy."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Big business." "Very good. Big business."

"Fairly good. Would have been better without war stuff." "Average business." "This is type of picture the public wants this star in. Well made picture. Business good."

Consensus—"Good production with strong drawing powers."

ROPED (UNIVERSAL SPECIAL) CAREY (JAN. 18).....JAN. 4

(Six Parts)

"Star should please everybody in this production."—M. P. News.

ROUGH NECK, THE (WORLD) LOVE (FEB. 3).....FEB. 1

"Latest Montagu Love picture shows excellent team work."—M. P. News.

Universal Appoints Goldman District Manager

WHO says grit and hard work won't get you there? Ask Sidney Goldman, manager of the Chicago Jewel Exchange, and he'll tell you different.

Three years ago he came to Chicago with nothing but a letter of introduction.

His first job in the film business was as night manager of the Vitagraph then managed by Ike Von Ronkel. Anyone who knows the ropes of the film business will tell you that the hardest, dirtiest and most ungrateful job in the film business is the job of night manager.

Goldman wasn't used to that kind of work, but for over three months he stuck to it with the determination to make good and to earn himself a reputation in the film business.

And determination and pluck won.

In less than six months' time he became a salesman and after three months of that he was selected as Assistant Manager of the Central Film Company, and six months after that he was chosen to take charge of the Chicago Goldwyn office, where he remained until Carl Laemmle heard of his ability and made him manager of the Jewel Exchange in Chicago.

Last week he received notification from the Universal Film Company that he had been appointed Division Manager of the entire Central States, which consists of every Universal Film Exchange between Chicago and Omaha. He will be in entire charge and will have full say of all the Universal Exchanges in Chicago, Milwaukee, Omaha, Des Moines, and Minneapolis and Omaha.

Mr. Goldman will remain as manager of the Chicago Jewel office until the first of February and although his duties will compel him to be out of town quite a bit he will make his headquarters in Chicago.

Success Series Draws Crowds in Dubuque

THE first of the Paramount Success Series to be shown in Dubuque, Ia., was "Wildflower," with Marguerite Clark. The picture was presented at the Grand on Sunday, January 19, and as a crowd-getter it couldn't be beat. The combination of Marguerite Clark with Harold Lockwood and Jack Pickford seemed to draw every one of their admirers to the theatre. Forty-five minutes after the opening of the theatre in the afternoon there was not a seat in the house and the evening crowds surpassed those of the afternoon.

In spite of its being a picture over four years old, it was most enjoyable, in fact, it was considered much better than many of the features one sees today.

Dundee Exhibitor Buys Chain of Theatres

ACCORDING to advices from Elgin, Ill., a deal was closed the week of January 12 whereby Manager Gus Cook of the Crystal theatre, Dundee, Ill., comes into possession of a chain of three northern Kane county moving picture houses.

He purchased the Strand and Idle Hour theatres at St. Charles, the former from P. D. Alleman, the latter from J. F. Bryant.

Four years ago, coming here from Fond du Lac, Wis., Mr. Cook built the Strand at St. Charles. A year or so later he disposed of it to Mr. Alleman, a former railroad man. Now that Mr. Alleman may return to his former work, Mr. Cook has rebought the Strand which he has been managing for Mr. Alleman for several months.

He also closed a deal the same week with J. F. Bryant for the Idle Hour theatre, across the street from the Strand. Competition had proved that the town is not big enough to successfully support two show houses) so Manager Cook, when he comes into possession of the Idle Hour, October 1, will open it only occasionally, for holiday, Saturday and Sunday matinees, etc., and at other times will rent it for local entertainments.

When Mr. Cook leased the Crystal at Dundee, he purchased the opera house there, and has rented it since for dances and entertainments. In this way he keeps out competition and makes his investment pay.

Mr. Cook is one of the most competent and popular theatre-men of northern Illinois. He is a hustler in every sense of the word. In addition to his Dundee theatre and entertainment hall, he has ownership of the bill-posting business and is an automobile agent. He is noted for his courtesy and willingness to oblige and is exceedingly popular in his community.

Springfield Theatres Experience Big Sunday

ONE of the biggest Sundays in the history of Springfield, Ill., theatricals was that experienced by the playhouses of that city on January 19. Every theatre in the city was filled to overflowing, and some of the houses turned away hundreds. This was true, especially of the Chatterton, Majestic and Gaiety. Seldom has such an outpouring of pleasure seekers turned themselves loose on the amusement purveyors, with the result that the coffers at all theatres were heavy when the day's work was done. The extra fine weather was responsible, the day being more like Easter Sunday than the middle of January.

"Hearts of the World" opened at the Chatterton in Springfield on Sunday, January 19, for eight days, sixteen performances. The opening day saw the house sold out twice, with many unable to gain admittance.

Interesting Items of Elgin

WOMEN of the St. James' Episcopal Church in Elgin, Ill., will promote the picture, "Unclaimed Goods," to be shown soon at the Crystal theatre there.

EX-MANAGER FRANK VANSTON, of the Temple theatre, in Elgin, attributes the report that he was dickering for purchase of the Strand, St. Charles, to imagination of two newspaper reporters who happened to ride on the street car with him from that town to Elgin a few weeks ago. They wrote the news story of the rumor, he affirms, and produced it from their own imagination and "Sherlock Holmesing." He says that he will make no effort to locate again until return of his boys from service, one of whom is in France, the other at Jefferson Barracks.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN in "Shoulder Arms" showed at the Strand, St. Charles, to record-breaking crowds the afternoon and evening of Sunday, January 19.

"CARMEN OF THE KLONDIKE" was shown there Wednesday, January 15, to average audience.

"HANDS UP," the Pathe serial, is drawing large patronage every Friday afternoon and evening.

CHARLES RAY in "His Own Home Town" pleased capacity audience on Saturday, January 18, matinee and night.

THAT many Elgin picturegoers still cherish memory of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" as Mary Pickford's most adorable picture person, was proved when many who saw her in the role when the picture showed at the Grand soon after its release, came down to the Star the second week in January to see her again.

IN addition to "Tarzan of the Apes," which had its first showing in Elgin the week of January 19, the Orpheum showed May Allison in "The Testing of Mildred Vane," Constance Talmadge in "Good-night, Paul," and Barbara Castleton and Johnny Hines in "Just Sylvia."

POPULARITY of Mary Pickford in return showing of "Rebecca," inspired Manager Crocker to bring her back to the Star in "M'Liss." It was shown Wednesday and Thursday, January 23 and 24, with the comedy, "Matrimony." Other offerings of the week at the Star included Margarita Fisher in "Fair Enough," Broncho Billy Anderson in "Red Blood and Yellow," Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider," the patriotic comedy drama, "Work or Fight," Corinne Griffith in "The Adventure Shop" and Tom Mix in a two-reel western drama. Comedies were "Just Rambling Along," Hughie Mack in "How Fatty Made Good," "Matrimony" and "The Fatal Marriage."

Willard F. Barnett, president and general manager of H. K. Barnett Theatre Supply Company

Willard F. Barnett Spends a Few Days in Chicago

WILLARD F. BARNETT, President and General Manager of the H. K. Barnett Theatre Supply Company, 1921 Main street, Dallas, Texas, has been spending a few days in Chicago in conference with Mr. O. F. Spahr, General Manager of the Enterprise Optical Company, who make the motiograph picture machine.

Mr. Barnett's company also has a store in New Orleans, located at 220 Baronne street. They are the exclusive Motiograph distributors for Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Mexico, in which territory they sold three hundred and fifty machines in the year just past—1918.

They are also the inventors of the portable steel booths adapted and used in all Army Y. M. C. A. buildings in the Southern division.

Mr. Barnett succeeds his brother, H. K. Barnett, deceased, who founded the firm of H. K. Barnett Theatre Supply Company, and has been associated with it since its foundation. Mr. H. K. Barnett died December 27, 1917.

The foundation of the company is "service," and real service at all times along the lines of friendly co-operation.

Mr. Barnett does not believe that when a sale is made that the transaction is closed, but continues to give their service throughout the life of the merchandise sold, thereby securing the confidence of their trade, which commands respect.

Mr. Barnett recently made a trip to their Southern territory, where, he says, conditions have never looked better.

While in Chicago he purchased goods for the coming year.

Mr. Barnett is also distributor for the Minusa screens and handles a full line of the E. E. Fulton Company's Fulco products.

NEWS weekly pictures at the Temple are following President Wilson in his peace mission and attracting many just to see them. Manager Fay considers them excellent drawing card.

IN the week of January 20 the management offered the "Houdini" mystery feature for the first time. Other pictures of the week were Violet Mersereau in "The Nature Girl," "Lure of the Circus," "Fatty Chases Chickens," "Rose of Wolfville," the Hearst News Weekly, Billy Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams," "The Surrender of the German Fleet."

Hoo's Hoo in Hoosierdom*Seeing Indianapolis from an Exchange Window*

Robert S. Schrader, the human splinter, chairman of the Indianapolis Board of Exchange Managers, and until the present week manager of the Pathe office, was tendered a banquet on the occasion of his transfer to Pittsburgh for Pathe. Mr. Schrader's transfer occasions much sincere regret in Indiana, although the banquet exerted a soothing effect on the mourners present. Speaking of the banquet, it was rather novel in that those who were so fortunate as to have wives brought 'em. It is to be observed that all males present went away from there under their own steam. O. P. Fauchier, city salesman, succeeds Schrader.

H. L. Conway, who hails from Milwaukee, and looks it, has assumed charge of the local Mutual office. No doubt he was kissed upon arrival by Daddy Beitman, the whirlwind from Wabash, who has been a-pining for his first love—the road.

Herman Garfield broke into town the past week on his way somewhere. Herman's always going somewhere just as if he had business on his mind.

Mayor Jewett has rendered an interesting decision upon the operation of Sunday shows, which has of late been under fire from the pulpit, to the effect that pictures when clean and instructive constitute a necessary form of entertainment, which, to him, seem as legitimate as the pursuit of worship on Sunday. The legal and theoretical points involved in the petition were manfully handled by the Mayor who winds up his reply by observing that people could not be legislated into the church. However, he has shut down Sunday operation of vaudeville and other stage performances.

"Carmen of the Klondike," Doll-Van's big winner, famed for its remarkable fist fight, has wound up a four-day run at the Crystal. This marks its second appearance down town, the first showing was at the Circle for a week.

Carl Lieber, Jr., Brother Brown's trusty henchman, and a member of First National by birth, has at last consented to the renovation of his knit tie. This affair was, for a time, the despair of loving friends, its ominous gloom darkening the cheery smile of those near and dear to him. The gladsome tidings has come as boon news indeed, and serves to bring back the roses to the cheeks and youth to the form of many a weary soul.

By the way, Brown's got a new tooth!

Abbott, Universal's light-heavyweight, was grossly pinched, Ford, overcoat and all, last week. His lights were not lit on the rattler. He has since explained to bosom friends that he had been running the bus with coal oil and struck upon the happy idea of using it for lights, but admits that it didn't work very well.

E. A. Sipe, of the flourishing tribe of Sipe, has taken up the burden for Doll-Van. He has been connected with the Amusement Supply Company of Chicago for some time. His initial trip takes him into the uttermost depths of Indiana, from whence many a staunch heart has fled.

Heard in Detroit

SEVERAL changes have taken place in Detroit film exchanges. D. Leo Dennison, formerly with Paramount, has become manager of the Detroit branch of the General Film Company, succeeding A. J. Reed. Jack Mowatt has been appointed special representative in Detroit and Michigan for the American Film Company. J. C. Sellard, formerly of General, is Fox booker and Joe Kalisky, formerly covering Western Michigan for Fox, is now in charge of the Detroit territory.

LESTER MATT, manager of the Strand theatre, Flint, who recently underwent a serious operation, is reported on the road to recovery.

DETROIT exhibitors, representing the residential theatres, have formed a new organization with Edgar F. Kirchner, president; Harry Goldstein, vice-president; King Perry, secretary, and J. C. Ritter, treasurer. The association meets every Friday at the Hotel Tuller.

SCREEN of "The Heart of Humanity" took place at the Majestic last Tuesday night. More than 200 exhibitors and their friends and a large number of city and state officials were present. The picture was screened with a full orchestra, there were song numbers by Henry Santrey, and there were cigars for the gentlemen and candy for the ladies. It was the largest crowd that has ever attended a screening in Detroit.

THE first United release, "Light of the Western Stars," with Dustin Farnum, is shown the week of February 3 at the Regent theatre. Something like 60 theatres are now signed up in Detroit and the state for this program.

A FILM BALL will shortly be staged in a downtown hotel by the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers.

They Say in Chicago That—

ANDREW KARZAS, manager of the Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, turned his house over to the Parent-Teachers' Association of the John Fiske School, Friday and Saturday, January 24 and 25. A part of the proceeds goes to the vocational fund of the school.

ATTORNEY WALTER L. HERIDAN, recent official of the American Commercial Film Company, is having a little trouble—arrested and charged with operating a confidence game. E. M. Gerstel, who bought a thousand dollars' worth of stock in the company, was foolish enough to want his thousand dollars back.

OVER seventy-five members of the Motion Picture Operators and Stage Hands and Managers attended the second annual entertainment given by Local 419 on the stage of the Lincoln Square theatre recently. The program consisted of music, refreshments, good eats, and plenty to smoke, donated by Mr. J. L. Bennett of the Lincoln Square Theatre Company.

THE Mickey Film Corporation screened their picture for the amusement of the returned soldiers and sailors and their families and exhibitors at Orchestra Hall on the 23rd. The consensus of opinion among the audience was that the picture should do a wonderful business in this territory. F. O. Nielsen, general manager of the company, deserves success, being one of the old time Chicago exhibitors and film men.

ONE of the busiest gentlemen in the city of Chicago is E. E. Fulton, head of the E. E. Fulton Company, manufacturers of the Fulco specialties and moving picture accessories. Mr. Fulton figures that 1919 is going to be a great big, elegant banner year. He has already found it necessary to increase his force, and by the time the year is a few months older he expects to have to add many more people.

LIEUT. R. B. REHM of the Photographic Aviation Department has returned from service.

C. A. REHM, secretary and general manager of the Atlas Educational Film Company, points with a great deal of pride to the work now in progress enlarging their quarters. The Atlas business under Mr. Rehm's management has advanced by jumps and is today enjoying a splendid business and carrying the endorsement of the largest manufacturers in the country for whom they have made pictures.

ASCHER BROS. have eliminated singers from all their houses. There seems to be a movement on foot among other exhibitors to follow their lead.

CHAS. H. CLARK has been appointed manager of the Rialto theatre, Champaign, Ill., succeeding Chas. H. Takacs. Mr. Clark has had a great deal of experience in many angles of the amusement business and should be able to handle the Champaign house in an up-to-date manner.

E. G. HOWELL, traveling auditor of the Universal Company, is in Chicago.

CHAS. MILLER is reported as being slated for the management of the Jewel Production Company, the position just made vacant by the promotion of Sid Goldman.

I. L. LESSERMAN, manager of the Universal Chicago office, has returned from New York and is back at his desk.

DAN LEDERMAN, formerly manager of the Des Moines, Ia., Universal exchange, is now making a tour of the exchanges installing a new booking system.

TOM HELPME, operator at the Star theatre, De Kalb, Ill., reports the death of his sister, a victim of the influenza.

WALTER THIMMING, Grand theatre, Sparta, Ill., is confined to his bed from the influenza.

M. M. BASKET of the Mutual, St. Louis, Mo., offices, was seen in southern Illinois lately with a bundle of contracts.

J. ARNETTE of West Frankfort announces that work will shortly commence on his new theatre, the Liberty.

L. B. MAYER, general manager of the Anita Stewart Productions, was registered at the La Salle Hotel recently.

EAST ST. LOUIS will have two new theatres. Joe Erber is erecting an eighteen-hundred-seat theatre and W. G. Redmon is putting up a fifteen-hundred-seat house.

FRANK ELLIS of Marion, Ill., owner of the Isis theatre, has started the work on the new $60,000 house that he announced last fall.

JOHN MARLOWE, owner of the Hippo at Herrin, Ill., has started to have plans drawn for a new theatre to cost $75,000 at Herrin, Ill. Mr. Marlowe will also erect a theatre in Murphysboro, Ill., that will cost around $60,000.

CHICAGO visitors: Bradford Brayton, Majestic, Streator, Ill.; G. H. Hines, Auditorium, South Bend, Ind.; Ed. Scheibel, Opera House, Streator, Ill.; J. West, West theatre, Galesburg, Ill.; D. W. Fulrath, Savanna, Ill.; Dee Robinson, Peoria, Ill.

B. B. HAMPDEN, New York film magnate, and Harry Weiss, manager Central Film Company, met recently at Galesburg, Ill. Galesburg is Mr. Hampden's home and he and his wife had come here to spend a few quiet days when recognized by Weiss.

G. W. REYNOLDS, owner of the Princess theatre at De Kalb, Ill., has purchased the Armory theatre, of the same city, and is running pictures, vaudeville and dances.

RALPH CROCKER of Elgin, Ill., had to resign his post as city editor of the Elgin Daily to take care of the increased business at his theatre, the Star.

BILLY WEISS, salesman of the Central Film Company, Chicago, is back from Camp Logan, Tex.

AFTER a siege of illness lasting sixteen weeks, Leo Degenhart, whose father runs the Princess theatre, is back on the job.

THE influenza ban was finally lifted at Mendota, Ill., on January 8 after being closed since early in October.

MORRIS TAITUS, who was at Camp Jackson, S. C., Camouflage Department, is back on the job as shipper at the United Film Company.

J. H. DALES of Polo, Ill., has closed his theatre, due to poor business.

A. M. OSBORNE of the Alamo theatre at Monmouth, Ill., has just recovered from a severe attack of the influenza.

HAROLD O'BRIEN, formerly with the Aviation Department, Camp Raritan, N. J., is back to the Village theatre, Oak Park, Ill.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

THE most popular and best attended picture since the Grand in Dubuque, Ia., commenced the showing of Paramount pictures this year, was "Out of a Clear Sky," with Marguerite Clark, shown Wednesday and Thursday, January 15 and 16. The Grand has a seating capacity of 1,100, and on both days the picture drew splendid houses. "Out of a Clear Sky" was undoubtedly one of the best Marguerite Clark films that have been shown here for some time, and it presented the captivating little star in a new light. As the tiny Belgian countess, who would not be forced to betray her country, Miss Clark proved herself not only a comedian of established reputation, but an emotional actress to be reckoned with. The picture more than pleased the Grand's patrons.

THEDA BARA still retains title as one of the screen's greatest vampires, and one of her latest pictures, "The She Devil," shown at the Princess, Wednesday and Thursday, January 15 and 16, showed that she had not lost any of her "vampiness." Nor has her popularity decreased, judging from the crowds the picture attracted.

"THE WORLD FOR SALE," production of J. Stuart Blackton, was presented at the Family theatre, Wednesday, January 15. "The Floor Below" with Mabel Normand, supported by Tom Moore, was shown on Thursday. Both of these attractions drew better than average houses.

"THE SUNSET TRAIL" with Vivian Martin, was shown at the Family theatre Sunday, January 19. It proved to be one of the star's best pictures. Now that the Family theatre patrons have seen Miss Martin several times and have grown to like her better with each picture, Manager Yount is always sure of a good house when she is on.

THE DREAMLAND had Gladys Brockwell in "The Call of the Soul" for the bill on Sunday and Monday, January 19 and 20. "Better than ever" was the verdict on this picture. This picture and her previous success, "The Bird of Prey," place Miss Brockwell at the head of the Fox "heavy" actresses.

ON Thursday and Friday, January 16 and 17, the Dreamland presented "The Grouch," with Montague Love. The story was fair and the acting excellent. The leading lady, Dorothy Green, made a decided hit with the Dreamland patrons. The picture drew an average house.

THE LIBERTY had Lillian Walker as the Thursday, January 16, star. As this was Miss Walker's first appearance at the Liberty for several months, her picture, "The Embarrassment of Riches," was very well attended.

CHESTER BARNETT won his way into the hearts of Family theatre patrons Friday, January 17, by his splendid acting in "The Submarine Eye." The picture itself was quite wonderful, and with a player like Barnett, it could not help but be successful.

"THE KAISER'S SHADOW," with Dorothy Dalton, was pronounced to be very good by all who saw it. The picture drew good houses.

THE HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS aided the drive for the Armenian Relief fund by putting on a moving picture show at the Grand, Saturday morning, January 18. The film, "The Sleeping Beauty," and a reel of the latest Pathe News was shown. The use of the theatre was generously donated by Managers Bradley and McClay. An admission of ten cents was charged and quite a large sum was realized.

SATURDAY, January 18, was a gala day for the patrons of the Family theatre for Charlie Chaplin's picture, "A Dog's Life," was shown. In connection with this film an old Vitagraph masterpiece, "Love's Sunset," with Earl Williams and Clara Kimball Young, was presented. Admirers of all three stars were there in numbers and the Family had a big day.

Flint News Condensed

"THE biggest afternoon business in the history of the Garden theatre," was the comment upon the successful showing of "Virtuous Wives," by C. Edgard Momand, the Garden manager. Turn-away business was done the first two nights of the engagement, which was January 14, 15, 16 and 17, and capacity business was done the remaining two nights. Manager Momand thought so well of the picture that he will bring it in for a return on the first open date the Garden has, he says.

CHARLES CHAPLIN has proved a good repeater in Flint in "Shoulder Arms." After having been shown for two runs, one of four days and another of three days each to big business and to good business on two one-day runs, the comedian drew good business to the Garden on January 25.

SOME unique advertising was provided by Manager Garfield, of the Orpheum theatre, in announcing through the newspapers a three-day showing of "The Racing Strain," with Mae Marsh. The ad of Manager Garfield in Saturday's papers preceding the engagement read like a race track ad. It was just one column wide and a full column deep. It announced the gates to be opened daily at 12.15 p. m., and the schedule of shows was announced as the time of "each race." "Prices to the grand stand" were announced as 10 and 20 cents, and the "starter" Charles Garfield.

SOME attractions announced for the near future at the Garden theatre are: Dorothy Gish in "The Hope Chest," Olga Petrova in "The Panther Woman," Bryant Washburn in "Till I Come Back to You," Wallace Reid in "The Dub," Pauline Frederick in "The Resurrection," Marguerite Clark in "Out of a Clear Sky," Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life."

BUSINESS with Mary Pickford in "Johanna Enlists" was "disappointing," according to Manager Momand of the Garden where this star was shown lately. Manager Momand said the picture was good and satisfied those who came to the theatre, but Miss Pickford seems to have lost her drawing power, which used to be considerable, in Flint.

DOROTHY DALTON in "Quicksand," with Fatty Arbuckle in "The Sheriff" as a special added attraction, drew fair business to the Garden the first half of the week of January 20.

SERGEANT BERT C. EVANS, who formerly was operator at the Franklin theatre in Saginaw and who recently was discharged from the service, is the new operator at the Garden theatre. Sergeant Evans was chief camp electrician at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., from November, 1917, until his discharge this month.

SPECIAL music was provided for a one-day showing of "Italy's Flaming Front" at the Garden theatre, January 29. Director Barbere of the orchestra engaged several extra pieces for the purpose of perfecting the music incidental to the picture.

EVELYN NESBIT is being picked more frequently of late by Manager Matt of the Strand. A three-day run of "Woman, Woman," was advertised by this theatre for January 27, 28 and 29. Only recently she was featured for three days in "I Want to Forget," which drew good business.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

RECENT and coming attractions to the Gaiety in Springfield, Ill., are Evelyn Nesbit in "Her Mistake," on January 23, 24 and 25; Elsie Ferguson in "His Parisian Wife" on January 26, 27 and 28, and Madge Kennedy in "Day Dreams" on January 30, 31 and February 1. "Sporting Life" then comes in for four days, with a possibility of an added day if the picture goes over big.

VIOLA DANA in "The Gold Cure" was heavily advertised by the Lyric for Tuesday and Wednesday, January 21 and 22. The picture is considered one of Miss Dana's best, and Harry Loper splurged accordingly. William Farnum followed Miss Dana in "For Freedom," his latest Fox production.

MANAGER MAISEL, of the Capitol, says that Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider" is the best serial yet. Big business is due every Sunday with it. The Capitol is going along nicely with Triangle, Select and Goldwyn pictures, with enough specials to fill out the week. Sennett comedies, Fox comedies and other short subjects are used with good results. The screen and lighting at the Capitol is good, the pictures always showing clear as crystal.

"LITTLE WOMEN," an Artcraft picture, had four big days at the Gaiety and Tom Moore followed with three bang-up ones in "Go West, Young Man." The comedy with the Moore picture was Fox's "The Son of a Hun," one of the funniest that has ever been screened at the Gaiety.

THE VAUDETTE had four good days with Marguerite Clark in "Little Miss Hoover." Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex did fair for three days with "Good-Bye, Bill." Manager Watts was more than satisfied with the week.

THE PRINCESS cleaned up for two days with Dustin Farnum in "The Light of Western Stars," his first United Picture. The Zane Grey stories have been widely read in this part of the country, and the public likes them very much. Preceding Farnum were "Her Moment" and "America's Answer," two pictures that did very well for the Kunz.

TOM MIX certainly had a cracking play in "Treat 'Em Rough," a Fox production that packed them into the Lyric on January 12 and 13. May Allison came the next two days in "Her Inspiration," and the last three days of the week were given to Evelyn Nesbit and son Russell Thaw in "I Want to Forget." The Lyric is enjoying good patronage, and Manager Loper is on the job every minute seeing that everything is made as pleasant and comfortable as possible for his patrons.

MANAGER WATTS with Lila Lee in "The Secret Garden" hung up a mark almost as good as some of the big drawing stars when it was shown at the Vaudeville on January 19. Manager Watts was greatly surprised and elated. "The Secret Garden," together with Arbuckle and Normand in a Sennett reissue, and a Burton Holmes Travelogue, played four days, and did well.

MANAGER RIORDAN, of the Majestic, announces that on Sunday, January 19, he sold out every seat in the theatre for the afternoon performance, the first time since he took over the theatre. This was duplicated at the first evening show, and the last show had only a few chairs vacant. "A Fight for Millions," Allied War Review and Gaumont Weekly are being used at the Majestic.

EVERY theatre manager in this city feels that this year will be the banner one for the show business. They figure that with the returning soldiers and the coming of peace and normal conditions, the public will flock to the playhouses in greater numbers than ever before, and the first three weeks' business of 1919 seems to bear out their contention. Optimism radiates from every theatre, and nothing except another epidemic can stop this year from topping all others in the matter of good business, it seems.

BEN ROVIN said that on Sunday, January 19, he broke all records at the Amuse-U, with the exception of the Sunday during Fair week, which is always the banner one of the year. The reason for this is that the shows open in the mornings, then, and play steadily until midnight. The attraction that did so well for Ben on the date mentioned was William Farnum in "The Broken Law."

THE OPTIMIST BROTHERS, Gus and Louis Kerasotes are all smiles over the business being done by their two theatres—the Royal and Savoy. Down at the Savoy, Louie has "A Fight for Millions" every Sunday, number ten being used on January 19, with Donna Dew in "The Ghost Girl" and a two-reel comedy, "Klever Kiddies"; Monday, "The Masque of Life" was the attraction. For the balance of the week the Savoy had: Tuesday, "Should She Obey?" Wednesday, last chapter of "The Brass Bullet," a two-reel feature and a comedy; Thursday, Carmel Myers in "A Society Sensation"; Friday, chapter ten of "The Iron Test" and other pictures; Saturday, "The Return of O'Garry," featuring Ned Finley and Marion Henry.

FOR the week of January 19-25 the Royal theatre had booked: Sunday, chapter seven of "The Lure of the Circus" with Eddie Polo, and "The Trail of No Return" with Neal Hart; Monday, Gail Kane in "The Dare-Devil"; Tuesday, "The Masque of Life"; Wednesday, June Elvidge in "Joan of the Woods"; Thursday, "The Triumph of the Weak"; Friday and Saturday, Theda Bara in Fox's "Cleopatra." It is expected that this last picture will clean up big for Gus, as it has been given some great advertising in the past by two other theatres that have played it.

MARGUERITE MARSH in "Conquered Hearts" came to the Princess on January 22 and 23. On January 24 and 25 Bessie Barriscale was seen in "All of a Sudden Norma," the first of her pictures under the new Robertson-Cole arrangement. "Kiss or Kill," a Universal with Priscilla Dean, followed Miss Barriscale. Other Universal pictures booked by the Princess are "The Wildcat of Paris" with Miss Dean, and Mildred Harris in her latest production.

THE PRINCESS scored heavily with "The Prodigal Wife," featuring Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton. Manager Kunz stated to MOTION PICTURE NEWS' correspondent that he turned almost as many away as he played to, which is considered remarkable. "The Prodigal Wife" was the attraction at the Princess for three days, starting Sunday, January 19.

"ALI BABA AND THE FORTY THIEVES" delighted big crowds of children and grown-ups at the Lyric for two days, January 19 and 20. This picture was beautifully staged, and the acting of the child players was a revelation.

In and Around Indianapolis

THE new rules and regulations concerning the containers for motion picture films were discussed by J. A. Green, inspector of the bureau of explosives for the city of Indianapolis, at the regular weekly meeting of the motion picture exhibitors at the Chamber of Commerce early last week.

THE WILLIAMSPORT OPERA HOUSE COMPANY, Williamsport, was incorporated this week at the State House in Indianapolis with a capital of $2,000; the directors are: Levi Van Reed, William Cowgill and Merle Odle.

THE Indianapolis Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association at its annual election selected O. M. Allen, president; John Victor, treasurer; and A. C. Zaring, secretary. They have fitted up new quarters on the second floor of the Lyric building for the convenience of visitors, members and all interested in anything pertaining to the local motion picture industry.

MRS. CULLA VAYHINGER, president of the Indiana W. C. T. U., in a statement issued last week, declares the organization is opposed to legalizing motion picture shows on Sunday.

"The demand for motion picture shows on Sunday is not coming from the laboring man, but from the man who thinks there may be a dollar in some other man's pocket which might be in his own if he were permitted to run on Sunday," she said. "The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Indiana has always opposed measures which if passed would desecrate the Sabbath."

R. S. SCHRADER, manager of the local branch of the Pathe Exchange, who was notified a few days ago that he was to be transferred to take charge of the company's Pittsburg office, was the guest of honor at an informal dinner at the Lincoln Hotel, Thursday night, given by several local film managers. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Schrader, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Elliott of Kansas City, Ralph W. Abbett, Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Faucher, H. L. Conway, W. B. Frank, J. M. Jacobs, Carl Lieber, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. McCurdy, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McDaniels, Mr. and Mrs. Paul McDaniels, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Rosnagle, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. White, A. W. Carrick, Miss Rose Tapley and Sprague Green. H. M. White, who will succeed Mr. Schrader as chairman of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers, presented Mr. Schrader with a handsome Masonic ring and Mrs. Schrader received a corsage bouquet of roses. O. P. Faucher has been appointed to succeed Mr. Schrader as local manager of the Pathe Exchange. He has been a special representative of the company in this territory.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

"INNOCENT EYES" with Mary MacLaren as the star was the offering at the Orpheum, Friday and Saturday, January 24 and 25, where it was given a cordial reception by good-sized audiences.

"MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING," with Margarita Fischer in the title role, proved a delightful offering at the Orpheum on Sunday, January 26. The story is one of great twists and many laughs, making a strong appeal to the Sunday audiences.

WILLIAM S. HART in "The Tiger Man" did capacity business at the Orpheum, January 16, 17 and 18.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE drew good business in "A Pair of Silk Stockings" at the Orpheum, Monday and Tuesday, January 20 and 21. The audiences were characterized by the high percentage of men.

TOM MOORE in "Go West, Young Man" drew ordinary business at the Orpheum, Wednesday and Thursday, January 22 and 23. The people don't seem to care for Moore in this type of picture.

MANAGER AINSWORTH advertised John Barrymore in "On the Quiet" for his Orpheum dates Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 27, 28 and 29, persistently and consistently. Mr. Ainsworth has a strong clientele that is pleased with the Barrymore pictures and they invariably draw good business.

BILLIE BURKE will be seen at the Orpheum in "The Pursuit of Polly," February 3, 4 and 5. "Billie" is always popular with Fond du Lac picture fans.

MANAGER AINSWORTH has planned another treat for the kids on Saturday, February 8, when he will put on another of his already famous six cent matinees. And this time the event will have a double pull for Enid Bennett will be seen in "The Biggest Show on Earth," while Charlie Chaplin will appear in "Shoulder Arms" on a repeat. Chaplin's former appearance here in this picture was during the "flu" scare and he wasn't able to muster a corporal's guard. Ainsworth expects a genuine rush of Young America on the 8th.

THE UNION CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH of Waupun sponsored a moving picture program at the Scenic theatre in that city on Friday, January 24, the proceeds of which went to the adoption fund pledged for three fatherless children of France by that society.

WHILE the managers of the motion picture houses are undecided as to the real cause of it, there is general agreement to the effect that the January business has set a new high record. In ordinary years January has been looked upon as a sort of a hoodoo—a kind of a "break-even-if-you-can" month. Not so with the January of 1919. Some are inclined to give the weather man credit, for he has been lenient indeed; others are of the opinion that it is a reaction from the period of self-denial through which the community passed while the "flu" germs held sway. Anyhow business has been excellent and it has made optimists out of the picture men.

MANAGER F. R. SMITH, of the Bijou, has booked the latest picture put out by the First National Exhibitors Association, "The Fighting Roosevelts." The picture is one in which the Colonel appears himself and with the complete story of the life of the great Bull Mooser whose followers in Wisconsin are legion. Mr. Smith has not yet secured his dates, but they will be in the latter part of February. He will push the publicity end hard with billboard work and liberal newspaper space.

FATTY ARBUCKLE has always made a hit with Bijou patrons and his latest appearance there was no exception to the rule. He drew excellent business Friday and Saturday, January 24 and 25.

Gathered in Green Bay

PARAMOUNT and Artcraft pictures have been shown at the Colonial and the Grand theatres, owned by Henry Goldman, since the beginning of the year, under a new contract. Neither house exhibited these films before this season. Proprietor Goldman is booking the newest features in the Paramount-Artcraft program, and the releases have proven popular with audiences in both houses. Attendance has been satisfactory at the houses. The Paramount-Artcraft releases are offered three times a week, the Goldwyn films, three times a week, the Metro pictures once a week, with specials.

WILLIAM S. HART was shown in "The Border Wireless," an Artcraft film, at the Grand theatre, January 20, 21, 22, and he drew crowds.

"THE SHEPHERD OF THE HILLS," a W. T. Gaskill offering, from the book by Harold Bell Wright, proved a drawing card when produced in the Orpheum theatre, January 20, 21, 22.

ALMA RUBENS was seen in the Triangle picture, "The Ghost Flower," at the Royal theatre, January 20, 21.

"THE SOUL OF A WOMAN," a Metro film, was shown January 19 at the Colonial theatre. Emily Stevens starred.

HARRY MESTAYER played in "High Tide," a Triangle picture, at the Royal theatre, January 20. Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand, were seen in the comedy "He Did and He Didn't" in the same program.

"HER COUNTRY FIRST," a Paramount, was shown January 17, 18, at the Colonial theatre, with Vivian Martin in the star's part.

On the Screens of Dubuque

LIBERTY fans welcomed Peggy Hyland in a right royal manner when she appeared there Sunday, January 19, in "Caught in the Act." The story was rather improbable, but that didn't make any difference to Miss Hyland's followers, who think she is at her best in plays of this kind. Manager Wilbur was well satisfied with the play, for it brought him unusually good Sunday business.

EARLE WILLIAMS in "The Diplomatic Mission" was presented at the Princess theatre Sunday, January 19. Mr. Williams was as good looking, well dressed and delightful as ever. It drew very well, as all Earle Williams productions do.

MONDAY, January 20, marked the first appearance of Lila Lee in Dubuque. The picture was heralded by much advertising, newspaper and poster, and a good house was present to witness the debut of the little star. Miss Lee was all she was claimed to be, and if all her succeeding plays are as good as "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," her rise in picturedom is assured. The picture was repeated on Tuesday evening.

BARBARA CASTLETON, Madge Evans and John Bowers were featured at the Dreamland theatre, Tuesday, January 21, in "Hereditry." Miss Castleton and Mr. Bowers were good, but little Madge Evans was the real star of the play. She is one of the few child actresses who never grow tiresome.

"WOMAN AND WIFE," featuring Alice Brady, was shown at the Family theatre, Tuesday, January 21. Here, again, it was shown how the seeming lack of judgment in changing the title of a play after it had been adapted from a popular novel, can take away from the popularity of a picture. Had the producers of "Woman and Wife" retained the title of the novel, "Jane Eyre," it would have drawn twice as well. As it was, only an average house was in attendance.

PRINCESS patrons agreed that "Amarilly of Clothes Line Alley," with Mary Pickford, was the best Mary Pickford picture in months. Full of good, wholesome humor and many laughable situations, it was indeed a play worth while seeing. Mary Pickford was very well cast, as were all the other players. Weather conditions caused a decrease in attendance, but even at that the picture drew well.

Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" Does Big in Elgin

ACCORDING to reports from Elgin, Ill., Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" never went over the top with more violence than did the crowds which saw this star in this picture at the Star theatre, Elgin.

There were ten "drives" in two days, Wednesday and Thursday, January 15 and 16. There were two each afternoon and three each evening, the afternoon attacks a little less furious than those of the evening.

Long before the ticket office opened the warriors began to gather. They crowded in solid phalanx for rods in front of the theatre and up and down the streets. Pedestrians who would pass by were forced to retreat to the open highway of the street pavement.

With the opening of the ticket office and doors the drive was on. With a smash, a push, a surge and a shove the battle began. Never were warriors more determined. Unable to break into the jam, they scuttled down the side alleys and into the exits, sending their money for admission to Manager Crocker the next day.

Seven times the seven men selling tickets sought to stop the sale and enforce the S. R. O. dictum. As many times they were forced in self-defense to take it up again.

It took half an hour to get the crowds out. Police called to the rescue found their authority unrespected. There was no violence, no "rough stuff." There was just a dogged determination to get in, see the show and then get out.

Signs were smashed, doors were broken and battered, shoes were irreparably damaged. There were many near-casualties, but no breakage of bones nor loss of life!

Such storm never besieged a playhouse in Elgin theatrical history.

There were people there who never go to the pictures. The wife of a prominent Sunday school publisher took a party to the show. A crowd of society folks having a dinner party in an exclusive section of town, came down en masse to see the show. Several church suppers and annual meetings were depleted to scant proportions. When one attending announced his intention of going down to see Charlie, the fever spread like wildfire and everybody but the conscientious deacons and preachers deserted.

The crowds drew from places so far distant as Aurora, from every town near enough to send delegations in individuals or parties. Many who saw it the first night came again the second night and brought a number of friends. On Thursday afternoon two hundred kids skipped school to get down to the Star and laugh themselves weak over Charlie soldiering. There were more men in uniform than there ever have been assembled in one place in Elgin since the war began.

The afternoon patronage was a little less forcible, but big enough to crowd the house four times.

The harvest was a peck of coat buttons, dress accessories and hair pins, and a manager "all in," but elated over the greatest business ever done by a local picture house with one production.

Manager Crocker has promised a return showing within the next few weeks to accommodate the hundreds turned away.

Additional News of Green Bay

MAE MARSH played in "The Racing Strain," a Goldwyn film, January 15 and 16 in the Colonial theatre.

"SPORTING LIFE," a Paramount-Artcraft special, was presented in the Grand theatre, January 13, 14 and 15.

"THE KAISER'S FINISH" was an offering January 13, 14 and 15 at the Orpheum theatre.

ELSIE FERGUSON, Paramount star, played in "The Rise of Jennie Cushing," at the Orpheum theatre, January 16, 17, 18 and 19.

WILLIAM S. HART was screened in "The Cold Deck" at the Royal theatre, January 15 and 16.

"COME ON IN," a Paramount picture, featuring Shirley Mason, was shown January 13 and 14 at the Colonial theatre.

NORMA TALMADGE was presented in "Her Only Way," a Select release, at the Grand theatre, January 23, 24, 25 and 26.

MARIE WALCAMP played at the Royal for the first time in "Tongues of Flame," and Eddie Polo appeared in "The Lure of the Circus," January 23 and 24.

"THE SOURCE," with Wallace Reid starring, was screened January 24 and 25 at the Colonial theatre. The film is a Paramount.

TOM MOORE played in "Go West, Young Man," a Goldwyn picture, at the Colonial theatre, January 22 and 23.

"MONEY ISN'T EVERYTHING," an American film, was shown January 22 and 23 at the Colonial theatre. Margarit Fisher was in the leading role.

Los Angeles Gets League for Suppression of Influenza

QUARANTINE, vaccination and masks were being urged last week by the Citizens' League of Los Angeles to Aid in the Suppression of Influenza. The league was only recently organized and has an advisory committee of twenty-three physicians.

The Los Angeles Medical Advisory Board, appointed by Mayor Frederick T. Woodman, will meet this week with the Business Men's Advisory Board, also appointed by the Mayor, when it is believed definite drastic plans for curbing the epidemic in Los Angeles will be outlined. It is understood that a majority of the members of the Business Men's Advisory Committee favor masking the town, while many members not only favor masking, but they favor re-closing the city as well, the closing order next time to extend not only to theatres and other public places of amusement but to the business houses of the city.

The City Council on Wednesday authorized an appropriation of $20,000 as wages for 200 additional quarantine inspectors, appointed by Health Commissioner L. M. Powers. The report of the Health Commission on Wednesday indicated that the number of new influenza cases had dropped to 376 for the day, the highest mark ever reported in a single day being in excess of 700 new cases. Mayor Woodman has been ill for several days, it being reported that he has influenza. He issued a statement from his home on Wednesday, however, that it is not influenza, but a bad cold.

Legislators See Universal Film in Denver

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY" was given a private screening at the Isis theatre on Curtis street, in Denver, Col., Friday night, January 16, when a special musical program accompanied the showing of the picture.

All Denver exchange managers and exhibitors, and every member of the Colorado legislature accepted the invitation of G. A. Metzger, division manager for Universal at San Francisco, to be present at the showing of this production. The picture was greeted with rounds of applause and received the unanimous approval of the entire audience.

Mr. Metzger was returning to the coast from New York, where he had been during the past six months. He left Denver for Salt Lake City, Butte, Spokane and Seattle, and expected to reach San Francisco within six weeks.

Monte M. Katterjohn Returns from New York

LOS ANGELES saw Monte M. Katterjohn back from his recent New York trip, where he is reported to have completed the final details for the production and distributing of Katterjohn films.

Mr. Katterjohn's trip also included a number of other cities, where he went into a full discussion of present-day problems with prominent exhibitors of the country. In Chicago, Washington, Baltimore, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Richmond, Va., Kansas City and El Paso, not to mention various smaller cities, he conferred with prominent theatre owners and obtained their views on the various problems which confront the industry, and particularly the exhibitor.

"I found it to be the unanimous opinion of the exhibitors with whom I talked," said Mr. Katterjohn on his return to Los Angeles, "that many problems which are receiving the feverish attention of producers have nothing to do with the welfare of the exhibitor, but are being viewed solely from the financial standpoint by the companies which are engaged in production and distribution.

"The theatre owners, I found, are entirely satisfied with existing distribution arrangements and see no necessity for any radical changes unless it be for financial considerations affecting the producers themselves. Indeed, there was some disposition to wonder why many of the highly-advertised pictures of the present should be distributed at all.

"What the industry needs," said a leading exhibitor of Washington, "is a thorough alteration of the thought behind the production of motion picture stories. The big men of the industry are worrying too much over distribution problems and too little over the vastly more important problems of production.

"Viewed from the standpoint of the motion picture patron, who demands first of all diverting entertainment, the present production era shows the industry at its lowest ebb."

Levy and Phillips Take Pathescope

S. J. LEVY and Jos. H. Phillips have taken over the distribution of the Pathescope in this territory under the name of the Pacific Pathescope Company, with a studio and salesroom on Post street. The new company practically stands in the relationship of factory representative for the Pathescope company.

THE WEST COAST

Heard in and Around Coast Studios

IT was announced at the Goldwyn studios last week that special efforts are being made by the company to employ so far as is possible and feasible returned soldiers and sailors to take part in various plays now under production at the plant. Heading the list is Wallace MacDonald, leading man for Mae Marsh.

THAT Will Rogers, Goldwyn star, will soon come to the Pacific Coast was the gossip in film circles this week. Geraldine Farrar, one of the few remaining stars working under the Goldwyn banner in the East, is expected to arrive in Los Angeles about the time originally named, which will be in the early spring.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS has had a very busy week of it, but not all his time has been spent in filming scenes for his newest Artcraft vehicle. He has been attending meetings of the "big five," or members of the new film combination, which includes D. W. Griffith, Mary Pickford, William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin, and it appears that Fairbanks is one of the moving spirits of the quintet. Dennis O'Brien, Fairbanks' lawyer, arrived in Los Angeles during the early part of this week from New York and he immediately conferred with the "big chief" on his new film aspirations and affiliations. The working title of Fairbanks' new story is "Something for Somebody." Marjorie Daw is his leading woman.

HARRY REICHENBACH, who recently returned from Europe, has come to the coast to work with the Humanity Film corporation in making plans for the distribution of this picture now being produced at Universal City.

"THE POPPY HUSBAND," William S. Hart's latest screen effort, was completed this week. It is a story of prison life, with many of the characters drawn from the famous Barbary Coast. It was produced under the joint direction of Mr. Hart and Lambert Hillyer. Joe August was the camera man. Juanita Hansen is the leading woman. It is not a western story, having been taken from Jack Boyle's story in the Red Book. Some of the principal people appearing in the cast are Walter Long, as "Boston Blackie;" Miss Hansen as the "Poppy Girl," Fred Star, Dave Kirby and Georgie Stone. Mr. Hart plays the role of "Hairpin" Harry Dutton. Some of the prison scenes were made at San Quentin, when Mr. Hart had his head shaved in order to lend perfect atmosphere while an inmate of the prison.

ANNA Q. NILSSON, who is featured in Metro's story, "The Way of the Strong," returned with her company this week from Truckee, Cal., where a number of snow scenes were filmed. The picture is being directed by Edwin Carewe, and it has an all-star cast. Members of the company tell a story to the effect that Miss Nilsson became lost from the company for about two hours one day while they were in the mountains. She had fallen into a snowdrift and had almost completely disappeared. The company this week is filming indoor stuff at the studios. "The Way of the Strong" is a story that has its locale at the beginning in Alaska, the characters later working their way south on the Pacific coast. Seattle scenes are prominent in the story.

THE May Allison company, after about two weeks at Catalina and Santa Cruz Islands, where scenes in her new picture, "The Island of Intrigue," were filmed, returned this week to the Metro studios and a few days later left for another cruise on the Pacific. She will visit one or two other islands in the Catalina group before the picture is completed, it is said. Jack Mower is her leading man.

Spokane News and Views

THEATRE men in Spokane will get a rebate on their license fees for the period of 41 days their houses remained closed by the influenza ban, according to announcement from the city commissioners this week. The rebate amounts to very little for each house, but in the aggregate is about $200, the larger houses receiving approximately $25, and the others ranging down to $10.

FEW screen careers have been as spectacular and romantic as that of Irene Rich, well-known Spokane girl, now with a producing company. A sensational divorce suit in San Francisco left her free from matrimonial alliance and she decided to try pictures. According to her press agent, she concealed the fact that she had had no experience, and braved the director as a tried screen actress. This subterfuge was discovered when it came time for her to don the grease paint. Here Kitty Gordon came to the rescue, it is said, and she was able to appear on the grounds properly made up. She made so favorable an impression that she was made leading woman for Dustin Farnum in "A Man in the Open." She is now engaged in Southern California with the Buffalo Film Company.

THE CLEMMER presented the first of the new James Montgomery Flagg comedies, "Independence, B'Gosh," the first of the week. On the Wednesday program Mildred Harris, alias Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, was offered in "For Husbands Only," the first Jewel production since her recent marriage. Peggy Pelletier, Oriental dancer, is being featured on the special Girard concerts, Wednesday night and Sunday noon at the Clemmer.

CHARLES RAY, booted and spurred, with chaps and wide sombrero, was starred in the Paramount production, "Playing the Game," at the Liberty.

"THE SPENDER," the Metro production starring Bert Lytell, drew big houses to the Class A during its three days' engagement.

CECIL B. DE MILLE'S "Old Wives for New" and William Desmond in "Hell's End," was shown three days at the Lyric, and Dorothy Dalton in "The Mating of Marcella" completed the week's program.

Kennedy Succeeds Walsh in Los Angeles

L. E. KENNEDY, who was mustered out of the naval service on January 6, has been made branch manager of the Fox exchange in Los Angeles, to succeed M. A. Walsh, resigned, who left Saturday night, January 18, for San Diego to manage the Pickwick theatre in that city. Mr. Kennedy was at the United States Naval Reserve Training Station at San Pedro before he was mustered out. Before entering the service he was branch manager for Pathe. He is one of the best known film men in the Los Angeles territory. During the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign he was appointed booker in the Los Angeles territory of all propaganda films, and it was due to his efficient methods, it is said, that the films were distributed to all exhibitors without duplication of subjects. He was returned to civil life on January 6 and on January 15 he was made manager of the Fox exchange.

What They Say in Seattle

MANAGER KOERPEL of the World Film Exchange recently took a Sarah Bernhardt film, together with a projection machine, over to the G. A. R. Veterans' Home, near Seattle, in order to entertain the old people. He showed the divine Sarah in "Mothers of France." Besides showing the film, Mr. Koerpel told a few stories, played the piano and recited some pieces, all of which he does good enough for the best circuit in the country.

GOLDWYN'S picture, "The Hell Cat," which recently played at the Clemmer, starring Geraldine Farrar, proved to be a great hit for the week it was shown. Special music was played by Guterson's Russian orchestra. Pieces that fitted her vivacity did a great deal to show up the play.

MANAGER JACK LANNON of the Greater Features Company, Seattle, has bought from the W. H. Production Company all one and two-reel comedies for seven different serials. He has also bought the sixteen "Shorty" Hamilton western comedies, the total cost of this deal being over $30,000, it is reported.

GUS METZGER has been appointed division manager for Denver, Salt Lake, Butte, Portland, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles for the Universal productions. Mr. Metzger was formerly in charge of the Universal offices in Seattle and Portland. Up to date he has not decided in which city on the coast will be his home office. He has, however, decided that he will do all in his power to co-operate with the local managers.

THE World Film exchange of the Northwest is placing the "Prizma" travelogues on the market. These travelogues are expected to go big on the Pacific Coast, because they are pictures taken on the Coast. They include the beauty spots in the mountains and along the rivers.

"The exchange man is not always to blame when a film is not received by an exhibitor," remarked Manager Koerpel of the World Films recently. "When I was down in my office the other Sunday, an exhibitor came rushing in full of excitement. He was out of town and needed a film for that night, as the one he ordered, he said, from another exchange did not show up. He picked a film out, and after we found a soldier who was on leave and who could take this manager and the film to the town in a machine, all were happy. The next day this manager called me up and said: 'Say, Koerpel, I ran your film all right, but after it was run I found out that the one I thought did not arrive was lying here in the express office since the day before. Since the express people did not notify me, I did not think of going there to find out about it.'"

FRANK EDWARDS, bookkeeper for John Danz at the Colonial, has been sick for a few days. The Universal News that is being shown at the Colonial is making a great hit with the audience.

R. H. GLENN of Issaquah and Henry Newman of Hoquiam were recent visitors on Film Row.

R. H. ALLAN, manager of the Seattle branch of the General Film Company, has lined up and is selling a big line of big feature attractions. Among them are: "Shame," "Her Moment," "I Believe," "Red Blood and Yellow," "Marriage," "Wild Honey," "Romance of Underworld," "Street of Seven Stars," "Son of a Gun," "Shootin' Mad," "Out of Night," "Image of Blue Moon," Red Cross Official Pictures and Burlingham Travelogues. The Burlingham Travelogues have been sold to the Clemmer, Seattle, where they will be shown every other week.

where he was advanced to the commission of first lieutenant, and has been engaged by the William Fox Company to write original stories and continuity for Tom Mix.

Shayer, it will be remembered, enlisted in April, 1918, when he appeared at a Liberty Bond sale meeting with Paralta players and offered to volunteer if the crowd would buy $2,200 worth of bonds in five minutes, that amount representing the Government's expenses for a soldier for one year. The bonds were purchased in a jiffy, and a recruiting sergeant present at the meeting gave Shayer the oath. After three weeks in the service he was made sergeant and a few weeks later transferred to a training camp, where he received his commission.

Directors Give Dinner in Los Angeles

A DINNER was given by the Los Angeles chapter of the Motion Picture Directors' Association Wednesday evening, January 22, in the Blue Rooms of the Los Angeles Athletic Club in honor of members of the New York lodge who are now in Los Angeles. The guests of honor were Robert Vignola, Louis Gasnier, Morris Tourneur, Hobart Henley, John Ince, Edwin Carewe and James Kirkwood.

Frank Beal, president, was toastmaster, and the committee in charge of the dinner were Thomas Ricketts, James Young, Harry Harvey, Jack Dillon and William Robert Daly.

With Los Angeles Theatres and Exchanges

WILLIAM SCHON, formerly booker for General film, has been promoted to the position of salesman, and he made his initial trip through Southern California territory last week.

GEORGE HAYNES, booker for the Fox exchange, is ill with influenza. He is reported as not being dangerously ill.

C. J. MARLEY, branch manager of the Triangle exchange, left Monday for a four-days' trip through the San Joaquin valley. He will visit in San Francisco before returning to Los Angeles.

FRED LORELLO, owner of half interest in the three theatres at Oxnard, Cal., died this week of influenza. He was one of the best known exhibitors of Southern California and his success at Oxnard, where he began with a small theatre several years ago, was due to his showman and goodfellowship. The theatre business will be conducted by his partner.

LEE SCHAMAHORN, who has been in the service, has returned to Los Angeles and is back with his old position as salesman for the Artcraft-Paramount exchange.

"TARZAN OF THE APES," a First National release, has been booked for a second run in Los Angeles, this week running at Ray's Garden theatre on Main street at popular prices. According to Branch Manager W. E. Knotts, of the First National exchange, it is the first time the picture has been shown in Los Angeles at general admission prices less than 50 cents.

JOHN YOUNG, owner of the Apollo theatre in Hollywood, has purchased the Hollywood theatre, it became known last week.

THE Triangle exchange last week issued an attractive folder, naming some of the new Triangle releases for February. The folder is a four-page affair, with the Triangle trade-mark displayed prominently on the front page. It contains reproductions of photographs of Baby Marie Osborne, Mary MacLaren and Alma Reubens. Its contents are as follows: "Triangle presents for February, 1919, the vamp of vamps, Baby Marie Osborne, in 'The Child of M'sieu,' a de luxe production, subject to release February 16. A story your patrons will appreciate.

"The star beautiful, Mary MacLaren, in 'Secret Marriage,' a bigger attraction than this star's former success, 'Shoes.' Released February 9.

"The radiant jewel of the screen, Alma Reubens, in 'Restless Souls,' a drama of today. A gripping, pleasing, drawing attraction with a beautiful star. Released February 2."

A. R. PATTON, branch manager of the Exhibitors' Mutual exchange in Los Angeles, said last week that he wanted to correct an erroneous impression that Roy G. Turner has been made manager of the exchange. The confusion relative to the matter arose when it was announced a few weeks ago that Turner was manager of the Exhibitors' Booking corporation, a concern that is affiliated with the Exhibitors' Mutual.

THE Victory theatre at Barstow has been leased by T. W. Bruhn and will be running under its new management within the next few days, it is announced.

HARVEY GAUSMAN, who recently resigned his position with Goldwyn to do road work for First National, has returned from a trip to Bakersfield and Taft, Cal., where he lined up a number of new accounts, according to announcement by Branch Manager W. E. Knotts. He booked first run First National service at Grogg's theatre at Bakersfield, and lined up for the Rex theatre at Bakersfield second run First National. He booked Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives" at the Hippodrome at Taft, also at the Majestic theatre at Maricopa. Mr. Gausman reported that because of a semi-influenza ban at Fells, Cal., the theatres in that town are running only two nights out of each week.

THE First National Exhibitors' exchange announces that it has closed contracts with the Broadway Amusement company at San Diego for Anita Stewart and Mary Pickford subjects, also Chaplin pictures. The Florence theatre at Pasadena has signed for Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin and Anita Stewart productions, as also has the Liberty theatre at Long Beach.

DAVE BERSHON, branch manager of the Universal exchange, who has been ill with influenza, was reported as out of danger the first of last week. During his absence from the office W. J. Quinn was acting manager.

W. J. QUINN, who was acting manager of the Universal exchange in the absence of David Bershon, who was ill with influenza, has returned from a trip to San Diego, where he reported excellent business. Returning to Los Angeles he stopped at Oceanside and booked Eddie Polo's serial, "Lure of the Circus," at the Elysium theatre.

W. S. RAND, western division manager of General Film, left recently for Phoenix, Ariz., to attend the meeting of the Arizona exhibitors in session Monday, January 20. He expected to line up a number of contracts for General during his visit in Arizona.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

BUTTE theatres are vying with each other to present the strongest attractions, each trying to take full advantage of the excellent business that is prevailing. Crowded houses continue the rule.

MANAGER RALPH RUFFNER of the Rialto has tendered the use of his house up to 11 A. M. on February 9 to the committee having in charge the observance of memorial services for the late Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, free of charge. Mr. Ruffner has offered to also furnish his full staff of house employees, and the tender has been accepted.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" and "The Greatest Thing in Life" were two features that packed the Judith theatre at Lewistown the past week. Manager Al. Heinecke did heavy advertising and got the business for each of the Griffith productions, shown closely following each other.

LOUISA M. ALCOTT'S immortal story, "Little Women," was picturized at the Rialto recently, showing to good business. A Mutt and Jeff comic, Allies official war review, and "Smiling" Bill Parsons in "Bud's Innocence," rounded out an excellent bill.

THE American last week offered William Russell in "When a Man Rides Alone." This theatre will show the last episode of "Hands Up" next week.

THE higher scale for musicians went into effect Sunday, January 26. The average increase is about $5 per week over the former scale.

R. N. WELLING, who came here recently from San Francisco, is now manager of the Liberty theatre, which has been sold by H. W. Berry to a company consisting of Mr. Welling and local men. The new manager was engaged in electrical sign advertising prior to assuming his present duties. He is giving his personal attention to the Liberty, has strengthened the program and is using the newspaper columns, something which the Liberty failed to do previously. The company now conducting the Liberty is known as the Rocky Mountain Amusement Company. "Business is steadily gaining," said Mr. Welling to a Motion Picture representative. "We are going to put forth our best efforts to attract the theatregoer and to merit patronage." Continuous performances will be run from 1 P. M. to 11 P. M. daily.

MEL WILSON, of the Famous Players-Lasky, left last week on a three-months' "clean-up" tour of Montana. He expects to interest some more houses in his company's releases.

Salt Lake News and Views

R. O. PROCTOR, division manager of the Pathe exchanges, visited Salt Lake for four days on an examination trip to the Pathe exchanges of the West. He left for Los Angeles after an inspection of conditions at the local Pathe exchange.

W. A. CALKINS, manager of the local Pathe exchange, has returned from an extended trip through the Idaho territory, where he has been looking over trade conditions. During his absence J. A. Epperson had charge of the local exchange. Mr. Epperson has returned to Pathe service, having been discharged from the army.

J. L. STOUT, well known in the intermountain territory, has joined the local Metro forces as representative of the Metro and Screen-Classics productions. Mr. Stout has a host of friends in the territory covered by the Salt Lake exchanges.

MANY city and state officials, newspaper men and exhibitors attended a special trade showing of "Hearts of Humanity," a Universal special production, held at the American theatre in Salt Lake. The pre-release showing of the film was given by Gus Hager, manager of the Universal exchange in Salt Lake. Exhibitors were pleased with the production and Mr. Hager predicts a big run.

A RECENT week was "Metro and Screen-Classics" week in Salt Lake, according to B. F. Rosenberg, manager of the local Metro exchange. Three of the productions handled by the local exchange went over big at local showhouses. Bert Lytell in "The Spenders" and Nazimova in "Eye for Eye" packed the American theatre during the week, while Harold Lockwood in "Pals First" drew capacity houses at the Broadway theatre.

B. F. ROSENBERG, local manager for Metro exchanges, and J. S. Stout, representative for the same exchange, spent a recent week in Montana arranging for the screening of "The Great Victory" and "Why Germany Must Pay."

MANY exhibitors of Utah visited the Salt Lake exchanges during a recent week, personally looking up the forthcoming productions of the various local exchanges. Among them were Gus N. Brown, American theatre, Mackay, Idaho; A. D. Maguire, American theatre, Tremonton, Utah; C. J. Kalina, Rex theatre, Buhl, Idaho; A. Fisher, Gray's Opera House, St. Anthony, Idaho; C. M. Stringham, American theatre, Park City, Utah; R. E. Sutton, Strand theatre, Provo, and E. G. King, the Laytonia theatre, Layton, Utah.

GUS METZGER, formerly in charge of the Jewell office in New York, and now representative for that firm in the Western States, visited the local Universal exchange. He is on a trip to the Denver, Salt Lake, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles houses.

Campaign Against Influenza Scare in Seattle

THE NORTHWEST FILM BOARD OF TRADE, at Seattle, Wash., recently telegraphed to Dr. R. S. Copeland, of New York, for copies of the letters and chart he recently sent to the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, in which he wrote and showed why New York's theatres were kept open and still the death rate in New York from the "flu" was less than any other large city in the country showed. The letter was reprinted and copies were distributed to each Seattle exchange.

The object is to give certain numbers to each salesman, who will in turn give them to officials of the cities and counties that believe that it is necessary to close up theatres and movie houses in order to do away with the "flu." These pamphlets will show the authorities the picture house screen can be used to great educational advantage and in that way will help do away with the "flu." Half of the movie houses in the Northwest are still closed, but it is expected that this education of the county and small town health officials will help to open the houses.

News of the Week in San Francisco

THE Atlas Slide and Film Company are making slides from molded clay. A sculptor has been employed who makes the clay models from life and these are later photographed for slide display. So far slides have been made by this process of Dr. De Mandel, the musical director of the Tivoli theatre; of Uda Waldrof, the organist of the same theatre; of Signor Marcelli, director of the T. & D. orchestra, Oakland; John Wharry Lewis, director of orchestra, Rialto theatre, San Francisco, and Signor Fraliciardi, musical director of the T. & D. theatre, Berkeley. By using clay for the models instead of wax better shadows are secured and it is said that the new art has a virility about it that is lacking in the old method.

EDWARD FERNANDEZ of Honolulu, who owns several theatres in the Hawaiian islands and incidentally represents that territory in congress, is visiting San Francisco on business. Mr. Fernandez is a native Hawaiian and besides exhibiting films he has taken many pictures of the scenery of his native land.

THE DUHEM MOTION PICTURE MFG. CO., of this city, has just received an order for a considerable material for W. F. Aldrich of Honolulu, who is making a series of photoplays in that country.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FILM BOARD OF TRADE has perfected its organization with the election of the following officers: M. J. Lewis, of the Paramount, president; Ben Simpson, of the Triangle, vice-president; L. Reichert, of the Metro, secretary and treasurer, and Milton Nathan, attorney. Every film exchange in the city has joined the organization and much benefit to the exchanges is expected to come out of the getting together. The Board will hold weekly meetings on Wednesday afternoons to consider complaints of its members and others.

LAST WEEK an Italian dinner was given to the various exchange members by the North Beach Exhibitors association. Chris Johnson, of the Verde theatre, president of the North Beach association, presided at the banquet, which will linger long in the memory of the exchange managers.

A MEETING of the motion picture proprietors was held on January 20 at the California theatre to arrange to take signatures to petition against the proposed increase of the tax on admission to motion picture houses. At the meeting it was decided to have a number of petitions printed and to circulate them every evening among the various audiences for signatures.

THE motion picture theatres at Stockton have decided to fight the order closing their houses and as a first step they have sworn out an injunction against such action. A test case will be made of the matter, and M. J. Cohen of the General Film Co., has gone to Stockton to help in the fight. The local picture houses and exchanges are watching the result of the fight with a good deal of interest and not a little anxiety.

PHILIP ALEXANDER, formerly publisher of a motion picture magazine at Sacramento and later doing general publicity work, has been appointed publicity man for the Universal in this city. He plans to help the exhibitors in every way possible in getting out their advertising matter and general publicity, and his work is expected to develop into a service department for all theatres whether patrons or not of the Universal.

SADIE CLARFIELD, who has been connected with the Universal for the past five years as inspector, has resigned her job to take on a life contract with Dave Linchner, who is just out of the navy. And so they are married.

BEVERLY GRIFFITH, who was connected with the Universal Film Co., at Universal City, for some time and later with the sales force with headquarters at New York, at which time, during a trip to the west he enlisted at Seattle in the aviation section of the signal corps, has just been discharged and returned to this city. At the time of his discharge he was sergeant major of the north west division, and was booked for a commission on November 15. The signing of the armistice four days before caused him to fail in reaching this rank. He is now preparing to sail on the steamer Shinyo Maru, January 23, for Honolulu, where, acting under orders from M. L. Markowitz, manager of the Universal in this territory, he will open and operate an exchange to be known as the Universal Film Exchange, Inc.

HARRY CARNEY, salesman for the Universal, is in the San Joaquin valley. He has been out about three weeks, and taking in consideration the "flu" situation reports that he has met great success. He says that many of the exhibitors do not where they stand as they may be closed at any time by action of the authorities.

THE San Francisco premier on "Mickey" takes place at the California theatre in this city February 9. Manager Roth is planning a great publicity campaign for the picture.

SOL LESSER is now in Los Angeles and is making arrangements there to put "Mickey" in the Kinema theatre. He has concluded a deal with Griffith whereby he will handle "The Fall of Babylon."

J. L. FRAZER, of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corp., is just back from the "Death Trail" trip. He is very much alive notwithstanding the locality he has been traveling through and says that he was successful in making good bookings all along the line.

C. W. GODDARD, of the Goddard theatre, Sacramento, was a visitor to Film row this week.

"CANDY" HOWARD, of the Cardello theatre, Oroville, one of the most popular up-state exhibitors, is reported to have just recovered from an unusually severe attack of the influenza.

THE Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corp. is making extensive changes in the arrangement of its headquarters. Already all railings have been removed and new furniture and fixings are said to be in the offing, about to steam in and tie up at its port of distribution.

THE Goldwyn exchange gave a pre-view on January 21 for big exhibitors of the latest Geraldine Farrar picture, "Shadows."

MR. GODFREY has sold the Grand theatre at Vacaville to Geo. W. Allen and Hazel Duncan of that city.

In and Around Denver

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, junior Pathe star, accompanied by her father, Leon Osborne, came to Denver and spent a week as the guest of various local theatres. The popular little star drew big crowds in Omaha, as in other cities on her cross-country itinerary.

N. G. BREWER will open his U. S. A. theatre in the new opera house block which he has constructed, on February 8. He has purchased considerable new equipment, including 317 new seats. His total seating capacity is now 757.

LORETTO HEIGHTS academy for girls, and the National Jewish Hospital, both located in Denver, have recently added new equipment for their theatoriums, and the board of education at Castle Rock has finished a new theatorium and installed new equipment in the high school building at that place, and will use the best line of films obtainable for educational purposes.

THE IRIS THEATRE at Belle Fourche, operated by Leo Peterson, which has been closed since October 8, has been reopened. Mr. Peterson has recently rearranged his entire service and purchased new supplies.

DISTRICT MANAGER GILMORE of Denver United Picture Theatres announced the booking by the Rialto, on Curtis Street, of "Adele," featuring Kitty Gordon, for the week of January 26. Dustin Farnum, in "The Man in the Open," opens at the Rialto February 16. He also announces that A. J. Flyn at Ogden, Utah, has lined up with United, and has booked "The Light of Western Stars" for February 2 at the Utah theatre.

W. T. BINFORD and John N. MacMeekin of the Denver Universal sales force, will travel with "The Heart of Humanity" picture and arrange bookings in Denver and Salt Lake territory.

HARRY J. QUINN, former assistant manager at Denver Universal headquarters, has been released from service at Camp Travis, where he has been in training for the past six months. He found his old job waiting for him on his return and is glad to get back in the game.

THE Rocky Mountain Screen Club, the Denver Film Exchange Board of Trade, and practically every exhibitor in the state took action against the proposed tax of 20 per cent. on theatre tickets, which was included in the revenue measure now pending before Congress.

JOHN M. BALLEYDIER of Englewood has been elected president of the National Film company, formerly headed by O. D. Woodward, and F. Cann of Denver has been selected as manager of the company. The company's indebtedness, which is only nominal, will be wiped out entirely if the plans to lease the studio to other producing concerns are successfully carried out.

MAURICE WOLF, formerly connected with the local World exchange and now manager for that corporation at Salt Lake City, and Miss Freda Zekman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. Zekman, 2443 Downing avenue, were married here this week. The bride is one of the prettiest and most popular members of the younger social set and her husband is well and favorably known to all of the trade in the Rocky Mountain section. The young couple departed for the Mormon capital immediately following the ceremony.

BABY MARIE OSBORNE had the time of her life here this week. Her time was divided between the downtown urban picture houses and a visit to her friends in Denver, which she insists belongs absolutely to her. The pretty little Pathe star went over big at the Curtis street and was even more enthusiastically received at Ogden, Webber, Mascot, Rex and Gem theatres, leaving Denver Sunday for Los Angeles and will arrive in Spokane and Seattle enroute.

HARRY LUSTIG, special Metro representative, was expected in Denver January 28.

MISS BEATRICE MOTE, cashier at the local Metro exchange for the past two years, passed away at the home of her parents Saturday evening, January 18, following a week's illness from influenza. She was one of the most popular young ladies in local exchange circles.

WILLIAM RICORD of the local Metro staff was stricken at the same time but has since recovered.

THE Rex theatre at Greeley, which was reopened a few days ago, is showing to a splendid business. The theatre has been roughly modeled and new heating apparatus, new lights and a new sound system have been installed. An eight-piece orchestra and a vocal soloist will feature every musical program. Approximately $30,000 was expended in the improvements, which included a large pipe organ.

J. L. JONES has reopened the Isis theatre at Leadville, which had been closed for a long period on account of the "floo." Mr. Jones was in Denver this week arranging new service.

R. J. MORRISON, owner of the Isis at Aspen, was a recent Denver visitor. While here he contracted for Exhibitor-Mutual service and arranged for practically a whole year's bookings.

J. H. MANER has reopened the Lyric theatre, at 3316 West Colfax avenue.

¶ The West Coast Edition of Motion Picture News costs us a lot of money. It costs just as much as would a separate publication published locally in Los Angeles or San Francisco. But it's worth it to us—Because it enables us to say that NO OTHER FILM PUBLICATION covers the West Coast as thoroughly, and with such intimate news and gossip as does Motion Picture News.

¶ We have often thought though—What a wonderful West Coast Edition we could get out, how much more money we could spend, how much more Service we could give—If every theatre manager in the West Coast territory sat down one night and wrote a twenty word note to his exchanges and the New York offices telling what the West Coast Edition meant to him because of its crisp, human, local items. Has it ever occurred to you? Why we could break speed limits in Service!

¶ If you do it? Will you let us know about it? And watch our smoke!

THE END of the WAR

WHAT SIMPLEX HAS DONE—AND IS DOING

NOW that the War Clouds have almost dissolved we feel free to speak of the part played by Simplex.

IN VARIOUS GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS at Washington the SIMPLEX was used in showing pictures that helped in developing important plans.

IN THE THEATRES OF THE NATION the Simplex flashed its countless messages on Preparedness to millions of our people.

AT THE TRAINING CAMPS AND CANTONMENTS thousands of our boys were taught and entertained through the use of Simplex.

ON AMERICAN TRANSPORTS the minds and spirits of other thousands were improved through Simplex projection.

IN THE NORTH SEA—During the long monotonous vigil in the gray misty stretches, while laying in wait for the German navy, our American “gobs” obtained relaxation through the pictures projected on Simplex.

OVER HERE—the “Home-Folks” in countless theatres sought comfort and amusement through the medium of Simplex projected photo-plays.

THE LEADING HOSPITALS AND INSTITUTIONS are now using Simplex to assist in bringing back to normal health those boys whose bruised bodies and clouded minds are the result of shrapnel and shell-shock.

THUS—being recognized by the Government, the Military Authority on land and sea, the finest theatres, the greatest producers, and the leading institutions, the Simplex is indeed the

You invite screen failure when you sacrifice quality in an attempt to "save" on the cost of the prints.

No matter how good your negative may be if the prints are not properly made you fail in your object to please exchange, exhibitor or public.

Dear Mr. Wilson:-

As you know I have operated the Bunny Theatre for six years.

I don't run serials - as a rule

But Saturday I ran the first episode of the Houdini serial "The Master Mystery".

I did the largest days business in the history of the house that day.

Can I say any more?

PAULINE FREDERICK

in The Woman on the Index

From the successful play by Lillian Trumble Bradley and George Broadhurst

Directed by Hobart Henley

The first powerful and eagerly awaited production in her Goldwyn Star Series. It will take rank immediately as "the biggest Pauline Frederick screen drama of the past two years," which means that it stands with the best she has ever achieved. Every exhibitor will give "The Woman on the Index" extra playing days because it is certain to attract unusually heavy patronage.

Serving the Smaller Theatres Quickly, Goldwyn's Policy for the FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

IF you, the exhibitor, have a small theatre in a neighborhood or a small house in a little town, you have to wait a shorter time to get the fresher, newer releases of The Ford Educational Weekly than you have ever waited for any other screen attraction.

Henry Ford has a tremendous faith in the small American city and little town. He knows that the seat of the best there is in America is in such places. He proves his feeling for the little communities by buying an unheard-of, but sound and healthy country weekly newspaper to build up its vocal power until it reaches a million subscribers a week.

We are carrying out his ideas when we seek 2,000 more small town exhibitor-customers in the month of February for The Ford Educational Weekly. We have the prints at hand to serve this number of new accounts promptly and efficiently.

The Ford Educational Weekly gives a screen picture of your kind of people and ours; of America and Americans in their bigness and fineness; of people doing the vital, imaginative things that make us lead all the peoples of the world.

The newest issues of the Weekly ahead are these:

- Feb. 2: "Carrying Old Glory to the Seven Seas," The Story of Hog Island Shipyards.
- Feb. 9: "Canada's 'Mountain of Tears'" Mt. Edith Cavell.
- Feb. 16: "Where 'The Spirit That Won' Was Born."
- Feb. 23: "Rough Stuff."

CAPITOL COMEDIES

Comedies That Maintain Their Standard of Quality

CAPITOL COMEDIES get plenty of fine, hearty laughs decently. They contain intelligent humor of the kind that finds its place in the lives of millions of normal people.

They strive for and attain natural instead of forced humor. You will find this proved in the new series of six consecutive releases with "Go-Get-'Em Potts" as the novel hero—each release separate and distinct; not dependent upon the one before or the one to follow.

Narrative of Roosevelt's Life is Incomplete But Has Good Points

McClure Pictures, Inc., presents
"THE FIGHTING ROOSEVELTS"
 First National Exhibitors Circuit.

DIRECTOR William Nigh
AUTHORS Charles Hanson Towne and Porter Emerson Browne.

AUTHORIZED BY Theodore Roosevelt
CAMERAMEN R. Schillinger and Chas. J. Davis
AS A WHOLE Should attract admirers of the late ex-President, the earlier phases of whose career are sketched.

STORY Narrative, but no attempt at drama;
 main purpose is to bring out the versatile personality of Roosevelt as a young man.

DIRECTION Allows action to drag at times, but generally successful in keeping the picture entertaining.

PHOTOGRAPHY Fair, some scenes a bit hazy.

LIGHTINGS Lack variety

CAMERA WORK Nothing out of the ordinary

PLAYERS Remarkably good types for Roosevelt as a boy, as a young man and at the time he became president. The actors taking above roles are Francis J. Noonan, Herbert Bradshaw and E. J. Ratcliffe.

EXTERIORS Some pretty scenes, but for the most part they don't figure much.

INTERIORS Answer the purpose

DETAIL Titles a trifle long; good effect at close with stars as a background for Roosevelt and his sons.

CHARACTER OF STORY May be classed as pictorial biography.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION About 6,000 feet

As a portrayal of ex-president Roosevelt's varied and intensely interesting life, this leaves something to be desired, in that it passes over many of his most important activities both as a man and as a statesman.
 On the other hand it is liable to prove interesting to many hundreds of thousands of Americans who know only in a fragmentary way about Roosevelt's early days, during which he developed the strength and knowledge which later on made him a dominating personality.
 Those who expect to see the former president reacting scenes in which he was the leader will be disappointed.

for he appears personally in only occasional flashes such as have been made familiar through news weeklies. There is practically nothing indicative of what he accomplished during the past ten or twelve years, either as a politician or an explorer.

The producers were fortunate, however, in securing admirable types to impersonate Roosevelt, first as a boy, then as a young man who goes hunting in Maine and later to the west in order to recover his health, and finally as the vice-president, becoming the chief executive after the assassination of McKinley. In conveying the characteristic mannerisms of the former president, the actors selected were notably successful. There is characterization without any indication of burlesque, which would be fatal to a subject of this kind.

The narrative is simple and in some passages, aiming to reveal the kindly nature of the plain folk whom Roosevelt numbered among his friends, borders on sentimentality. After a few preliminary scenes the rising New York politician goes to Maine, where he is idolized by an old guide and his family; then to the west where in his quietly assertive manner, the tenderfoot proves his worth among the cowboys. Much is made of these scenes, more in fact than they seem to justify in consideration of the wealth of material offered by the subject.

The episodes are strung together rather loosely and as they advance, with wide lapses in time, to the point where Roosevelt becomes a national figure, the effort seems to be to emphasize his wisdom in the selection of young men who later take a leading part in the country's affairs.
 For instance, quite a bit is made of the friendship between the former president and Leonard Wood, his right hand man during the Spanish-American War when the Colonel organized his Roughriders. To bring out this phase of history more strongly, there are a few brief battle scenes representing the Colonel and his cowboys at San Juan Hill.

Pershing also is introduced as a young lieutenant of great promise, and Real Admiral Simms as the man destined to be instrumental in making the American Navy what it is today. The apparent argument is that whatever has happened, Roosevelt, directly or indirectly has had a guiding hand in shaping the policies of the nation. It is unfortunate, however, that the later, and certainly more vital years of the country's history have been passed over so casually.

Advertise Big in a Popular Way and You Are Sure

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor.

The drawing power of this film is unquestioned. Roosevelt is admittedly the most picturesque figure in all American history, and his death, instead of diminishing interest in the career of our most vivid American, is likely to increase the number of those who want to know more about his personality and the incidents of his career.

To be quite fair with your patrons, I wouldn't promise that this is a complete story of the ex-president's life, or do anything to indicate that he himself is the chief actor in the film. It shouldn't be necessary to resort to false statements in order to draw a crowd.

You are justified, however, in announcing an authorized version of Roosevelt's life and works and in boosting it on the score that it is the first thing of the kind presented.
 Also, you are safe in feeling that none of the late ex-president's most devoted admirers will be offended by the interpretation given of their hero. First National has issued a herald containing

A STATE RIGHT PRODUCTION THAT COMES ONCE IN A DECADE

"ONCE TO EVERY MAN"

A screen version of Larry Evans' fighting novel starring
JACK SHERRILL and MABLE WITHEE

Within one week after our notification to the trade the following territories were sold:

Greater New York, to Merit Film Corporation, 126 West 46th St., New York.
New England States, to the Major Films, Inc., 10 Piedmont St., Boston, Mass.
Michigan, to Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Film Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
Foreign Rights, to J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., 729 7th Ave., New York City.

These are the deals where contracts were signed and the full purchase price paid down. We have several deposits from buyers in other territories.

THE REASON WHY

"It was worth a long wait to receive 'ONCE TO EVERY MAN.' One of the best 'fighting' pictures ever turned out. Starts with a fight and ends with one—with many 'punches' in between. One of these virile stories based on the element of struggle, one of the surest fundamentals that a picture could have. The fights in 'ONCE TO EVERY MAN' have never been equalled on the films."—Motion Picture News.

"Has appeal for any sort of a crowd. Holds interest all through. Will be assured a favorable reception in all classes of theatres. A sympathetic story with suspense that during the fight sequences will figure as the most memorable passages in films. A promising box office proposition. You don't need to worry about folks not liking the picture."—Wid's Magazine.

"It's a stand-up-and-fight picture, a type of entertainment that will interest every class of screen followers. The best possible measure of entertainment."—Moving Picture World.

"The exhibitors and 'fans' alike will vote this an excellent screen entertainment. Particularly impressive in its human interest."—New York Telegraph.

"'ONCE TO EVERY MAN,' a strong Frohman super feature. Should meet with the approval of the picture loving public and divulge itself as a lucrative morsel for exhibitors. The picture should be billed as a very special feature."—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

"'ONCE TO EVERY MAN' is a picture that is all fight, fight split 50-50 between mental and physical states. Before long you are fighting with Jack Sherrill—doing the battle with his enemies just as he is doing the battles with them. You thrill to his every action."—Photoplay Magazine.

"'ONCE TO EVERY MAN,' the Frohman Amusement Corporation's latest special, carries a punch in each reel with a knockout wallop in the final episode. A clean, wholesome photo-drama that will thrill and entertain all and offend none."—New York Review.

AND OUR REVIEW

We guarantee this a smashing production that will repeat more often than any picture made in years.

A significant criticism-

Laurence Reid says in The New York Review

"Faith," with Bert Lytell, Is Quite the Finest Picture He Has Seen in Ages

Is Even Better Than This Star's Other Recent Release, "The Spenders," Which Reached a Very High Water Mark—Lytell's Natural Method Should Be Studied by Stage Screen Heroes.

There is no denying the fact that Bert Lytell is about the luckiest individual upon the screen when it comes to the standard of excellence which his pictures have maintained the past year. His last previous feature, "The Spenders," was so meritorious in every way that we thought it could not be surpassed. But along comes a new offering, "Faith," that is so wholesome in its philosophy, so real in its humanity and so fine in its appeal, and above all, so splendidly produced, that it clearly outshines its predecessors and stands conspicuously as a work of art.

Mr. Lytell is truly uplifting screen dramaturgy with his contributions, for aside from the high standard of his stories, his personality reveals itself with ever-increasing lustre. There is one actor who is an artist in the sense that he always appears natural and convincing. He never indulges in heroics to gain his points, but seems like your fellow clubman, your boon companion, your pal—in fact he resembles the person in the street so carefully that he keeps his balance.

The attitudinizing player may well emulate him and gain better recognition and a credited intelligence, and, moreover, left the calibre of his photoplay if he follows this suggestion.

The theme of "Faith" is so simple and so prodigal with truth that it is a wonder it hasn't been thought of before. Here is the motion picture very nearly at its best, for the human note is so vivid and poignant and brought out in such an artistic way that the most captious critic of the screen can give it nothing else but the sincerest praise. There are no plot complications to annoy you; in fact, it moves along serenely and scores for its simplicity and adherence to truth.

The story is, indeed, as quiet as its setting and goes to prove that pictures are not dependent upon the element of action for their support. The characterization is so true and the conversation that is carried on so emphatic and natural, that the picture rouses an interest that is splendidly maintained to the end. Just think of three or four people carrying on a drama of life without scarcely moving from their tracks. Such a feat spells art. It must also spell something mighty close to humanity.

The picture clearly lives up to its title in that it establishes faith as one of the foundations of society. The hero is a bank clerk, who, by force of circumstance and environment, plods along with little initiative. He has never known romance or the pleasures that come to people who are better situated in the scheme of existence. But a boyhood sweetheart renews her old-time friendship and in a measure succeeds in penetrating beneath his reserve. The young man has not lost his sense of proportion during his slavery in the bank and so he permits himself to bask in the radiance of the girl's personality.

She unfolds a story about their former school teacher who has ever continued to hold them in her affection, particularly the hero, since his father had been her fiancé in the springtime of her life. The kind teacher, now old and blind, has maintained her faith in her former pupils, the girl showing a good heart by looking after her in her declining years. However, the heroine has a special mission in seeking out her childhood friend, for the old lady has a premonition that everything is not right with him and that he, particularly, needs to be "mothered."

She thinks he is a thief and wants to restore him to honorable society by revealing her faith in his better nature. Consequently a plan is formulated to humor the old lady that her intuition is correct. The scene attending the confession is poignantly pathetic. The scheme works, but the surprise is that the hero is a thief after all. And so he restores the stolen property to the bank through the faith of the two women that he is sincere at heart. His employer also reveals a faith in his honesty by rewarding him with a more lucrative position. The property had been left in a conspicuous place for no other purpose than to provide a test.

Rosemary Theby as the girl, Edythe Chapman as the school teacher, and Edwin Stevens as the banker give fine performances. "Faith" will endure when many spectacular things are long forgotten.

83 $\frac{1}{2}$

"I find the 'NEWS' here, the same as in Canada, the leading trade paper" writes H. B. Wright, Select salesman, from Seattle. "I have taken the trouble to ask and invariably receive the same answer: they all like the NEWS the best."

If any advertiser will put this same question to his travelling salesmen he will get the same answer—even to the extent of those exchange managers who recently voted more than 90% in favor of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

And any advertiser—through this simple and easy investigation—will thereby save thousands of dollars for himself and his exhibitors—

—By concentrating his selling campaign in the one leading medium—

—Instead of spreading out copy in mediums that either don't reach the exhibitor or simply duplicate the one that surely reaches them all, and which they hold highest.

CONCENTRATE!

In its last seven issues MOTION PICTURE NEWS carried 83 $\frac{1}{2}$ more pages of paid advertising than any other picture trade paper.

An Open Letter

To the Congress of the United States

Gentlemen:

THERE is a side to the motion picture of which, perhaps, you are unaware.

You know of films in connection with taxes, the Committee on Public Information, and the efforts of reformers under the guise of Federal Censorship to control the expression of art, literature, drama, news, etc., through motion pictures.

You know what motion pictures did to win the war which must have impressed you with the true status of the film; that it is a new agent of expression, with a scope beyond that of the public prints in influencing public opinion.

TODAY, as we understand it, the minds of many peoples of Europe have been influenced against this country through active and poisonous war propaganda.

And where misinformation does not exist, there is a positive lack of information which, of course, will retard the progress of American goods in the new and greater trade expansion now facing us.

The work of the foreign branch of the Committee of Public Information was designed to correct the misinformation and lack of information.

Whatever results have been accomplished, the vastness of the work makes it apparent that it is far from complete; its vast importance makes it apparent that it must be continued.

Over and above all, perhaps, is this important element: we are fully aware of the great era of social and economic readjustment now facing the world. Bolshevism and kindred disorders must be ironed away. The world must be made as safe for democracy in peace as in war; and this country has definitely entered the world situation with the great end in view.

ENLIGHTENMENT is needed, much enlightenment, a widely sustained campaign of education—if the truth about the United States, its exports, its government and its ideals of social progress are to be made clear to the world's inhabitants.

The motion picture is foreordained to be the prime agent in this campaign of enlightenment so greatly deserved from every commercial, economic and philanthropic standpoint.

This is beyond argument. There is much that can only be told by the motion picture; much that can best be told; there are millions of people, unread, who can only be reached through the motion picture.

You, we take it, agree with these facts.

If so, then, you will be anxious to see many American features exported; to clear away needless obstacles now retarding their export.

You will want to do this in order to lend legitimate assistance to a single kind of American export goods, namely films themselves.

Still more you will want to do this because films are the veritable forerunners of many other classes of goods; they will have to pave the way by telling about these goods and in particular how they are to be used.

And still more you will want to do this in order that pictures of American life, happiness, ideals, social progress and government may carry their salutary lessons to the far corners of the earth.

THERE are needless restrictions now hampering the export of American films.

Needless red tape can be and should be removed.

Shipping restrictions—we beg leave to call attention to the very small size comparatively of reels of film—should and can be removed.

American banks should hasten to facilitate international credit on films.

And finally the government of the United States should stand back of, take sympathetic interest in and lend every possible encouragement to the home production of motion pictures.

If the American picture is to go abroad then it must have a clear way; otherwise other than American pictures will fill this way, and in the end the home production of pictures will be stifled.

American production stands first today—this of its own enterprise. The American Government should help the American picture hold its own—this in the American Government's own best interests.

This we respectfully call to your attention—with the closing appeal that this is the aspect of the film worthy of your attention and not the fanatical effort of a few reformers who, through their frantic appeals for Federal Censorship, and in ignorance of the picture's true status and mission, seek to restrict it to their individual ideas of human life and expression.

Wm A. Johnston

Editorially Speaking:

Mr. McAdoo and the Stars

THE appointment of Wm. G. McAdoo as special counsel to the star combine is most interesting.

Good showmanship—is New York's quick verdict on this move by the stars.

Probably more advertising will follow than from any previous incident in the film business. It is good advertising, too, to couple pictures with a name which of late has stood second only, at home and abroad, to that of the President himself. And the appointment is an added and weighty indication that the stars really mean business.

We are in hopes, however, that the association of Mr. McAdoo, with the stars and with the industry at large, will be productive of much greater good.

Mr. McAdoo is much more than a lawyer, especially a lawyer whose sole concern is the making of contracts designed to secure big salaries regardless of all other considerations.

These other considerations will weigh heavily with him as an adviser to the stars, for he is a man who has handled big industrial and economic situations in a big way.

It will be clear to him, we believe, that it militates against good pictures to place star values so high that the biggest value of all—the story—is overlooked.

And he will also know that the placing of too high a monetary value on the star's services is disastrous to the stars themselves—to the business of their pictures.

For instance, the stars and their pictures will need advertising to the public. The stars will be greatly mistaken if they think the screen itself will continue to advertise them. They will need advertising badly; otherwise competing pictures, good pictures properly advertised, will make the exhibition of star pictures unprofitable.

Now, there is but one way to secure the advertising appropriation needed and that is from the margin of profit made; and there will be no margin of profit, at least no margin of sufficient size, if the stars' services eat it up.

The stars, in business for themselves will have to consider deeply these rather large equations; and we believe, Mr. McAdoo is just the man to point the way. We cannot imagine a happier situation.

And we believe that this is but one of many interesting announcements to be made this year from many sources.

This will be a momentous year in motion pictures—a year of better pictures and better business policies.

* * * * *

Showmanship and Pictures

A PRODUCER received a letter from an exhibitor the other day which contained more showmanship sense than most any statement we have seen—especially as compared with those from producers themselves.

"Think of all the good pictures you have seen," he writes, "and you'll find that they have one big thing in common—their characters are human beings doing human things."

Can anything be truer?

These human stories, he goes on—a consistent succession of them—are what keep big stars up, or send them down the toboggan; they bring unknown girls out of obcurity and into the hearts and minds of the millions; they make a director's starless plays box office successes; they make similar in appeal such widely different photoplays as those from the workshops of Charlie Chaplin and David Wark Griffith.

And the absence of them—of these human stories—makes pictures fail, regardless of big names, great production expense, magnificent scenery, artistic settings, fine presentation—regardless of any other consideration.

And he also says with a sincerity no one could doubt: "All the pictures can't be 'big'; the 'big' ones are important only by comparison. But if some one will wake up to the fact that the money that runs the picture game is made from the show business and get a few real showmen passing on the stories and on the advertising there'll be a hell of a lot more pleasing pictures."

Amen!

* * * * *

A Longer Run Object Lesson

ALL the words of all the clever salesmen in the game could not send home the lesson of longer runs with greater force than the feature story "Tough Luck, Duncan!" on pages 988 and 989 of this issue.

Exhibitor J. C. Duncan, of Sioux City, Iowa, signed for a seven-day run on "Virtuous Wives" when only one other picture, "Shoulder Arms," had ever played that run in his town.

And he couldn't use spread-eagle newspaper copy because of a newspaper boycott by the local managers as a protest against doubled rates.

Yet the gross on the week was only $130 less than the Chaplin record—with big newspaper space back of the latter.

The way he did it is an interesting story in itself.

But the fact that he did it makes the lesson. And it's a lesson that should drive the last lingering doubts and fears from the minds of the exhibitors who "are afraid this town couldn't stand a long run."

* * * * *

Where Modesty Brings a Reward

WE learn that a group of Canadian theatres intend to reduce their bookings on American pictures this year in order to take care of forthcoming British productions.

This is undoubtedly an effort to build up home production; but, possibly, a factor has been too much flag-waving in American war pictures. There have been numerous complaints in Canada against pictures, news weeklies in particular, whose over-zealous titles make extravagant claims, to say the least, for victories by land and sea, to the complete exclusion of our allies' ships and armies.

There is bound to be considerable reciprocity in the world's film markets from now on. Due modesty in every way will help the American picture and its makers and distributors.

W. A. Johnston

Dealing in Personalities

His adroitness teers Away
rumors"

WILL someone please tell us what Lewis J. Selznick is thinking of these days?

Just think of all the rumors and counter-rumors the past few months have brought! Just think of the mergers and near mergers, the star combinations and such!

And not once has Lewis J. Selznick been mentioned in the rumors!

It's all wrong when one remembers that there never was a rumor or a fight in the past that did not find Lewis in the center of the argument.

But to come back to our opening query.

We have a real respect for the brains and film sense of Lewis J. Selznick. We have an admiration for the characteristic manner in which he expresses his opinions of film doings.

And wouldn't his real thoughts of recent events make interesting reading?

For one week BILL KEEFE, of the Griffith forces, has been expected in our midst. And he hasn't arrived yet. We're sending Pete Milne out on the trail.

A. H. SAWYER postcards Fred Beecroft from Florida: "Better get sick and come down here. That's the only way to get a vacation. Lost twenty-nine pounds, but will get it back here."

WILLIAM KALEM WRIGHT is now hanging his hat in Vitagraph's home office. Congratulations, Bill. Congratulations, Mr. Smith. Congratulations, Mr. Quinn.

There's food for a smile and a serious thought in the fact that the United States Government lost the services of a man like William F. McAdoo because it could not afford to pay him a decent salary. And then he is grabbed by an organization of motion picture stars—or, in the general public's parlance, "Movie actors." We only hope that McAdoo will be more than a "general counsel"—that he will jump right in and be a "film man." We need him.

Assistant GENERAL MANAGER GOFF, of Vitagraph, is under the weather these days and taking a complete rest under the doctor's orders.

ADOLPH ZUKOR has returned from Los Angeles. That Alexandria lobby will look deserted in a few weeks.

Stars may come and stars may go, but between the LASKY and NCE productions assured for PARAMOUNT that organization is planning a ninety horsepower Spring drive.

If we were to publish an "Extra!" every time we received a definite, authoritative, absolute statement of the inside of "The Big Five's" plans and other happenings on the Coast we would wear the presses out in one day. Every returning visitor from Los Angeles has "the real story." And still each succeeding hour brings a new "real story." It's a blame good thing the motion picture business doesn't stop running while film men get to the bottom of these things.

RICORD GRADWELL, of World, is back at his 46th Street desk after a few weeks on the Coast.

NAT STRONGE, former publicity director for Vitagraph and earlier with Motography, died Thursday morning, February 6.

THOMAS D. SORIERO, of Boston, was a New York visitor last week.

We read a tolerable lot of magazines in our day, but we are certain that we never see any advertising as striking, "pretty" and effective as some that is occasionally offered in picture trade papers. That insert of Arthur James' on "Out of the Fog," in last week's News, for example. Wasn't it a beauty? If you didn't give it a good look dig up your copy of last week's issue and learn what wonders can be done with black and white by a man who knows.

And in connection with the above, may we add our praise to a lot of good words we are hearing about the quality of the UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS inserts appearing in the News? They are corkers!

Still following the same line of thought we may as well tip you off that if the finished advertising lives up to some of the advance sketches we have seen you are going to get some eye-openers when the S-L campaign begins. Art plus Effectiveness is the combination being aimed at.

We probably won't be able to hold BILL RUDOLPH in check next week. The print of "The Unpardonable Sin" arrives in New York Saturday. And "They"—meaning everyone who has returned from the Coast—say it's a knockout. After Bill has seen it himself—!—!—!

Speaking of good pictures, we have heard a lot of good words about VITAGRAPH'S coming production, "THE LION AND THE MOUSE." Alice Joyce stars.

And still speaking of good pictures: HARRY REICHENBACH has returned from Los Angeles. Harry confesses that the new picture he is exploiting is "the greatest ever." After next week Harry will make more noise about his confessions.

Why get passports and journey abroad? These British film men are due to arrive shortly in New York: B. NICHOLS, managing director of the M. P. Sales Agency, Ltd.; Mr. TIM COOP, of the Progress Film Co., Ltd.; HARRY MAZE JENKS, of 10 Wardour Street, London, and W. ARTHUR NORTHAM, who will spend several months in the United States.

This week brings two big news smashes, one from the Big 5 combination and one from Rothapfel. On page 999.

AL LICHTMAN is well known as the General Manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's department of distribution. He is also well known as one of the most popular film men. The word popular is sadly misused in this industry but in the case of Al it sticks.

Like all great men Al has a weakness. It is telling gags which the Avon Comedy Four told when they were still selling newspapers on the street corners. The nice part of it all is that no matter how many times Al tells a gag it is always funny, proving conclusively that a story is all in the telling.

At all the many dinners, beefsteaks, et al, given by the gang at the Paramount-Artcraft home office, Lichtman always walks away with the first prize for entertainment. No party that he is ever at falls flat. No, he's not open for club dates, either.

Al was an actor once—in fact, twice. Then he felt that there was nothing in life worth while, so he became a motion picture man.

"It's The Way
He Tells 'em
That Counts"

"Tough Luck Duncan!"

He Booked a Week's Run on a Special for the Second Time in Sioux City's History and Along Came a Newspaper Boycott—What Would You Do?

"TOUGH luck, Duncan!"

That's what "They" told him—exhibitor friends and exhibitor rivals.

And no wonder.

Duncan had a big special booked for a week's run, at a first run rental, in a city where but one other special had ever played continuously for seven days to a profit.

Duncan had strong competition from second runs on other special attractions which he had previously played first run for three days to big business.

And Duncan could not use the newspapers!

For there was an exhibitor boycott on against the newspapers as a protest against an arbitrary fifty per cent increase in advertising rates.

What did he do?

What would you do?

Did he quit cold—and attempt to cancel the attraction?

Did he quit cold—and decide to pocket his loss with a smile?

Did he quit cold—and turn traitor to the boycott by using the newspapers?

He did not!

He buckled down to his job, went to it with a bang, and put the production over with a wallop!

But let's start at the beginning, back at the time when J. C. Duncan, of the Plaza theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, received his dates on "Virtuous Wives," first of the Anita Stewart productions distributed by First National.

"It looks like a tough proposition," said Mr. Duncan. "When I signed the contract for this picture I counted on newspaper advertising as the backbone of my local campaign. My schedule provides for quarter and half-page ads. And now, just as I am notified of the release date, the Sioux City newspapers increase their advertising rates from $1.00 an inch to $1.50."

This announcement from the newspapers, which, it was asserted, had acted in concert when they were certain that practically every local exhibitor had arrived at the point where he considered newspaper advertising and publicity absolutely essential to the conduct of his business, brought a storm of protests. The newspapers were obdurate. The exhibitors agreed to a thirty days' boycott as their only means of reprisal. One provision of the boycott was that no exhibitor would use more than a two inch ad any one day during the month.

"This is just enough space for announcements of film titles," continued the Plaza manager. "And it is a foregone conclusion that the newspapers will not run any publicity matter under the circumstances."

"On top of this, as a sort of added starter, I have booked the production for a week's run. Sioux City is not accustomed to showings of that duration. Three and four days are about the limit. Only one other picture, 'Shoulder Arms,' has played a week straight here. Within the last six weeks three big specials have been shown first run at the Plaza, and now they are booked back for second runs to my opposition. Each of them was a big success, and I know that there are hundreds of people in town who will patronize them on the strength of the popularity they gained at the Plaza.

"All in all, it makes about as difficult a combination of perplexities as any one would want to tackle at one time. No newspaper advertising, a week's run in a three-day town, and heavy competition. Oh, boy!"

While Duncan was frankly disturbed at the handicaps which fate had thrust upon him, he proceeded to get into action.

His first move was to publish a specially written four page herald. He prepared the copy as a substitute for his newspaper advertising. An edition of fifteen thousand was distributed both in the lobby of the Plaza and in a house to house canvass.

"I got over every possible appeal that was suggested in the press sheet," he said. "I played up the feminine interest above everything. I wanted those heralds to be read, and, inasmuch as the house to house distribution was made during the day, it was essential to attract the women in order to attain that result."

"It was obvious to me that if I was to succeed in making 'Virtuous Wives' pay the profit I knew would result from the usual big newspaper advertising campaign that the substitute measures I adopted would have to be extremely unique and novel. The film trailer, slides, house program announcements and advance displays in the lobby were familiar forms of advance advertising which would attract the usual attention. They were all right so far as they went. But I didn't think that they would go far enough."

With this analysis of his situation as a guide, Mr. Duncan seized upon the two songs written by Anita Stewart as the first of his novelty stunts. He obtained copies of "On the Road to Victory," and "America, the World is Proud of You," and rehearsed boy and girl singers to act as ushers and parade the aisles of the Plaza at every performance for a week preceding the opening of "Virtuous Wives," singing the two compositions. The words were projected on the screen for the audiences, and the songs were credited to "Anita Stewart—Here All Next Week In 'Virtuous Wives.'" Newsboys were "planted" in the front rows of seats to take up the refrains as an encouragement to the audiences to join with the vocalist ushers. Song pluggers were posted in the lobby and sold copies at the cost price.

"And they sold a lot of them," Duncan explained. "Within three days after I started this novelty promotion plan I could walk a couple of blocks in the residential section at night and hear the pianos playing 'On the Road to Victory' or 'America, the World Is Proud of You!' I began to feel greatly encouraged."

The next step was to inject novelty into the lobby display. The Plaza was playing to good business, and every patron for the week preceding the showing of "Virtuous Wives" was a prospective patron for that production. The publicity stories in the press sheet describing Miss Stewart's unusual costumes worn in her characterization of Amy Forrester in Owen Johnson's story gave

From Life

Duncan another novel idea.

Wax figures of feminine models were borrowed from Anderson, the leading ladies' fashion store in Sioux City. These were dressed in the most becoming and costly gowns Duncan could get out of Anderson's stock, and were placed in the Plaza lobby. Beside each one was a hand lettered card, stating that the particular gown was a replica of one of the many worn by Miss Stewart in "Virtuous Wives."

"It was really wonderful," Duncan declared, the way that both women and men would go from one model to the other in the lobby, studying the costumes and reading the explanatory copy on the cards. My hopes took another upward bound."

Meantime the Sioux City newspapers were receiving a daily lesson in exhibitor determination not to be browbeaten or bullied. The Plaza, like all other local houses, limited its space to two inches maximum. In small type, as part of the week's ads ran the line: "Next Week—Anita Stewart In Virtuous Wives."

"Quite a contrast to the quarter and half page smashes had planned to use on the picture," commented Duncan. It was really a shame to lose all of the value in the possibilities for original newspaper advertising and publicity that were offered by the picture. But it had to be done, so I bolstered up the song singing and wax figure displays in the lobby by using ten carefully selected twenty-four sheet stands and many three-sheet and one-sheet stands throughout the city. I used probably five times as much out-door display as I would have employed had newspaper advertising been possible."

Anderson's shop was receiving a lot of free advertising by Duncan's use of its wax models and costumes in the Plaza lobby, so a reciprocal arrangement was made which gave Duncan a position in Anderson's largest show window—and one of the most looked at in town—for one of the large oil paintings of Miss Stewart. Beside this was a tastefully lettered card, announcing that she would be at the Plaza during the next week.

On the Thursday, Friday and Saturday before "Virtuous Wives" opened Duncan gave up all of his advance-ment announcement time between pictures and shows at the Plaza to boosting "Virtuous Wives" with slides, both stock and special. The lobby display of wax models was supplemented with three-sheet and one-sheet displays, and artistically mounted 11 x 14's and 8 x 10's, so that the house took on the appearance of existing solely for the purpose of boosting "Virtuous Wives."

"This might not appeal to some exhibitors as good showmanship," said Duncan, "but remember that I was facing stiff competition on both changes for the following week by my opposition, which I could meet in no other way. I figured that I could begin about Tuesday or Wednesday to talk about other coming attractions. And I had the Stewart pictures booked for a solid week, which was something of an innovation and a risk even under ordinary advertising conditions in a town of sixty-one thousand people who were not accustomed to week runs. I simply had to put every ounce of energy I had into the proposition to offset the handicap of no newspaper co-operation."

The production opened to capacity business. And throughout the week it kept a line waiting at the box office as evidence to every other Sioux City exhibitor and to the newspapers that "where there's a will there's a way."

"I think it taught the papers a lesson," said Duncan. "They were free in their prediction that I couldn't put it over without them. And possibly it has given other

WHAT TYPE PUBLICITY GETS SPACE!

Buffalo Manager Speaks from Experience on Subject

"WITH the exception of a few of the larger manufacturers," the press matter sent out to exhibitors, and which exhibitors are expected to use in the newspapers, is absolutely devoid of FACTS about the production," said Manager Earl L. Crabb, of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative.

"Today one of the big problems with newspapers is SPACE and in most towns exhibitors are lucky to get any notices at all, so that those that do get into print necessarily must be packed with meat—FACTS about the picture, not stories about 'how such and such a famous star now at work in 'The Brick Layer,' in talking of the much reported high salaries paid to motion picture stars, said,' or how the Fiasco actors sell Liberty Bonds while appearing in scenes of 'How Do They Do It,' or how 'Barbara Barrington Roped a Cafe,' or how the Modernist Painting Gives Distinctive Note to Handsome Interior in 'Only a Fireman,' and so on down through a long list of bunk revealed as one glances through the press sheets issued by many manufacturers. One looks in vain for some FACTS about the picture.

"For example here is a press book on one of the big features with a popular star. On page one we find a story on 'Ambitious —, Ever Seeking New Types.' The next is headed Ready to Clip Press Matter and the page contains FOUR SYNOPSISSES. The next page says 'Clip These Interesting Items' and—lo and behold!—a sub-title says, 'Get Your Local Paper to Print Them.' The interesting stories are headed 'Notable Silhouette Photography in 'So-and-So's Picture,' 'The Director's Aim,' 'So-and-So Balks at More Rain' and 'So-and-So Has Well-Known Scenario Writer.' Then comes a series of ads and, ye gods! the booklet closes with a story about the star reprinted from a fan magazine. Now isn't this a fine lot of junk to forward to an exhibitor for publication in a newspaper. The waste paper basket next to the editor's desk will receive this stuff joyfully.

"It seems that many manufacturers delight in featuring long synopsis in their press sheets. This, it seems to me, from experience, is a waste of valuable space, for few papers in the country will let these long smears get by the blue pencil, and then again, who in these days of rush has the time or wants to take it to read through the story of the photoplay. That's what they are going for—to see what the story is about. No up-to-date theatre should stand for a press notice that has a short introduction and then picks up the synopsis of the story as the rest of the notice. However, with the present sheets issued by manufacturers containing nothing else, many exhibitors have no other choice.

"If it were not for such publications as the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and its Complete Plan Book, where an exhibitor can find the much desired facts, many managers and their press agents would be entirely at sea as to just what the whole thing was about and what the big features in the film were. In fact, at present, unless an exhibitor is showing the productions of the few real big manufacturers, and is able to get a few facts on which his publicity director or he himself can elaborate, there is no other place to turn than to such trade paper features as the NEWS' 'Complete Plan Book.'

"Here in Buffalo, where the advertising rate is exceptionally high for amusements, where only the larger theatres can afford to go into the newspapers daily and where notices are given to correspond with the amount of advertising placed, one must jam every story with FACTS—the kind that interest readers. The shorter the notice an exhibitor gets the more facts he wants in it—not a synopsis of the story.

"I think it would be a good idea to eliminate the synopsis entirely from press sheets and issue them on separate paper, leaving the press sheets free from stories about the drawing features of the picture itself, just what there is in the production that audiences will want to see.

"Biographies of stars, it seems, could also, without much sorrow, be eliminated from press sheets and books, for they are utterly valueless in the preparation of notices for the newspapers. Some companies, although their stars are known as well as the President himself, insist on putting biographies in every press sheet that comes out. They are doing it to this day. On the same sheet they also give elaborate writeups about the cast and of course the leading article is the synopsis. FACTS about the feature are conspicuous by their absence.

"Here is another 'illuminating' press sheet, supposed to be used by the exhibitor in his newspaper work. In column one is a story headed 'Self-Sacrifice Theme for New — Play.' In reading the story we find it is nothing more than a synopsis with this alarming sentence at the bottom 'The play is beautifully staged and clearly photographed.' The next column is headed 'Who's Who in —.' It is a series of biographies of the folks in the play. The next column is headed '— Picks Star Cast for So and So,' which goes further into the biographies of the cast. Then in the next column comes a real surprise—yes, alas it is another synopsis and in the next column we find the head 'Unusual Story for So and So in Latest Play.' However, there is nothing along the FACT line about this 'unusual' story, but instead it tells who the author and director are. The last column is headed 'So and So Cast Learns French; Actor Teacher.' Such stories as this are a big help to exhibitors—NOT.

"Is it any wonder that some exhibitors have a hard time getting notices in newspapers, when such bunk as this is issued

Toronto Theatres Have Essay Competitions

Special campaigns for patrons of moving picture theatres in Toronto have become quite the vogue. Both the Allen and Regent theatres, two big downtown houses, have conducted essay competitions during the past few weeks.

The Regent theatre asked, "What is the difference between Entertainment and Amusement?" Answers were restricted to two hundred words. The object of the question was to ascertain the thoughts and wishes of patrons in the matter of pictorial diversion.

The Allen theatre came along with a similar stunt with the presentation of "The Greatest Thing in Life." The question was, "What is the greatest thing in life?" Conditions of the contest were given by means of slides. More than a thousand replies were received and they came from university professors, clergymen, doctor and many others. Some answers were real essays. Quite a number sent in poetry. The answer every time, almost without exception, described "Love" as the real thing. A cash prize and passes were awarded.

"Unpardonable Sin" Print On the Way

It was announced on February 6 in New York that prints of "The Unpardonable Sin," the Harry Garson production starring Blanche Sweet, directed by Marshall Neilan, were expected to arrive in the metropolis on Saturday, February 8.

At the request of several prominent film men, who have been interested in the wonderful reports that have been flowing in, a private showing was scheduled for the week at one of the Broadway theatres.

Johnston Instructing Class in Photography

G. Carroll Johnston, brother of J. Johnston, of the Universal publicity staff, now with the 370th Aero Squadron, Chatillon sur Seine, has been assigned the photographic and laboratory instruction over a body of twenty-five film men. In addition to instructing the class in laboratory work, Mr. Johnston is teaching film salesmanship and is editor of a weekly magazine published by his squadron. Mr. Johnston completed a course of study in slide making, developing and photography at Tours, France.

Hart Expected from Europe This Week

Charles S. Hart, Director of the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, is due to arrive from Europe this week, it is announced. He sailed from Bordeaux Monday, January 27, for the Espagne. Mr. Hart left New York November 19 to visit important centers in Europe in connection with the business of Government pictures.

New Haven Trial Set for February 18

Theatre owners of New Haven, Conn., will appear before the New Haven County Court of Common Pleas on February 18 for trial of their appeal of the recent City Court sentence for conducting Sunday shows. The County Prosecutor has additionally charged the theatre men with employing others to engage in work on Sunday, which is a second violation of the secular law of Connecticut. The 18 owners are to be tried collectively, an agreement having been reached similar to that under which they were tried in the City Court last month. Defendants are prepared to appeal their cases to the County Superior Court and then to the Supreme Court of the State if necessary.

Meanwhile the present session of the Legislature has been asked to provide legal authority for Sunday shows, the bill having been introduced by Senator Daniel J. Bailey, a New Haven attorney. A similar bill passed by the Legislature two years ago was vetoed by Governor Holcomb. It is now believed that the Governor's attitude is changed because of the good work done by the theatre owners of the state during the war.

Additional support for Sunday amusements and sports has been obtained since the return from France of Dr. Oscar E. Maurer, pastor of the Center Church at New Haven, the largest and most influential Congregational church in Connecticut. Dr. Maurer immediately urged the pastors to withdraw their opposition, which led to closing theatres in New Haven on Sunday, and will lead in an effort to have the secular law amended.

Rothacker's 'Technical Expert for Special Duty

J. Wesley Smith, of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's technical department, left Chicago, the home office of the Rothacker Film, last week for Los Angeles, where he will render special service to the Rothacker customers in that territory and will co-operate with the Charlie Chaplin and Anita Stewart companies, performing special technical service. Mr. Smith will also supervise the taking of a number of special scenes for James Quirk, publisher of Photoplay Magazine, and head of the Photoplay Supplement, released through Educational Films.

World Books at Palace

What World Film claims to be the biggest contract ever executed for a news reel was recorded this week when on a showing of Kinograms at the Palace theatre, this de luxe screen news weekly will from now on be seen in the theatres of B. F. Keith and the Orpheum Circuit together with the hundreds of affiliated theatres of this gigantic booking organization. With such a contract of a proportion as large as this concluded on a private showing clearly indicates that the claims of the Kinogram company that it is the best news weekly in existence is well founded.

McAdoo Joins Star Combination

Former Secretary of the Treasury to Act as General Counsel to Fairbanks et al—Salary Runs Into Six Big Figures

WILLIAM G. McADOO, former Secretary of the Treasury of the United States and Director General of Railroads under the present administration, has been coralled by the Big Five of the motion picture business and has announced his acceptance of the post of general counsel for the Pickford-Chaplin-Fairbanks-Hart-Griffith combine.

This announcement came as a distinct surprise to the motion picture industry at large, although it was known that he had received at least one previous offer to enter the business, this coming from Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal company, who offered him the post of director-general of the company.

Mr. McAdoo's salary, it is stated will reach six figures. Varying reports as to the amount have been mentioned, but none verified. The fact remains that it is at least $100,000. The salary returned to him for his various activities in serving the government was $12,000 yearly and his resignation from his important posts was partially due to financial matters.

At the Griffith offices in New York it was stated by Albert Gray, his manager in the East, that it was Mr. Fairbanks who proved the deciding factor in securing the services of the former secretary. They had known each other for some time, he said, and had worked together closely during the Liberty Loan campaigns, to which the star bent his energies.

Details of the transaction were consummated in Los Angeles, where Mr. McAdoo had gone for a rest after his Government activities. Mr. Fairbanks first broached the proposition and when the former secretary signified his willingness to accept it the Big Five held a meeting and immediately took advantage of the opportunity.

That Mr. McAdoo will prove an immense asset to the United Artists' Distributing Association, the official title of the Big Five's company, is acknowledged by all the big leaders in the motion picture business. During the period in which he was a member of President Wilson's Cabinet he was known as one of the chief executive's closest advisers. The intricacies of putting the Liberty Loans in motion, organizing machinery for this purpose all over the United States were in his hands. The loans, incidentally, were the largest ever floated in the world.

As Director General of the railways of the United States, Mr. McAdoo showed an executive ability beyond compare.

In a statement issued immediately after the signing of his contract, the former Secretary of the Treasury said:

"They (the 'big five') have determined (Continued on page 992)

Additional Legislation Proposed

Pennsylvania Bill Hits at Ticket Scalping and Includes Motion Picture Admission Tickets—Print Price on Face

THE first important bill affecting the motion picture industry to be introduced in the present biennial session of the Pennsylvania Legislature is an "anti-ticket scalping" measure presented by Representative Gans, of Philadelphia. It is sweeping in its provisions, and if passed would require every owner of a motion picture theatre, as well as owners of Pennsylvania theatres in general, to print the price in large type on the face of each ticket and would prohibit the selling of a ticket at any amount in excess of the printed price. Moreover theatres would be required to post the price list of tickets of admission in a conspicuous place near the box office window.

The penalty for violation of the proposed law is a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500 for each offense and in event of failure to pay the fine imposed the offender would be imprisoned in the county jail for a period not to exceed 30 days. The measure provides that persons convicted of violation of the proposed law, before an alderman, magistrate or justice of the peace, shall have the right to appeal "in the manner now provided by laws for appeals from summary convictions."

The bill, which was introduced in the House on January 28, was quickly referred to Committee on Health and Sanitation.

A similar measure was offered in the Legislature of 1917 but was crowded out the calendar in the rush of late legislation and was never enacted into law.

Motion picture men say that if the Gans bill is adopted by the Legislature and signed by Governor Sproul it will impose upon theater managers considerable expense in having their tickets reprinted and in otherwise carrying out the provisions of the measure. The text of the Gans bill follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That all tickets for the admission to any place of amusement shall have the price thereof printed upon the face thereof in large type.

"Section 2. It shall be unlawful for any person, co-partnership, association or corporation: (a) to sell any such ticket unless the price thereof be printed on the face thereof as required in section one of this act; (b) to sell any such ticket at a price in excess of that printed on the face thereof.

"Section 3. The price list of tickets of admission to a place of amusement shall be exhibited in a conspicuous place near the ticket window or ticket office. After such list is exhibited no deviation in the price of admission shall be made.

"Section 4. Any person, co-partnership, association, or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, before any alderman, magistrate or justice of the peace of the county be sentenced to pay a fine of not less than fifty dollars ($50) or more than five hundred dollars ($500) for each offense or in default thereof such person or the directors or officers or members of such co-partnership, association or corporation, as the case may be, shall be committed to the proper county jail for a period not to exceed thirty days.

"Any person, co-partnership, association, or corporation so convicted may appeal from such summary conviction in the manner now provided by laws for appeals from summary convictions."

'Frisco Seeks Place in the Sun

Would Like to See Los Angeles Producers Move Into Town and Live Things Up—Hopes May be Fulfilled

SAN FRANCISCO has hopes of being the photoplay center of the world, thereby gaining for itself the glory that this place in the sun brings. Of course, San Francisco has long been in the California sun, but since the armistice was signed the old town looks forward to more exciting things, and is willing to let Los Angeles retain for her very own the rays of old Sol, minus the photoplay producers, actorines and heroes.

Predicting that the center of the photoplay world will shift to San Francisco, motion picture men have under way plans to build a huge glass inclosed studio in this city and to begin at once the production of pictures. The pioneer company, it is announced, will be the Belle Bennett Pictures Corporation, which was recently organized with a capital of $750,000. This is only the first in the promised series of big ventures of this character, for the picture people have been looking for new fields and a number of them have long been anxious to locate here.

C. E. Bentley of New York, well known in the industry, is vice president and general manager of the new concern. He is the head of the Bentley Meyers Corporation of New York, controlling some of the most noted stars of both screen and stage and also having control of the Pyramid studio at Culver City, a studio built by Bentley, and the Bernstein plant at Los Angeles. The William H. Clifford Producing Co., in the latter city, was organized by him. Associated with him in the San Francisco Corporation is L. H. Bentley of Minneapolis, who owns the big Bentley Grand Theatre at Long Beach and is engaged in various enterprises. The company has its offices in the Flood Building. Local bankers and other capitalists are said to be associated in the enterprise.

It is planned that the gigantic studio to be erected in San Francisco will have accommodations for twenty producing companies. The preliminary business work has been completed and negotiations for the desired site are now in progress. Belle Bennett, the star of the new corporation, made a name for herself in "The Hell-Cat of Alaska," "The Bond of Fear" and other pictures, and then interrupted her brilliant screen career for a few months' training at the Alcazar theatre in San Francisco. She is now to retire from the "Legitimate" and devote herself exclusively to screen work in local fields.

mined not to permit any trust to destroy competition or to blight or interfere with the high quality of their work. They feel that it is of the utmost importance to secure the artistic development of the motion picture industry, and they believe that this will be impossible if any trust should get possession of the field and menace the business."

Discussing the acquisition of Mr. McAdoo in the broader aspects of its relation to the moving picture business, prominent film men expressed the greatest satisfaction last night.

"We think that the entrance of Mr. McAdoo into the industry is sure to prove a bully good thing," is the way Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, summed it up.

"He's a fine man, and we're mighty glad to have him come in," said Samuel Goldwyn.

"This is a step in the right direction," Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro, said. "Men of Mr. McAdoo's type will put the industry where it belongs. There is still room for more of the same type."

At the offices of the Universal company it was learned that Carl Laemmle had extended an offer to Mr. McAdoo the day following his official resignation as Secretary of the Treasury. The salary suggested was $50,000.

"Mr. McAdoo thought the matter over for some time," said Mr. Laemmle. "He was very favorably disposed toward the moving picture industry and spoke enthusiastically of its great possibilities. Finally he declined to join us on the ground that he lacked the practical experience for such a position as we had asked him to fill."

Secretary Received Many Offers for Pictures

Following the announcement that Wm. G. McAdoo had signed as general counsel for the United Artists' Association recently formed, reports began to come in that showed the former secretary had been "discovered" by several people in the industry.

The story above tells of an offer made by Carl Laemmle, of Universal, and it is known that other producers also sounded Mr. McAdoo out on the subject.

Leonce Perret, the French producer, wrote Mr. McAdoo in December, suggesting that he enter the industry. The reply was as follows:

"My dear sir:

"I have your letter of the 10th inst., suggesting that I turn my thoughts to the moving picture industry, which has a great future. I thank you for the suggestion, but I am sure that I have no qualifications for work of this character. I am going to resume the practice of law in New York when I take up business again.

"Thanking you for bringing the matter to my attention, and with all good wishes, I am, sincerely yours, (Signed) Wm. G. McAdoo.

Goldwyn Renews Stoll Contract

All Productions in Great Britain to Be Handled for Another Year—George King Now in America

FOR a second year Goldwyn Pictures will be distributed in Great Britain exclusively by the Stoll Film Co., Ltd., the organization that bears the name of England's greatest amusement magnate. A contract was signed this week by Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and George King, general manager of Oswald Stoll's organization, under which every Goldwyn production for the second year of the company's existence reaches the people of the United Kingdom under the same successful auspices that marketed them last year.

Mr. King, representing Mr. Stoll, and also Mr. Jeffrey Bernerd, the managing director of the Stoll Film Company, Ltd., has been in the United States since mid-November, being the first picture executive to reach the United States after the signing of the armistice in the world war. Throughout his stay in America he has been in daily contact with Goldwyn and its personnel and has found that Goldwyn regarded him and his powerful principals in London as an integral part of the Goldwyn world organization.

The Stoll Film Company, Ltd., has in England virtually paralleled the career of Goldwyn in the United States. The British organization was formed just a few months after the formation of Goldwyn over here and during the first year of its existence has been the exclusive distributor of all Goldwyn Pictures in the United Kingdom.

"The Goldwyn name and productions have met with splendid success," said Mr. King in discussing the signing of the new contract with Goldwyn. "The two organizations, yours and our own, have had a common purpose from the beginning. We have understood our product, its aims and ideals, and our exploitation of the pictures singly and collectively has been along lines closely parallel to your own. The Stoll Film Company, Ltd., has been delighted with the success of Goldwyn, especially because of the fact that we have not taken into our distributing organization any outside pictures of other producers."

Mae Marsh Plans Eastward Trip

It was reported by wire from Los Angeles February 6 that Mae Marsh plans to return to New York about the first of March. Her contract with Goldwyn expired February 3, and rumors have it that the star has three offers under consideration. Miss Marsh is said to have denied the report that she was intending to sign with Famous Players-Lasky.

Ince Renews Contract with Zukor

It was announced February 6 from the West Coast that Thomas H. Ince has renewed his contract with Adolph Zukor, and that the present stars will continue. The complete story will be found on page 997 in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Two new stars announced by Fox Film Corporation are herewith pictured. On the left is Elinor Fair, youthful—just seventeen—and heralded as a striking beauty of great personal magnetism. Albert Ray, in the panel on the right, is considered a "find" for William Fox, who has been closely watching his motion picture career. They will appear in a series of pictures announced as "Sweetest Stories Ever Told." As the little Cupid, pictured in the center, is not announced in the cast it is safe to assume that it will form the theme of the pictures, the first of which is nearing completion.

Kane Makes Success of Kansas Dinner

Visitors to the General Manager's Office at Select Pictures during the last three or four days have observed Arthur S. Kane wearing a smile like unto that which adorns the face of a school boy on the first day of vacation. The reason for this extra exuberance on the countenance of Select's seldom-solemn General Manager is the success with which Mr. Kane put over the Annual Dinner of the Kansas Society of New York, at the Hotel McAlpin last Wednesday evening, January 29th.

Mr. Kane, whose presidency of this society expired with the conclusion of the dinner, showed on this occasion how strong a hold the success habit has upon him. He pulled out an attendance fifty per cent greater than the highest at any of the previous thirteen annual dinners. Mr. Kane is a persistent record breaker. He it was who started Pathe Exchange, Incorporated, on its highly successful career, put over Select Pictures distribution until it looms large in the industry, and has made the Kansas Society one of the biggest State organizations in New York City. Now he is said to be looking for new worlds to conquer.

Walter Griffith in New Haven, Conn.

Walter Griffith has assumed management of the Bijou theatre, at New Haven, Conn., for Sylvester Z. Poli. He was in charge of the Poli theatre at Meriden, Conn., for the past six months, and previously had run the Plaza theatre at Bridgeport.

Fox Announces Two New Stars

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair to Appear in "Sweetest Stories Ever Told"
—First Picture is Already Started

ALBERT RAY and Elinor Fair are to appear in William Fox pictures—announced as a series of the sweetest stories ever told. These pictures will be of the good-humored, wholesome, dramatic type of love tales—clean, bright and snappy—that the American public has come to desire, the Fox offices announce. Typical of young American manhood and womanhood, these stories are expected to reflect the virile strength of Mr. Ray and the sweetness and charm of Miss Fair.

Albert Ray is regarded by film experts as typifying on the screen all that is likeable and best in young American manhood. Youthful, handsome, and the possessor of an illimitable fund of pep and vigor, they regard him as ideally suited for the speedy, good-humored type of American screen entertainment. His addition to the William Fox constellation is regarded as another evidence of Mr. Fox's alertness in engaging new stars who are proved box-office winners.

Ray's motion picture work has stamped him as one of the most finished actors on the screen. But, in addition to his thorough grasp of his art, he has the advantage of being the sort of dashing young man who middle-aged men and women love to see and whom young men emulate.

Mr. Fox, it is said, has been watching the young star's career for some time, and has noted that the public was extraordinarily enthusiastic over the manner in which he enacted breezy comedy-dramas. His appeal to the public was definite and irresistible.

In a way, the career of Miss Fair has paralleled that of Mr. Ray. Like him, she is blessed with youth—being only seventeen years of age. Because of this youth and her striking beauty and personal magnetism, Miss Fair has come to be known as "one of the sweetest girls in motion pictures."

Mr. Ray and Miss Fair already have begun on their first picture at the William Fox studios in Hollywood. The picture is based on an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon and J. Searle Dawley and was written especially as a vehicle for Mr. Ray and Miss Fair.

Miss Young Withholds New Title

It was announced this week that Clara Kimball Young has started work on a new picture on the West Coast. The Garson-Young producing forces that have been turning out Clara Kimball Young and Blanche Sweet pictures have moved from the Sunset studios to the Brunton plant in Los Angeles. This announcement comes from the New York office of the company.

The title of the new Young production is withheld, but, as an indication that Miss Young's activities in the future are to be more important than ever before, the word has been passed around that there has been secured as a vehicle for the well-known star one of the choicest pieces of theatrical property which has been developed in a long time.

Sees Hope in Australian Crisis

Paul Cromelin of Inter-Ocean Thinks Influenza Will Not Prostrate Country — Harper Writes
Optimistically

THAT the Australian picture business will very quickly recover from close-down effects through the "flu" is the belief of President Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, the well-known American exporting firm, and he bases it on a letter just to hand from special representative H. G. Harper, who is now at Sydney. Mr. Cromelin has given the MOTION PICTURE NEWS the following extracts from Representative Harper's letter:

"I have been in Sydney one week. The town, in fact the whole country, has been given over to holiday making. Most of the city folks are away in the country or at the seaside, and as many of the rural population seem to have been visiting the city. This is really—or so it seems to me—the aftermath of the armistice. There is a strong victory atmosphere about and much jubilation over the constantly returning soldiers. I have, up to now, contented myself with renewing acquaintances with as many of my showmen and film world friends as have remained in town—joined the Showman's Kinema Club, etc., and I am gratified immensely at the welcome accorded me everywhere. After the accumulation of war burdens, and the apprehension of increased taxation, there seems to be a strong reaction toward general buoyancy and hope for the future now that there is peace. Australia always had great powers of recuperation after periods of depression, and although things are far from good just at present, the outlook is reassuring for the future."

Another Inter-Ocean traveler is Louis Brock, who leaves this week for Cuba and Central America. Like Representative Harper, Mr. Brock will preach a double gospel of films and accessories on his trip

BUILD NOW!

Exhibitors Urged to Aid in Employment Situation

DAVID K. NILES, Chief of the Motion Picture Section of the U. S. Department of Labor, with offices in New York City, has made an appeal to exhibitors who contemplate building new theatres or additions to ones already in use.

The purpose of Mr. Niles' appeal is to urge the exhibitors to aid in solving the employment situation—rather the un-employment situation.

The letter to MOTION PICTURE NEWS reads as follows:

"The Department of Labor feels that one of the most effective means of solving the unemployment situation is to encourage building construction. If any motion picture exhibitors have an intention of building new theatres or additions to those they now control, it would be a patriotic service on their part to start in doing so immediately."

because of the feeling of Inter-Ocean that American film supplies should find the same foreign demand as American films. Mr. Brock's tour will consume two months.

Major A. H. Sowerbutts, who will act as special accessories representative for the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation in London, leaves for that side February 8. He will open a special supply office in the heart of the London film district and eventually create branches elsewhere in Great Britain.

John H. Taylor, managing director of London Inter-Ocean, who is now conferring with President Paul H. Cromelin in New York, expects to prolong his stay here an additional two weeks, because of interesting developments in the American producing field which bear on the English market.

Fox Invades More S. American Territory

Announcements from the Fox Film Corporation reveal the scope of the invasion of Latin America by American films. Fox pictures now, it is said, are being shown in every country in South America save Colombia, and the William Fox organization is contemplating a contract for that.

The Foreign Department of the Fox Film Corporation last week closed a contract with Granados Dias, of Caracas, for all the William Fox special Features to be shown throughout Venezuela. These pictures are already being shown in Caracas and other leading Venezuelan cities, and are the only American motion pictures exhibited in that country.

The company also has just closed contracts for the booking of Fox Films in Santo Domingo and in Central America.

One of the big favorites in Latin America, letters from exhibitors show is Theda Bara. Miss Bara's great super-production "Cleopatra" was recently shown in the Faust theatre, Havana, to capacity audiences for an extended run. At the same time two other Bara subjects, "The Kreutzer Sonata" and "The Clemenceau Case" were being shown at the Margot Theatre.

Letters from Fox representatives in various South American cities state that apparently the Latin-American people cannot get enough of Miss Bara's pictures; that exhibitors, even in the smallest towns of the exterior, are continually writing for more Bara super-productions.

National Board Answers St. Louis Attack

The National Board of Review of Motion Pictures has replied at length to the recent attack made upon it by the Committee of Fifty at St. Louis, and news of which was published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The reply by the National Board covers over three closely written typewritten pages, and defends its work from all angles.

One paragraph, in regard to its work, reads: "Not satisfied with its own judgment on ethical questions, it has striven to obtain the opinions year by year of hundreds of dramatic, social, philanthropic, religious and civic leaders throughout the country. There has been a constant search for advice and for intelligent judgment. It is fair to say that no decision has been reached until leaders of the American people have given their endorsement."

Copies of the reply were mailed to each member of the Missouri legislature.

Hold Operators in Their Places

Under a new ruling, members of the Cincinnati Local Moving Picture Machine Operators cannot work in any other position. During the war period, members were permitted to work in other capacities during the day to relieve the labor situation, but now that peace is in sight and the reconstruction period is beginning, it was decided to rescind this order.

Quebec Hopes for Reduced Tax

Municipalities Will Impose Charge on Tickets Instead of Province—
May be Reduced Two-fifths

THE highly interesting announcement was made at Quebec on January 30 by Hon. Walter Mitchell, Provincial Treasurer, that the Province of Quebec had decided to abandon the War Tax on Amusement Tickets. The information was divulged during the budget speech before the Legislative Assembly to cover the financial activities of the Province from June 30, 1918, to June 30, 1919.

This does not mean that theatre patrons of the Province of Quebec will be relieved of the necessity to pay a war tax on admission tickets, however, as the Provincial Government has decided to give the municipalities the privilege of imposing a tax on admission tickets. The Province will derive no revenue from the amusement tax, however.

The idea of a tax on tickets was invented first by the City of Montreal before the war when provision was made for the collection of one cent on every theatre ticket sold. After the outbreak of hostilities, the Province decided to take over this source of revenue, knowing that the strain on the treasury for war purposes would be heavy. The tax was increased from the standard rate of one cent per ticket to from two to ten cents per ticket. A certain proportion of receipts from the war tax was returned to the municipalities at regular intervals. Now that the war is over and no further war contributions are necessary, the Province has decided to hand the amusement tax privileges to the cities. With the change will come a reduction in the amusement tax, it is promised, as the cities will not be permitted to maintain as high a scale of taxation as was levied by the Province.

It is anticipated that the amusement tax in Montreal and other places will now be reduced by two-fifths of the present tax schedule formerly retained by the Province.

Lubin Promises Much in Lincoln Film

HERBERT LUBIN, one of the moving factors in the recently formed S-L Pictures organization, believes that when the initial "Ralph Ince Film Attraction," starring E. K. Lincoln, is presented to the motion picture public in the near future this production will contain all of the prime elements essential to a feature worthy of the designation "special." In summing up the factors which go to make screen entertainment of the highest class, Mr. Lubin recently pointed out the following details of the initial offering starring Lincoln:

It is the desire of the producers of the inaugural "Ralph Ince Film Attraction" to point out particularly the scenic beauties and pictorial dressing which has been offered the production from beginning to end. Unfolding as it does a story of rugged virility, American manhood and remarkable power, the very action and suspense of the play itself would suffice to interest and entertain the motion picture public, even though devoid of any particular beauty in the matter of settings and scenic values, not content with picturizing a theme of unbounded interest and nationwide appeal, the producers have given the film a setting of beauty rarely equaled.

B. G. Mitchell Engaged by Steger

B. G. Mitchell, recently discharged from Marine Aviation branch of the service, where he ranked as quartermaster sergeant, doing general aero-photographic work, has been engaged by Julius Steger, director general for International Film Corporation, to do developing and finishing work in connection with his productions. Mr. Mitchell is now engaged in developing and photographic work on Mr. Steger's late picture now under production, "Break the News to Mother," starring Pearl Shepard.

New Releasing Plans Announced

Carl Laemmle of Universal Cities
Departure from Previous Distributing Arrangements—March 10 Inaugurates the Plan

FOLLOWING the announcement of a new distribution policy last week, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Co., has again come to the fore with an outline of a new releasing policy for the "Big U" organization. The new releasing policy, though somewhat of a departure from previous releasing arrangements, does not revert from the idea of "the play is the thing," which has been a Universal motto for over three years, but adds considerable strength to this idea, due to the fact that the best plays obtainable are to feature five stars.

The new releasing policy as outlined by Mr. Laemmle will be permanent and will go into effect March 10.

At that time the first Universal Special Attraction of a special star series will be released. One Special Attraction of the Star Series will be released each week thereafter until the first series of twenty pictures expires. A second series of Special Attractions featuring a set number of stars will follow the first series; it is expected that thereafter each succeeding series will feature the same number of stars.

The stars who will be featured in the first series of Special Attractions are Mae Murray, Mary MacLaren, Monroe Salisbury, Priscilla Dean and Harry Carey. Each star will make four pictures for this series, and the exhibitor will be given the privilege of booking the entire series or just the picture of certain stars, as he desires. No effort or expense is to be spared in making each release of the series exceptional. None of the stars of the Special Attraction series will be featured in any Jewel productions or vice versa.

Dorothy Phillips will hereafter be known only as a Jewel star and Mildred Harris (Mrs. Charlie Chaplin) will be seen only in Jewel productions. The policy of releasing Jewel productions, which does not specify a certain number of releases per year, will be continued. Extraordinary box office attractions will be added to the list of Jewel productions for release from time to time and the unusual high standard of these productions will be continued.

"The Scarlet Shadow," with Mae Murray, will be the first Special Attraction of the new series plan.

Canadian Judgment Hits Marvin

Former Directors of Metropolitan Theatres, Ltd., at Toronto, Must Personally Liquidate Illegal
Dividend

AJUDGMENT delivered by the Master-in-Ordinary at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, Ontario, places the liability for an alleged illegal declaration of a dividend by the Metropolitan Theatres, Limited, an insolvent company, upon the directors of the company and they have been ordered to make good the amount of the dividend to the liquidator.

At the hearing it was charged that R. S. Marvin, R. C. Eckert, Benjamin Noble and others, directors of the company, were guilty of misfeasance and breach of trust in that they declared a dividend of two per cent at a meeting of the directors on March 31, 1916, and paid the same out of the wasting assets without any resolution from the shareholders. It was also charged that they had acted in their own interests and contrary to the interests of the company.

The court has found that the defendants are jointly and severally liable to the liquidator for the amount of the dividend, $1,500, with interest and costs from May 4, 1916.

In his judgment, just issued, the Master-in-Ordinary declares: "A perusal of the minutes and evidence shows that the fixed policy of the executive was to wring from the company a rapid succession of dividends which, before March 31, 1916, amounted to ninety per cent of the stock. This policy had produced insolvency before that date."

The theatre formerly controlled by the Metropolitan Theatres, Limited, is a large downtown house which is now operated by totally new interests and there is no connection between the old company and the new.

R. S. Marvin, one of the directors named as defendants, formerly was associated with theatre enterprises at Camp Borden, Angus and other Ontario centres and was manager of the Beaver Theatre, Toronto, for a while. He has not been actively interested in any Canadian theatre for some time, it is stated.

Canadian News Weekly Is Now Announced

The Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, and five other Canadian cities, has arranged to release through its various offices what will be known as the "British-Canadian News Weekly." Four different reels will be released each week, it has been announced. The company, which handles Pathe subjects in Canada, announces that each reel will be sixty per cent. British or Canadian.

A camera department was recently established at the Toronto office of the company under the direction of Blaine Irish and a cameraman is also on the job in and around Montreal.

The Specialty Company has also been releasing the Allies' Official War Review in Canada.

Kane Makes a Tour of Country

Select General Manager Intends to Be Away Six Weeks in Visit to Exhibitors. — Also Visits Exchanges

ARTHUR S. KANE, General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation, leaves New York Monday afternoon, February 10, on a trip through the South and Middle West that will consume six weeks. Mr. Kane expects to call on numerous exhibitors and to visit ten of the eleven Select Exchanges.

"I am going out to the fountainhead of all information," the exhibitor," said Mr. Kane. "We in New York know nothing. It's up to us to realize it and keep our lamps filled with the knowledge the theatre managers possess, making them burn brightly with better pictures better distributed. 'What the Public Wants' is the picture that every manufacturer on earth is trying to produce and each distributor is anxious to present. There is only one way to get this scenario and that is through the man who is in daily touch with the great buying public. The exhibitor has an instrument which is delicately attuned as any wonderful scientific invention, for it registers elusive human qualities, likes and dislikes, tastes and preferences. That instrument is the box office. By carefully noting the ups and downs of the various lines at the various hours and days and seasons and computing from them the theatre manager makes for himself a compass by which to steer his craft. The stars to him, the same as to the mariner, point out clearly the direction he shall sail. By intelligent readings of this wonderful device, recording delight, scorn, love or pity of the great paying public toward its amusement, he can forecast as accurately as the weatherman whether it will be fair or stormy the next time a certain star is in perihelion."

Mr. Kane's first stop is Philadelphia, where Manager Max Milder will show him the fine new offices which are being prepared for Select. After spending February 12 and 13 in the Washington office Mr. Kane expects to visit Norfolk and Richmond, Va., in company with Manager V. P. Whitaker, calling upon Mr. Otto Wells, of the Wells and Colonial theatres, and other important Select exhibitors.

Influenza Still Disturbs Western Ontario

The influenza situation has been causing some concern in various sections of eastern Canada. There has been another scare at Ottawa, but general precautions have been taken. Montreal and Toronto, the two largest cities, are reported to be practically free of the disease.

Several small centres have been hit again, however. The medical officer at Sturgeon Falls, Ontario, ordered the closing of local theatres for a second time, but permitted schools, churches and other places to remain open.

Weather conditions have been very unusual. There has been very little snow in western or central Ontario, but places where there is a fair amount of snow are the ones where the disease has been more prevalent.

Fifteen Canadian Houses for W. M. Elliott

Announcement was made in Toronto, Ontario, on January 29 that Mr. Will M. Elliott, manager of the Regent theatre, Toronto, had been appointed general manager of the fifteen theatres controlled by the Paramount Theatres, Limited, which is a subsidiary of Regal Films, Limited.

The majority of the houses operated by this company are located in Ontario and six are Toronto houses.

Rosenberg Gets Hippodrome in Cleveland

It was announced in New York last week that Walter Rosenberg, who operates the Savoy and other theatres in New York and vicinity, has closed a deal whereby he acquires the Hippodrome theatre in Cleveland, O., for ten years beginning in July, 1922. This is said to mark a policy of expansion by Rosenberg, who is a nephew of Oscar Hammerstein. The seating capacity of the Cleveland Hippodrome is 5,000.

It is said that Mr. Rosenberg intends to operate the Hippodrome as combination motion picture theatre and concert auditorium.

Says Billy West Comedies Are Going Big

Milton L. Cohen, president of Bulls Eye Film Corporation, says that Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia, franchise holder for the new Billy West two reel comedies, declared that the exhibitors in his territory are great boosters for the Billy West Comedies.

"The exhibitors in my territory have assured me (and their receipts speak for themselves) that the Billy West comedies are going over better just now than ever before," Amsterdam said.

"It's ripping fast comedy, of the cleanest type, and I would feel hurt, personally, if the reports from my exhibitors were other than they are."

Capellani to Form Own Company

Albert Capellani, whose withdrawal from the Metro organization has been announced, is scheduled to come to New York this week from the West Coast, according to advices from Los Angeles, to lay plans for the formation of his own producing organization.

Further than this, announcement of the director's plans have not been made known.

Louise Lovely, in Metro's "Johnny on the Spot"

Cleveland Looks for Record-Breaking Year

"All indications point toward a record-breaking year for the motion picture industry." This was the opinion recently expressed by one of the exchange managers of Cleveland, O., who has always made a deep psychological study of local conditions, and once again he has based his conclusions on rock bottom facts. "The public in general," he continued to explain, "has been treated to a series of free shows for the past eighteen months. Now that these free shows are over with, it is left with the great desire to do something and to go somewhere, and the only outlet for this nervous energy is the theatre. Seeing that the motion picture theatre reached the greatest majority of the people, it is logical to assume that the motion picture industry is going to have the banner year of its career."

Now, what this manager means by free shows, is not particularly free movie shows, although there have been plenty of them during the period of the war. He means occupation. Occupation for a vast lot of people who had previously been idle. True, the occupation has been useful, but the fact remains that it is impossible to let down on the nervous system, simply by the signing of peace terms. The human organism is so constructed that it adjusts itself to conditions slowly. Now that the outside interests are withdrawn, the restless public, the public that has been occupied with things outside the home and outside regular business interests, must keep on seeing outside diversion, for the time being, at any rate, and the consequence will undoubtedly be for the good of the Movies. It all sounds reasonable and logical, and seems a solid foundation for the prophecy that the coming year is going to be the red letter year of the industry.

"The Tiger's Trail," Title for Roland Serial

Ruth Roland's new Pathe serial, fifteen episodes, has been titled "The Tiger's Trail" and will immediately follow "The Lightning Raider," starring Pearl White, in release. Pathe executives believe that they have selected a name for this serial which will have a splendid exploitation value and at the same time comprehensively sum up the Arthur B. Reeve-Charles Logue story. The entire action centers around a band of East Indian natives who worship the tiger as their god. A live Bengal tiger figures prominently in the cast. Miss Roland's role compels her to play many scenes with the tiger. Robert Ellis is Miss Roland's director in "The Tiger's Trail," and the cast includes, in addition to Miss Roland, Harry G. Moody, George Field, Frederick Kohler, Mark Strong, George Larkin and Easter Walters.

New Ince Contract Now Signed

Will Produce Thirty Pictures for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation During Next Twelve Months

Thomas H. Ince

THOMAS H. INCE, who for the past two years has been producing Paramount and Arcraft pictures for distribution through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has signed a contract with Adolph Zukor to continue the present relationship for the releasing year which commences September 1 next. This arrangement, it is stated, was made just before Mr. Zukor left California for New York. It is said the contract exceeds in magnitude any other ever negotiated between a producer and a distributing organization.

Under the terms of the new contract Mr. Ince will produce during the year thirty pictures, all of which will be personally supervised by himself. These include a number of specials, two personally directed, in addition to productions starring Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, and Enid Bennett.

In making a simultaneous announcement in California concerning the closing of the new contract, Mr. Ince says: "My motives in entering into the negotiations whereby my productions will continue to be distributed through Paramount and Arcraft channels were dictated by the fact that I consider the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the greatest motion picture distributing organization in existence to-day and my knowledge that Mr. Zukor is the genius who is responsible for that fact. Moreover, I feel confident that Mr. Zukor and his associates on their part are actuated by their confidence that my ideas for the future coincide perfectly with their analysis of the progress of the art and business of motion pictures.

"As to Mr. Ray, Miss Dalton and Miss Bennett, whose contracts I hold, I feel that they have established a popularity among exhibitors and the public which will continue to create an ever-increasing demand for their pictures, and it is my purpose to keep on giving them subjects which, produced under my personal supervision, will still further enhance their popularity as stars and will contribute to the development of the highest art in motion picture production.

"The special productions which I will make, two of which I will personally direct, I have already started to plan for and I intend to make them fully worthy of the high standard which has been set by the Paramount-Arcraft Specials.

"I will continue, of course, as a strictly independent factor in the producing field, my relation to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation being only that of producer to distributor.

"In this latter connection, I want to take this opportunity to state to the exhibitors of America, whose confidence in my productions in the past has been my greatest pride, that before entering into the new arrangement with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation I listened to scores of propositions from as many different sources.

"The fact that my final decision was to continue my present association with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation should carry a world of meaning to the industry. Business-like, high-minded and with the sole ideal of building bigger and more prosperous patronage for clean, good pictures the organization has my profound confidence and its leader my respect."

Werner Organizes New Sales Organization

A new sales organization has been perfected for the sale of products of the American Photo Player Company, according to announcements made by H. G. Werner, vice-president, while in Los Angeles during the past week.

The new arrangement places the American Company on a wholesale basis entirely, inasmuch as selling arrangements have been completed with Wanamaker in New York and Philadelphia, Lyons and Heely of Chicago, Sherman Clay & Company of Seattle and San Francisco, and the Birkel Piano Company of Los Angeles. Hereafter all products of this company, which include the various styles of Fotoplayer and the Robert Morton pipe organ, will be sold by these various firms and their dealers.

H. F. Charles, who has been manager of the Los Angeles sales branch of the American Company, will be retained by the Birkel Company as manager of this department.

Mygatt to Handle Publicity for Hodkinson

Gerald Mygatt, formerly promotion manager of Good Housekeeping Magazine and Leslie's Weekly, has joined the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation as director of advertising and publicity. Mr. Mygatt has recently received his honorable discharge from the Army. He was a captain of the 75th Field Artillery. Captain Mygatt enlisted as a private in the Regular Army early in the war and rose from the ranks to captaincy.

The Reader has His Say

Editor Takes Svat at Producers Who Squander Good Money

The high cost of producing motion pictures has received another black eye through the medium of the press. This time it is in the shape of an editorial in the Akron Evening Times, of Akron, Ohio.

A. P. Botzum, general manager of the Orpheum, Dreamland and Strand theatres in Akron, sent the editorial to MOTION PICTURE NEWS with the following comment: "Discussed in the presence of film salesmen, the general opinion is that the editor is right—too much is spent for stars and no real stories are offered in sufficient quantity and with regularity that maintains the patronage of those who pay to see the real play regardless of the star."

The editorial follows:

ONE OVERSIGHT

"The moving picture makers pride themselves on the lavishness with which they spend money to create their product. We are all familiar with the press agent's stories of fabulous salaries paid to actors and the vast sums expended in staging movie productions. And it is self-evident that no narrow limits are placed by the producers on advertising appropriations. There is one point, however, wherein the parsimonious policy of the film industry shows itself to the most casual critics. The producers appear able to afford everything but good plays."

"The tendency is to squander 'million-dollar' staging on ten-dollar dramas. Except for a few outstanding films, the repertoire of worth while movies has been limited to the filming of stories published in book form or the reproduction of proven dramas from the speaking stage. The movies have failed to inspire any special creative art on the part of writers, in spite of the fact that they occupy a field peculiar to themselves. Neither the picturized novel nor the picturized spoken drama fill the special requirements nor meet the great opportunities of the cinema; the film stage initiated a new art and ought naturally to develop a new line of authorial creation. Writers say it is the niggardly policy of producers toward scenario authors which is responsible for the paucity of worthy film plays and the surplage of mediocre and inane offering which deluge the market. Producers deny this charge and insist that they cannot get an adequate supply of good material at any price."

"The public only knows that it wearies of the vacuous and insipid themes upon which producers lavish their money and ingenuity. The appreciative only regret that a new art, with almost boundless opportunities, should be stultified by the dramatic and literary absurdities which now dominate production. The movie industry may now be so prosperous that it can afford to ignore its artistic obligations, but if it is to continue appealing to any but childish minds it will have to adopt a higher standard of dramatic values on which to pour out its copious expenditures."

Plot Thickens in Quarrel Over American Films Shown in Canada

Several amusing incidents in the indignation which has been kicked up recently in Canada over the showing of American films which seemingly take all the credit for winning the world war, leaving England and other allies shivering out in the cold, have come to light.

Under date of January 12, D. C. Burkholder, of Ogen, Alberta, Can., writes MOTION PICTURE NEWS as follows: "Please find enclosed a short knock on misleading American films, published in a Saskatchewan paper. The situation up in this country is alarming, some places are absolutely refusing to exhibit American (U. S. made) films, as patrons get sceptical about them and get wrong ideas of them. They forget where they are made and for whom. I think it would improve the situation if film companies or producers would cater more to Canada or Britishers on certain films when shown in this country, the same as they do to the foreign market."

"According to this Mr. Britisher on the surrender of the German fleet, he saw the White Ensign and no other, which shows he has the same feeling to his part of it as the Americans have to their parts. I am showing this picture and will take close notice to what he says. I hope probably another allied boat was present to help, at least."

"An answer to the Canadian people through your NEWS would no doubt relieve the situation. American or U. S.-made films take good here as we have a large settlement of Yankees, but there are parts that will not attend picture theatres on that account."

Following is the letter which the Britisher published in the newspaper:

"Sir: The view of the German fleet surrendering to the British fleet off the Firth of Forth, Scotland, being shown at present at the Daylight theatre is very interesting, but it is astounding that the following wording should be permitted:

'Surrender of the German fleet to the American and Allied fleets.' which would seem to indicate that German fleet was surrendered to the Americans while the Allied fleets stood by.

"We are aware that the American fleet did, during the last year of the war, assist the British in patrolling, but the fact remains that even the menace of the 'U' boat was practically over before America was on the scene."

"Of course it was noticeable that the 'White Ensign' was the only flag flying in the surrendering fleet, which plainly indicated that this was a complete surrender to the British high seas fleet."

"We also noticed that in 'Hearts of the World' which was shown at the Daylight recently, the British fleet was portrayed as the American fleet."

"Is it not time that some of these misleading American films were prohibited in this country? Certainly a person unaware of the real facts of the case would imagine after viewing several of these films (especially those shown at the Daylight), that America, and America alone, won the war."

"We do not wish in any way to depreciate the bravery of the Americans, but we would like to see honor given where honor is due."

According to an article appearing in your valuable paper recently, the Ontario Board of Censors have refused to allow American war pictures to be shown continuously, and we think it is time something of this kind was done in Saskatchewan."

Charleroi Exhibitor Has Bad Luck with War Productions

Michael Rosenbloom, manager of Majestic theatre, Charleroi, Pa., things motion pictures with stories built around the war or concerning in any way the orgies of Mars are doomed for the shelf, and writes his experiences to prove his convictions.

His letter follows:

Enclosed find cards as to the business of the last two weeks of show.

I am writing this letter just for your information, as I know that you are anxious to let your readers know some things which are on the exhibitor's mind, and I just want to make a few comments on the pictures which are on the market."

There are some pictures which I have played during the last two weeks with which I thought I would do big business, but was very much disappointed. I made up my mind to find out what the trouble is, because I know that the pictures were good, also the stories. I asked many of my patrons and invariably their answer was that they are tired of seeing pictures that pertain to the war, now that it is over."

Now to prove it. I played 'America's Answer' after the armistice was signed and I hardly made expenses. I played Pershing's Crusaders' during the war and I cleaned up."

I played 'Over There,' a Select all-star cast picture after the war and done a poor business."

"The Caillaux Case," another good picture, but fell flat. I played 'The Prussian Cur' this week; a good show, but did not interest the people. Clara Kimball Young always drew big houses in all her plays, but in 'The Road Through the Dark' did only an average business."

I have made up my mind that I will not show any more pictures where the story is about the war, and I think that the exchange men would be wise in not putting them out. Let us have good stories up to date and the exhibitors and producers would be better off."

Very respectfully,

Majestic Theatre,
Michael Rosenbloom, Manager.

Y., for New York State (exclusive of Greater New York, Long Island and the counties of Westchester and Rockland); Electric Theatre Supply Company, Philadelphia, Pa., for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey; First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Pittsburgh, Pa., for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Super Film Attractions, Washington, D. C., for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; Eltabran Film Company, Charlotte, N. C., for North and South Carolina; Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, Ga., for Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee; Pearce Films, New Orleans, La., for Louisiana and Mississippi; Doll-Van Film Corporation, Indianapolis, Ind., for Indiana; Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, Ill., for Illinois and Wisconsin; R. D. Lewis Film Company, Oklahoma City, Okla., for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Ben S. Cohen, Denver, Col., for Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico; De Luxe Features Company, Seattle, Wash., for Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho; Metropolitan Company, Detroit, Michigan, for Michigan.

Lillian Walker Title Is Changed

The title of Lillian Walker's second picture on the Hodkinson program has been changed from "Fixing It" to "The Love Hunger." This title has been chosen because it is believed to better describe the heroine's search for a home and her determination to keep it, in spite of obstacles. The story is adapted from J. Breckenridge Ellis' well known novel, "Fran."

The action of "The Love Hunger" takes place in a small town where the monotony of country life is relieved when the circus comes to town. In the role of a lion tamer, Miss Walker has one of the most thrilling and dangerous parts in her long career as a comedienne of the screen. William P. S. Earle directed the picture, which will be released February 24.

To Erect Theatre as War Monument

Pryor C. Tarvin, Secretary of the Kenton County Memorial Committee, Covington, Kentucky, has taken up a project to have a motion picture theatre erected in that city as a memorial to Covington boys who sacrificed their lives in the world war. It is proposed to raise $100,000 for this purpose by popular subscription, the maximum subscription being $5 so that all citizens can participate in the plan, which is meeting with popular approval.

Two Big News Smashes

Complete Plans of Big Five

FOUR of the "Big Five" combination of artists have signed the final articles prepared by their respective attorneys, according to report.

Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffiths are the four who are said to have signed the new agreement at Syd Chaplin's home in Hollywood, February 5.

It is declared that the reason William S. Hart has not already signed the final agreement is that his attorney, W. H. Grossman of New York City, has not had time to fully investigate for him.

The agreements are said to provide for United Artists Distributing Corporation, with main offices in New York and exchanges in the principal cities throughout the United States.

The productions will be booked on a percentage basis, except in the smaller towns where a flat rental will be in force.

It is further stated that each branch exchange will supervise the presentations in each respective territory and also attend to the advertising and other exploitation to induce long runs.

The five artists will finance themselves individually and the organization will be conducted as a close corporation.

Rothapfel Definitely a Producer

THE first announcement of the Rothapfel Pictures Corporation, formed since S. L. Rothapfel resigned as managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres in New York, was made February 6 in the afternoon from the offices of the organization.

"The projected product," said the announcement, "of this new motion picture corporation is not pictures alone, but a complete program for use in the better class motion picture theatres. The policy contemplates the issuance of six of the Rothapfel programs a year, each a complete entertainment, including a dramatic feature picture, comedy, scenic and news or magazine films, together with complete musical scores, lighting effects and other essentials of proper presentation."

The announcement makes it known that the Rothapfel Picture Corporation will produce dramatic and other pictures under the personal supervision of Mr. Rothapfel, and will also acquire in the open market such pictures as they may desire.

The officers of the organization are: Samuel R. Rothapfel, president; Frank G. Hall, vice-president; Ashbel P. Fitch, treasurer, and Wm. Seabury, secretary.

The announcement definitely sets at rest the various rumors that have been going the rounds of late from the Astor lobby on Broadway to the Alexandria in Los Angeles. One of these rumors had it that Mr. Rothapfel was to become connected with the Goldwyn company.

Steger Completes Scenes of Shepard Picture

Julius Steger, directing Pearl Shepard in International Film Corporation's screen version of a drama inspired by the song of the same title written by Charles K. Harris, "Break the News to Mother," is working on the last scenes of this production at the Norma Talmadge Studio. Mr. Steger expects to have finished the photographic work by Monday. Immediately following the completion of Miss Shepard's picture, Director Steger will commence work on an International production, the feature of which will be an all-star cast. The title has not been announced.

by the 'publicity' departments of the manufacturing end of the industry?

Cleveland Avoids the Seat Tax

Saves Exhibitors More Than $30,000 Annually in Revenue—Exhibitors' League Helps Defeat Measure

THROUGH the concerted work of the officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and a few of the leading exhibitors of the city, the motion picture exhibitors of Cleveland have been saved the painful task of putting their hands in their pockets to the extent of $30,000 annually. This is the amount that was calculated to be paid into the treasury of the building inspection department of the city by way of a yearly license tax on the movies, ranging all the way from $100 to $300, according to the seating capacity of the house. Houses with 300 seats were to pay $100 annually. Houses with 600 seats would pay $200, and houses of more than 300 seats would pay $300. The threat of such a calamity became an actual fact several weeks ago when a license bill, incorporating these stipulations, was incorporated in an amendment to the revised building code. Nobody dreamed that a movie tax would be buried in a mass of building details, and as a consequence, those most interested in stopping its passage knew nothing of its existence until it had been passed by the council and signed by the Mayor.

As soon as the facts of the case became known to the officers of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, they immediately got in touch with Mayor Davis. Mayor Davis, on previous occasions, has freely expressed the opinion that the movies were a great benefit to the civic body, and that he would never put anything in the way of its progress. So when it was called to his attention what had been done to the movies, he recommended a reconsideration. This reconsideration came through the finance committee of the council. The League officers, headed by President Lustig, Secretary Gerson and Exhibitor Joe Grossman, met with this committee and pointed out to them the foolishness of this excessive tax, inasmuch as it defeated the object of its existence, for many of the theatres would not be able to pay it, would go out of business, and as a consequence, they would not get nearly so much revenue from the movie license tax as they contemplated. This seemed reasonable to the committee members, and so they advised that the tax amendment be repealed altogether. The license law came up for a third reading before the council last Monday night and was defeated by a large majority. And so it remained for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to accomplish almost the impossible; that is, to have a law repealed which had already been passed by the council and which had received the signature of the Mayor.

The exhibitors of the city were exceedingly grateful to the League officials who accomplished this in their behalf. It means an annual saving for the industry of $30,000. This is the amount that the building inspection department needed for its own maintenance, and which the movies were expected to furnish. But the sum will either have to be raised by other means, or else the building appropriation will have to be cut down to meet the stipulated amount minus the $30,000.

New Orleans Backslider

Once a Leader in Newspaper Co-operation, It Is Now One of the Poorest—Some Reasons Why

NEW ORLEANS presents the spectacle of a city where there was once bitter rivalry between the three daily newspapers, to see which could do the most in co-operating with motion pictures and in giving the general photoplay news, and which now has put the photoplay matter on a strictly commercial basis.

In fact, today the newspapers and theatres are about as far apart as they well could be. The three newspapers have an iron-clad agreement as to their treatment of the motion picture houses and the theatres themselves seem about decided to break with the papers. There will be a conference between the two interests shortly, when an adjustment may be reached. At present the theatres are doing as little advertising as possible—and getting mighty little in return.

New Orleans was one of the first cities in the country to give real recognition to the interests in photoplay matter and the Item was the paper that led the way. At one time this paper printed a full eight-page section devoted to the photoplay, but this was gradually cut down and things went from bad to worse until the present state of affairs has been reached. And the newspapers are far from being entirely to blame for the existence of this state of affairs. There is an interesting story for all connected with the industry, in the developments in the Crescent City.

As stated, the Item was one of the first papers to start a motion picture department. It is an afternoon paper with a Sunday edition and the so-called photoplay department appeared in that issue. But, as it was started, this department was frankly conducted for the revenue that the man conducting it was getting out of it and the revenue to the paper. It was based on the advertising that was obtained from the exchanges and the only "news" matter that was printed was in connection with this advertising and largely gossip of the exchanges.

On the Item at the time, there was an editor who has made a study of the photoplay, as well as being a trained newspaper man. He pointed out to the owner that a photoplay department ought to be conducted from the readers' point of view; that the general public wasn't interested in whether Bill Jones, manager of the Diamond exchange, has returned from a tour of the theatres of the state, or that "Her Price," which was being advertised for sale by some exchange, told this and that story. The answer was practically: "If you know so much better how this department should be run, why don't you do it yourself?"

And this man did take up this work, in addition to his regular duties, largely as a labor of love and more because he believed at that time that the promises of big advertising being held out by the producers meant that a real department could be made a financial success, from the newspaper point of view, and that it would be of tremendous interest to the reading public, and therefore, a good circulation builder and holder for the newspaper. And certainly the latter theory is correct, no matter how much error there may have been in the expectation of a large amount of national advertising.

At the time that this change was made there was one theatre advertising regularly. Four columns were to be devoted to the reading matter given the photoplay and from the very start everything, except a reading notice for the advertising theatre, was devoted to the real news of the industry—gossip of the players, items about productions in the making and the like. The result was that the other theatres began to come in and the department expanded. In a very few weeks there was a "layout" of scenes from the first-run attractions being carried.

Such strides attracted attention and the paper began to get national advertising, largely on serials, though it was carrying the advertising of one large distributing company. The owner of the paper began to get as much interested in the department as the man who was conducting it and after many of their talks it was decided to enlarge the Sunday department and to establish an illustrated daily department. But before this was done the leading theatre managers and all of the exchange men were invited to a dinner at which the matter was discussed in detail and there were such assurances of co-operation that the decision was reached to enlarge the department as indicated. Co-operation was promised and it was forthcoming from the theatre owners.

Just at that moment there came up an example of what advertising and co-operation will do. An experienced exhibitor announced that he would open the biggest theatre in the city for motion pictures. This house had tried everything, from the straight legitimate to burlesque. Under every management it had failed. At the time that it was to be opened as a photoplay theatre it was surrounded by cabarets—and cabarets in New Orleans were not frequented by society people. The manager had to build a wall to keep out the noise of one of the cabarets that adjoined the theatre. He got real pictures and he employed a man who understands advertising and who is now directing the advertising and publicity for one of the biggest chains in the country; and he got real co-operation from the Item.

After a few weeks the house began to make money, though another new house had been opened at the same time. The house in question advertised consistently; the other one did not. Soon the theatre we are discussing became the leading one of the city. We understand that the manager sold the lease alone for $65,000.

That certainly shows it pays to advertise—when you get co-operation.

But to return to the story of the Item: The daily department was established. There was a standing heading, in fact, several sets of them, and each one of these carried, day after day, the picture of some star in the news. Understand, this had nothing to do with current attractions at local theatres; they were really news stories written in gossipy style, and written from the point of view of the reader. There were reading notices given each advertising theatre every day, with real reviews on the day after they changed their bills. When they were written by the photoplay editor they were signed with his initials. These reviews were frank; they told the truth about pictures. The value that the managers placed in these is shown by the fact that after the reviewer had adversely criticised three different bills at the theatre the business office began to worry about lost business. He went to the manager of the theatre and the answer from that man was: "If you cut out the signed reviews I will stop advertising. I don't mind the truth being told, but after ——— writes a review and says that the picture is true, people will even come to see whether they agree with him."

All this time the Sunday department kept on growing. It was now occupying, with the advertising, more than two pages. Assurances from the producers and distributors came that there would be still more national advertising. At that time most of the companies issuing serials were asking that they be printed in weekly chapter form, each installment occupying a page. In exchange for running this matter the company advertised, the amount ranging about $1,500 for each serial carried. At that time there were three or four of these running and these were being carried in the Magazine Section of the paper.

In the meantime three-fourths of the matter being carried in the Sunday Item and about half of that in the afternoon daily editions, was devoted to real news about the pictures. A different type had been adopted for the headings, a large number of cuts were being employed, including a column or more of gossip about the players, which was illustrated with vignettes—all of these being made by the paper without charge to the exhibitor or to anyone else.

Because of the fact that it was desirous to get this serial matter out of the regular magazine, because of the assurances that came from many of the producers of national advertising that was in view and because of the support that seemed to come from the exchange men and the theatres it was decided to go a step further and to establish the Motion Picture Item.

Up to this time the man who had been doing this work was doing it "on the side," with the average of some sixteen hours a day devoted to the two duties. The owner of the paper felt convinced that the photoplay editor was right in his conclusions. In fact, the owner came to New York and talked over the matter with representatives of leading producers and he was assured of the fullest co-operation.

Then in New Orleans was staged another dinner, to which the exchange men alone were invited.

But look back a moment: There are two other newspapers in New Orleans, the Times-Picayune, morning and Sunday, and the Daily States, afternoon and Sunday. Almost immediately after the Item started its real Sunday motion picture department the Daily States followed suit, though the matter was largely reading notices. Men connected with the morning paper had been quoted by exhibitors as expressing, in the past, a contempt for the motion picture, but it was finally forced to come into the list. And after the Item started its daily department the other two papers swung into line, the Daily States illustrating its with cuts as were furnished by the theatres, the Times-Picayune using none.

At this second dinner a complete dummy of the proposed Motion Picture Item, made up with actual type and illustrations, just as it would appear, were given each guest. The proposition was put up to them—that this was a great step forward and that the newspaper was going to a big expense by putting one of its highest priced men exclusively on this work, spending a large amount for cuts and white paper, devoting a special advertising campaign to this feature of the paper.

It was put up to the exchange men straight that there were 85 theatres in New Orleans. Territorially the city is one of the largest in the country, occupying the whole of Orleans parish. Some of the neighborhood theatres seated as many as 2,500 and did immense business. Most of them were small, frequently changing hands and with the financial responsibility of the management slight. It was explained to the exchange managers that the downtown houses would advertise on the basis desired, but that real pressure would have to be put behind most of the neighborhood houses and that all the newspaper asked was to be kept in touch with the changes in management and the financial standing of these houses. But the exchange managers were asked to get behind this special Sunday eight-page section and urge the theatres to advertise in it. A rate was agreed upon of ten cents an agate line, which would give each theatre five lines each day of the week, including Sunday, at a total cost of $3.50.

While this dinner was in progress all of these exchange managers were enthusiastic. They promised their fullest co-operation, because they knew that the Item was going to devote the larger part of the space to motion picture matter in general—only one page with a seven-column layout being devoted to the first-run houses, and that it would be a great stimulant for the photoplay in general.

With the promise of this co-operation the paper proceeded to start the Motion Picture Item. On the front page it carried strictly news matter of the motion picture, with special news heading, a three-column picture of some star each week, the selection to be made by request of the readers. There were the vignette cuts, columns of gossip about the players and coming productions, questions and answers, editorials and a couple of columns devoted to "news of the neighborhood houses."

The exchange men named a committee on co-operation, and in the meantime the news of what the Item was about to do "leaked." The committee of exchange men met, arranged a time to call upon the officials of the Item—but never showed up. When they were called upon, the paper was informed that the other papers had protested—though the Item was offering to do ten times what the others had done and had been the distinct leader on behalf of the photoplay.

Out of the entire number, representing all of the film companies, one exchange man actually co-operated. The others explained that they could not ask a theatre manager to advertise in the Item as against the other papers—despite the unprecedented step in the whole nation that the paper was taking.

But the Motion Picture Item went ahead. It got all of the downtown houses and the principal neighborhood houses that would pay their bills—and some that, unfortunately, did not, though the general plan was to require cash in advance.

Then the next thing that happened was that several of the serial companies dropped the policy of having the stories printed and doing heavy advertising. The expected national advertising came along for a time and then unexpectedly began to drop off.

In those days there was no such thing as co-operation between the producer and the exhibitor in advertising, except for a couple of the serial companies.

Here was a newspaper that had been led to expect this sort of co-operation. It was not forthcoming from most of the companies as a whole or from their local representatives. Naturally, the thing that the newspaper did was to begin to cut down. First, the size of the paper was reduced to six pages, then to four and finally was incorporated in the regular portion.

But on the part of the newspapers there came more and more of neglect of the news side of photoplays and a desire to reduce the space devoted to the reading matter. Things went from bad to worse. Then the newspapers got together and decided to cut out reading matter during the week entirely. That started a fight and then the newspapers countered with another decision—to double the advertising rate of ten cents a line and give reading notices.

Since then the photoplay department, as a department, has disappeared entirely. All of the amusement matter is grouped together; even notices of steamboat excursions appearing along with the other matter. Today, in the pages that have been reproduced, the advertising matter has almost disappeared and what there is of it is mingled with the general amusement matter. It is decidedly unattractive and uninteresting reading matter.

According to the latest reports, there are now about fifty theatres operating in New Orleans. The neighborhood houses have stopped advertising entirely since the increase in rate.

The Strand, Liberty and Globe, all a part of the Sanger chain, use comparatively small space in all of the papers but get mighty good results from the space they do use. The Pearce interests advertise two of their theatres, the Tudor and the Trianon, with about three inches single column, in the Sunday Item, using none of the other papers. Loew's and the Palace advertise the feature in connection with their vaudeville bills.

One neighborhood theatre, the Mecca, advertises its weekly bill in the Sunday Times-Picayune.

The daily advertising of the leading theatres is small but attractive, among the best in the country, and they get with this, reading notices that are indicated on the pages reproduced.

There will be further remarks made about the New Orleans situation, but because there is prospect of an early settlement, and because the present situation may be only temporary, we are only recording some facts here.

Franklin Puts Emphasis on Short Subjects

By Harold B. Franklin

Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

THE art of exhibition finds expression not alone in the presentation of features, but in the proper blending of the program. A wealth of material is available in one and two reel subjects that help to balance a program. These short subjects aid in giving motion picture entertainment almost the same appeal as vaudeville-variety.

The importance of the short subject should not be discounted. These so-called "fill-ins" are being recognized throughout the country as one of the wonders of motion picture presentation. Recently the New York Times, one of the country's leading dailies, gave unusual prominence to the short subjects presented at two of the New York's leading motion picture theatres and in one instance the criticism overshadowed the featured offering at these houses.

Short subjects lend themselves admirably in the building of a program and the up-to-date exhibitor will take advantage of the big opportunities for presentation that is offered by comedies, scenics, cartoons, news weeklies and so on through a long list. All of these subjects have a peculiar place on the motion picture program and if properly arranged will help to enhance the presentation of any feature.

These subjects should be booked with the same care as the principal feature and presented with the same care. At Shea's Hippodrome we screen every short subject and appropriate music is selected. We like to refer to our "fillins" as "featurettes."

Some of the scenics that are offered are not only interesting and beautiful to look at, but hold a fascination for all and have a particular interest for the better grade audience. These subjects offer splendid opportunities for proper musical interpretation and lend class to the program. Big strides have been made in the titling of scenics and in them we often find good entertainment.

Good comedy is always in order. It holds the same function as wit, humor and satire does to literature. And besides everyone loves to laugh. Its very contrast to the feature gives it variety. Good cartoons generally receive a warm welcome from the youngsters as well as the grown-ups.

The news weeklies are entitled to a place of honor on every program and properly played up with music that fits the subjects they will please all audiences. The screen magazine offers intimate views of subjects that are of decided interest.

Anyone can book a feature, but it is the creative exhibitor who will take advantage of the splendid material offered by the short subject. He will blend his program so that it will be a harmonious arrangement of everything that motion pictures has to offer and with intelligent thought he need not run a show that is too long. The average feature, together with a comedy, news weekly, scenic and cartoon, can be run in an hour and three-quarters to two hours. Intelligent selection of short subjects is a great help to any feature and the good short subject of today can in many instances be made just as attractive as the best feature.

The appeal of motion picture entertainment depends in no small measure on the short subjects. They are the "stuffing and the cranberry sauce to the turkey." Some of the most interesting and entertaining qualities of motion pictures can be secured in these shorter reels. They help audiences to appreciate the principal feature of the program more by offering a contrast.

This week at Shea's Hippodrome we are offering the following program:

First Half—Scenic—Prizma—"Kilauea, the Hell Hole of Hawaii." Comedy—Mack Sennett's "Cupid's Day Out." News—Universal and Literary Digest topics. Feature—Mabel Normand in "Mickey."

Last Half—Scenic—Educational—At the Peace Conference of the World. Cartoon—Mutt and Jeff in "The Pusse Cafe." News—Universal—Pictograph. Feature—Constance Talmadge in "Sauce for the Goose." Comedy—Flagg's "One Every Minute."

Your Idea and Ours

MOST of the advertising on "The Heart of Humanity," which is still playing at the Broadway theatre, has been of the intimate, chatty type. After the original announcement that the Alan Holubar picture was to be seen at the Broadway there then followed a series of advertisements in which nothing was printed except quotations from the reviews in the New York papers.

We can't kill it!

After 252 performances at the Broadway Theatre (6 every day) we are compelled to announce that

"The Heart of Humanity"

(The Picture That Will Live Forever) Will be continued

Still another week

Three times we have announced its withdrawal and three times public clamor has made us retain it. We don't know whether to laugh or cry. It's the craziest experience we ever had. Maybe the heart of humanity is to blame!

Broadway

THEATRE, BROADWAY AT 41ST ST.
(Continuous 10 A. M. to Midnight).

Then came the chatty talks, and this one headed "We can't kill it" is certainly most unusual. In other words, the theatre is saying to the public that it wants to get rid of this picture to put on another one which it has booked, but that the public demand is so strong that the Broadway cannot stop the run now. And this no doubt will attract more attention and pull more business than if the theatre strung "magnificent" and "record breaking" all over the page. The space used is 5½ inches double.

Advertising leadeth the dollars to lie down beside the dimes.

THIS is the best of all of the advertising on "Little Women" that has come to our attention. It is distinctly pleasing to say this, too, because it comes from the Walnut theatre, Cincinnati, and because when this department was started Cincinnati was, all in all, one of the poorest advertising cities in the country. There has been a marked improvement there.

Here the figures of the four girls are used in half-tone, and then before them is the selling argument. There was no need to tell the story of "Little Women," for practically everyone has read it.

There is a good line in: "A play as pure as newly fallen snow and as sweet as clover." That comes from the press book, and it cannot be surpassed for selling power. If the Walnut did not get every possible patron with this display there is something wrong with Cincinnati.

One idea used is better than a million in the pigeonhole.

CRYSTAL theatre, Indianapolis, meant well in this display, which occupied a little less than three inches across two columns, but that is as far as it got. In the first place it entirely killed the effect with the use of the heavy border. Certainly there was no excuse for the black rule between the picture of Miss Nesbit and the reading matter. And then we doubt very much whether anyone will recognize the cut as being a picture of the star.

We fail to get the selling lines: "A powerful drama of New York society life," etc. We do not believe that this will create in anyone a desire to see the picture. There was a time long ago when the new dealer in woman's goods, down on Main street, hung out the sign "New York Store" and expected the people to come in and buy because they would believe the goods different from those offered at the store with which they had been trading for years. And so there may have been a time when a line of people would form in front of the box office to see a picture of "New York society life," but that old story has been told them so often that there isn't the slightest appeal. If you had no more to say than this it would have been better to have devoted the space to the name of the star and the title.

Courtesy costs nothing, but it yields the biggest of profits.

MOORE'S RIALTO theatre uses a rather unusual style in advertising Pricilla Dean in "The Wildcat of Paris." The display is made one that will appeal to the emotions. For instance, we have the line: "You have seen Nazimova in 'Eye for Eye,' Farrar as 'Carmen,' and other vivid examples of exotic characterizations, but you have not viewed the wildest flight of feminine daring, or the furtherest reach of startling portrayal until you have seen the astounding combination of fiction and fact in modern Paris."

Rialto plays Miss Dean as "the amazing actress," and it is bound to get results with the use of this phrase. The advertising of the Rialto is based on the display conditions that exist in Washington, D. C., and therefore it is going to get over mighty strong where it would fail to do so in some other sections.

In short, the Rialto has invited the very best people of Washington to come to the theatre and get the thrill of their lives. We haven't the slightest doubt that the display worked well—though we are still opposed to the use of the superlative in "The greatest action picture ever made." There's lots of action in it, be we wouldn't have stressed the fact this way. It would have been just as strong to have said: "There's action every moment."

It is eleven inches across three columns.

The smile that won't come off is the best come-on for your house.

FOR a change we like a display of this sort once in awhile. The Paramount-Empress theatre, Salt Lake City, realized the great cast that was provided with "The Squaw Man," and instead of going into the use of a lot of adjectives George Carpenter, the manager, simply listed the principal members of the cast.

While "The Squaw Man" is one of the best-known of modern plays, we believe that those theatres that failed to call attention to the fact that this is the screen version of a legitimate success lost money. This Mr. Carpenter succeeds in doing and uses only seven inches across two columns. The only picture that he uses is a line cut of Cecil B. DeMille, the director.

Certainly advertising such as this is going to appeal to the very night. Lack of patronage in the section, and when you have a picture where similar conditions obtain you will do well to try this. But be sure that you have the cast to back it up. A mere string of just names means nothing.

Even the Ark would have to call around several times a day for some people.

FEW pictures seem to have offered the exhibitor so much encouragement to use attractive pictures of the star as has "Virtuous Wives," the first of the new Anita Stewart productions.

We have repeatedly said that there is nothing so valuable in getting the attention of the reader as a striking picture of a pretty woman, and there has been a sufficient variety of these pictures of Miss Stewart distributed to assure different appeals in various displays.

Cozy theatre, Topeka, Kan., could ordinarily be criticised as having too much reading matter if one merely considered the type at the left, but the dominating cut that was used insured that everyone read this display throughout. Ten inches, five columns is the space.

Using only seven inches across four columns, the Strand theatre, Providence, R. I., has an even more attractive arrangement. Here, again, the picture of Miss Stewart is used as the main thing to get the eye, and the selling argument is reduced to smaller type. But it could have been improved, we believe, by omitting the reference to the coming attractions in the shield at the lower left-hand corner and using here either the list of the supporting cast or some other matter.

Certainly, in an attraction like this one, with the novelty of the return of Miss Stewart to the screen, we wouldn't let anything else interfere. But in this particular case this criticism is a little narrow, for this is the first time in many weeks that the Strand has confined itself to a single feature and, therefore, the announcement was evidently meant to show that the theatre had not abandoned the double-bill feature, but that the arrangement was only for the current week.

in sufficient size and prominently. But make them attractive and get the full punch over with them.

If there's enough "please" about your theatre, you'll soon find the ease.

THIS fails to "arrive." It is a mere mass of type without anything played strong except the title of the picture, and here a mistake is made. Imperial theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., knew that it had an unusual picture here and went in for big space, so far as Jacksonville is concerned, employing 9½ inches across three columns.

We do not know why the Imperial decided on matter like this, whether it was unable to get any of the ready prepared advertising from the exchange, or whether it thought this a better selling argument. In the first place the name of D. W. Griffith is lost by using it at the top of the display, when it should have been made to stand out equally prominently as the title of the picture. And then the picture itself is "over sold" in the mass of black type that follows. There should have been some one line or series of lines picked out, and then this should have been brought down to smaller space, largely indented at the sides to leave plenty of white; and after that we would have used the names of the players one under the other.

As it is there is too much mere "talk." It leaves the impression that the writer himself did not know exactly what to say and therefore went ahead and said everything that came into his mind. As the display stands it does not furnish the patron a single argument why he must see this offering.

And on the seventh day the theatre manager worked like the dickens on ideas for the next one.

THIS half-page advertisement of the Strand theatre, Hartford, Conn., is certainly a striking one, but we believe that it would have been made the stronger with the elimination of the adjectives.

In the first place the unusually large space that the Strand uses is the best evidence that the theatre thought this an unusual attraction and that the people of Hartford would be likely to come to the same conclusion. The name of Maurice Tourneur and calling "Woman" his masterpiece seems to us to have been sufficient. Yet, here is a case, if there is such a thing, where these adjectives are justifiable.

In this connection we want to call attention to the name plate the Strand used, one of the best that we have seen anywhere. The motto line, "A place of pleasure and refinement," is a good one. The theatre should have this plate made in various sizes and use it in every advertisement.

It doesn't necessarily require brains to make money in a gamble, but it does with an investment.

Now New York Stages the Show

WHILE it is impossible to present the musical scores of the three leading New York theatres in the ordinary chart form in these columns, exhibitors will find many suggestions here for the playing of the same features. Through the courtesy of Dr. Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli, and of Mr. Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, we have access to the full musical scores and are undertaking to present them here in suggestive form rather than to offer a mere tabulation. We believe that this arrangement will do more to inspire you to good music than would any mere cue sheet.

The same facilities will be afforded by the Broadway theatre through Managing Director Kashin. The debut of the Broadway in these columns is again postponed this week because "The Heart of Humanity" is once more held over.

THERE are three distinct types of pictures presented at the New York houses this week, including a wide variety of short subjects that ought to give the exhibitors of the country a mighty good idea of the current releases in those classes. All of the weeklies are used at the three theatres, and often the same event is portrayed more than once. In that case there will be detailed comment only once here.

At the Rialto this week Cecil B. De Mille's "Don't Change Your Husband" is the feature. There is no scenic, but there is an unusual arrangement of the Animated that is worthy of attention. A Mutt and Jeff cartoon supplies the comedy element.

Rivoli has a typical Hart feature in "Breed of Men," while there is a striking Prizma picture and a Vitagraph comedy in "Scamps and Scandals."

Strand presents a varied series of subjects attractively arranged with comedy dominating inasmuch as the feature, John Barrymore in "Here Comes the Bride" is the feature. A Keystone reissue adds to the laughs.

Strand Theatre

THERE is certainly wide variety in the bill at the Strand theatre this week and it sparkles because of the many changes in the spirit of the offering, though it should properly be called a joyous presentation since comedy dominates. You may know that we think that it is an enjoyable bill when we tell you that we stood up almost all the way through it, so great was the crowd on Sunday evening.

Excerpts from Victor Herbert's "Babes in Toyland" form the overture. The Joan of Arc setting which we have already described was used for this and it is played with the lights up in gold.

Then comes the Strand Topical Review opening with Pathe pictures "Following the Army of Liberation into Germany." These are some of the most dramatic pictures that have come out of the war and the audiences are vehement in their appreciation. First we have pictures of the French and then of the marching Yanks and the applause is tremendous. There follow pictures of French cavalry. Then we are offered a contrast with the reception given the American troops in a Belgian city with the cheering crowds and then the silent reception in Germany. It is a remarkable thing the popularity that the tanks have achieved. Both at the Strand and at the Rialto, where these same pictures are shown, the tanks get one of the biggest hands of the entire bill. "Pozieres March" is used through these pictures. Then come Pathe pictures of the reunion of the House speakers in Washington.

One of the most striking demonstrations that we have ever seen in a theatre come with the next pictures, Universal Current Events view of the "drys" celebrating their victory at Washington. The huge audience broke into a storm of hisses and boos and when a picture of the smiling Bryan was shown—well, he would have lost that smile quickly could he have heard what New Yorkers think about him. For these "Elks March" is used with a strain of "Auld Lang Syne" brought in for a laugh.

Universal Current Events also supplies interesting pictures of harvesting the salt crop along Salt Lake and here "Petite Conversation" is the music, this continuing through Pathe pictures of the "brick that floats," showing the preparation of concrete blocks. "Commander in Chief" is the music for Pathe pictures of launching two more destroyers at the Mare Island yards and for Pathe pictures of the Italian delegation's visit to American battleships at Boston.

Then there is a relief from the news events brought in with Paramount-Bray's "The Romance of Crater Lake." This lake was created by some volcanic action which resulted in a whole mountain caving in and making a body of water without any outlet. Included in this are pictures of the protected animals in the Government reservation there and these add quite a human touch. "Blurette" is the music followed by "Impish Elves."

"Topics of the Day" always get a hearty laugh and they have been made a permanent part of the Strand program for that reason. The remark about "the perfect 21" sets them howling and there is a big one with this: "Webster, 1919—Nog, a word formerly used in connection with egg. Now extinct." There is another one touching prohibition which says: "When certain people start blowing the foam off charlotte russe, it is time the U. S. went dry." "Schon Rosmarin" and "Liebesfreud" are the two selections here.

Pathe then presents pictures of skiing to the tune of "Boy Scouts." Then come Pathe pictures of the tribute to the Red Cross by the sailors at San Diego, Cal. With these scenes of the men at drill and marching we have stirring music in "Clear the Way." There follow Pathe pictures of the Allied warships opening the Dardanelles with "Ride of the Janissaries" played. The final punch is put in the Topical with the Pathe pictures of the peace conference. We have pictures of Lloyd George, Colonel House, Foreign Minister Pinchon and then a fine shot of President and Mrs. Wilson and the audience breaks into frantic applause, only to be accentuated later when we have him reviewing the troops, then scenes of the marching men and finally, without any title, the President and General Pershing are shown together all other records of applause during the presentation are broken.

The arrangement of the Topical brings in a striking harmony in the opening and in the closing, for you will remember that first we had the army of liberation going into Germany and at the end we have the tribute that is being paid these boys by the President himself.

Immediately after the Topical there comes Pathe Review pictures taken along the border between France and Spain, striking colored pictures, and the enjoyment of these is increased with "By the Brook" as a flute solo. The audience pays a strong tribute to the music.

Using a setting showing the bow of a ship ploughing through the waves straight at the audience and bearing there four girls, the Strand Female Quartet then sings "When the Boys Come Home." This group of girls has aroused a lot of interest at the Strand and though this same setting was used two weeks ago it remains equally appropriate and, we believe, there was more comment on the effect even than when it was employed before.

"Here Comes the Bride," in which John Barrymore is the star, is really a farce comedy and it keeps them laughing every minute during the showing. In the first scenes we are shown the troubles of Tile with his landlady and his laundry and "Overture Comique" gives just the right spirit to them. Then when we have the scenes in the home of Robert Sinclair, the millionaire, it turns to "Valse Idylle" until the lover of the older girl is revealed and then we get "Wooring Hour." We have

Mrs. Tile in consultation with her lawyer and arranging her plans with "Radotages" used. Now there comes a piece of music that we would recommend the use of every exhibitor following the title of "Friday the Thirteenth." It is "Essence Grotesque" and it gives just the weird spirit that you need for such events.

Following this the organ plays interpretative music for 16 minutes. The orchestra comes back with the title "Meanwhile Our Hero" and "Usaidit Waltz" is employed, and this continues to the scene of the father and the reporters, when we get "Under the Elms" and then there follows through "Bon Vivant" until Tile sees his sweetheart and then we get "Babillage," "Air de Ballet," "Aubade Gleurie" and "Through Lover's Lane," each followed through until Tile falls over at the sight of his wife and then the organ takes up the music for four minutes. There is an intimate little touch brought in by the music when the orchestra plays "Home Sweet Home" at Tile's vision of himself and sweetheart, which continues until the change in scene, when we have "Novellettin." At the title "In three months I'll have this straightened out," the orchestra swings into the "hum-ful" strains of "You're in Love."

Then comes Mlle. Alys Michot singing "Chanson Provencale," and after that we have a combination of educational and comedy. Pathe presents Ditmars pictures of porcupines and after this an "Analysis of Motion" pictures of boxing. The organ carries the music through these, and there follows up a reissue of one of the best of the old Keystone, "Hogan's Mussy Job." A real scream it is and the accompanying music includes "Jazzing Around," "Hunkatin," "Muttering Fritz" and "You'll Find Old Dixieland in France."

Grieg's "March Sigurd Jorsalfar" is the organ solo.

Rivoli Theatre

THERE are just about all sorts of entertainment on the Rivoli bill this week, and the man who does not come away from the theatre pleased may be set down as worried about the Bolsheviks or prohibition.

Lighting effects are played with unusual effect during the overture, the brilliant Rossini "William Tell." It opens with the lights all in gold with the green windows at the sides and gold at the bottom of the stage curtains. There are some splendid instrumental effects obtained too, the music opening with the 'cello and then as the flutes take up the strains the lights are dimmed to blue, for the storm, turning into red for the pastorella, and then with the horns for the hunting scene coming up to gold again just before the ends of the number, coming up gradually to a full blaze.

"Model Girls," a Prizma picture, first shows the way that the wax models used in the store windows are made, and during these we get "Butterfly," following through with "Canzonetta," and as the "live ones," the actual are shown, "Liebes-lied" is used thence to the finish. Many of the latest fashions are shown in this picture, and it will have an especially strong interest for the women of your audiences.

For the first musical number the music is first carried on the organ, and then the curtains part, revealing a studio with its slanting skylight, a girl seated at the window and a harpist at the left. After a few strains of the harp, Miss Catherine Norfleet, the violinist, arises and comes to the front of the stage and begins to play "Ave Maria," accompanied by the harp and organ. The only illumination beside a blue cast is a fanciful standing light at the left of the stage.

The Rivoli Pictorial is unusually long this week, embracing a wide variety of subjects and carrying no less than fifteen musical selections. Do you pay that much attention to your news subjects? It's worth while, because it will stamp your house as THE theatre of your city if you do. We would a whole lot rather give our careful attention to the animated portion and let the rest go with the organ, if we had to choose between them.

To the music of "Triumphant America," Pathe first shows us pictures of the sailors' review for the Red Cross at San Diego, and then we have Universal Current Events' view of the seizure and destruction of false scales and measures in New York, "Le Sylphides" played without the introduction. Then come Pathe pictures of the bricks that float, and here "Shadowland" is played. Then Kinograms show us "$75,000 worth of fur coat," a garment made for Mrs. W. E. Corey, and with it comes "Sari Valse." From the same source come revival of dancing in California, with pictures of the Deishawn dancers and Ruth St. Denis performing her "Peacock Dance." "Queen of Sheba" is played until the latter appears, and then the orchestra swings into "Caprice Viennois."

Now we get some screaming comedy in a Happy Hooligan cartoon, released by Educational, "What's in the Paper." In this picture Happy is entrusted with taking some papers to General Pershing, and the troubles that he has caused a roar every minute. "Bugle Call Rag" is effectively used until the time that "Happy" goes sailing in the boat, and then we have the picture carried on the organ, with effects. Then when the pelican makes his appearance the tune changes to "Scenes Humoresque," and then when we get the storm we have "Ma Poulette," with the music again changing to "Bugle Call Rag" as the bird carries him away.

Kinogram presents pictures of war tanks becoming peace taxis, "Ragging the Scale," played without the introduction. Then come from Gaumont pictures of the bridge of ships bringing the boys home which gives us a shot of a line of transports at sea, and then close-ups of the crowded decks, and finally some of the scenes of the soldier sports with "America First" the air. Then comes pictures of Uncle Sam finding jobs for the soldiers at Mitchel Field, N. Y., and here we have following through "What Are You Going to Do to Help the Boys?" this continuing through Gaumont views at Camp Kearney, with discharged soldiers going into the merchant marine, and then a view of Secretary of Labor Wilson and his appeal.

Pathe follows with a reunion of three House speakers at Washington, and here the big orchestra swings into "King Cotton," which continued to the finish of the Pictorial. The big punch comes at the end with the pictures at the peace conference, which are described elsewhere. It is rather unusual that these same pictures should be used for the final wallop at both the Rivoli and the Strand, but they are well worth while.

For the second musical number the settings show a window in gold with the curtains drawn up to it and a single hanging light, and then Carlos Mejia, tenor, sings "Sueno de Amor," one of his own compositions.

"Breed of Men" is a typical William S. Hart picture, and for this the music consists largely of the numbered selections, with Victor Herbert's "Panamericana" as the theme. This is introduced at the very start, and then is followed with "Wyoming Days" and a numbered selection until he begins to play, when "Panamericana" is again used, played to action. The theme is used again with violin and cello when Hart comes out of the saloon, and then is brought back again with the title, "And Careful Carmody," and again as he is seen leaving the saloon a second time. It is repeated when he appears through the floor, then when he enters the cabin and finds the girl, with a cello solo until he enters the bedroom of Prentice, and then it is played pp. When Prentice says he will have to ring for his valet "Dream Kisses" is used, and then as Hart offers his gun as his warrant the theme is played again pp and then we have numbered selections until the title, "Careful Carmody," and "Love Theme" played at the end as he takes the papers out of his pocket and hands them to the girl. It is a most effective arrangement.

The orchestra then has them all singing and humming with "Alexander's Ragtime Band," and there follows the comedy, "Scamps and Scandals," a Vitagraph. This is mostly chase stuff and lively music is used, the range being "A Wild Jazz Knight," "Funeral March," played burlesque, "Full of Dash," "Honeymoon," "Step Lively," "Who's Who" and "The Plunger."

The final organ solo is Jacques Lemmens' "Finale in D Major."

Rialto Theatre

THERE isn't a bit of applause greeting the overture at the Rialto this week. Now don't jump to the conclusion that the splendid orchestra doesn't play the brilliant "Vltava" in a manner that warrants the display of appreciation. The reason is that the audience doesn't have a chance for the applause because of the unusual arrangement of the bill—a distinct novelty and one that is appreciated as a change.

This overture is the second of six symphonic poems written by Friedrich Smetana, a Czecho-Slav composed and it is descriptive of the river Vltava, or the Moldau, as it is known to us. Two springs in the Bohemian forest unite and their waters grow into a mighty river. It flows through the woods where the hunting horns are heard, then through the lowlands with wedding feasts and dancing, by

ON MUSIC SCORES

Need of an Orchestral Library Pointed Out by N. Y.

Theatres

WE have had several requests to print the full music scores of the presentations at the New York theatres. We regret to say that this is impossible, but at the same time there is a lesson here for all exhibitors who have their own orchestra.

Rialto, Rivoli and Strand all use a large number of "numbered" selections. For instance, in the libraries of the various houses there are selections that are especially picked to interpret both physical and mental situations. Possibly No. 24 at the Strand may be a part of the selection from the Toreador song from "Carmen" or that No. 89 at the Riesenfeld theatres may be a particular strain of grandeur taken from "Pomp and Circumstance."

For instance: Recently, on the same Sunday we heard the very same strains played at three theatres. We referred to the music cues that we get and found that in not one of them was the name mentioned, but that they were given by number, and that all of these were excerpts from "La Forza del Destino."

Begin starting your orchestra library. Have your musicians select from the overtures and other numbers that they play little bits that will apply particularly to certain situations. You will soon be able to "play the picture" in a remarkably realistic manner.

moonlight as the nymphs hold their revels, through the rapids of St. John to the Prague and then disappearing in the distance.

At the start of this selection the lights are all in gold and after a few strains they fade into blue with the orchestra bathed in a dim blue. Then with the hunting horns they go up to gold again, coming down to blue once more with the night scenes and the strings carrying the music. The audience is expecting the end of the overture, but it does not come, for without even a title the Rialto Magazine starts, opening with scenes of "Canada's Mountain of Tears," Mt. Edith Cavell.

"Scenes Poetique" are used with these which come from the Ford Weekly. The horns predominate, giving a doleful turn to the music. Then follow the Pathe pictures of following the army of occupation into Germany, which are described elsewhere in these reviews. "Heart of America," a very stirring air, is used during all of these scenes and helps the applause along wonderfully. From the same source come the views of the Dardanelles being opened by the allied vessels and great cheers greet the battleships while "Orientale No. 2" is played.

Gaumont pictures show harvesting ice in Maine to the music of "Loved Ones Waltz," and then come Pathe pictures of skiing in the Cascade Mountains. Here we have the snare drum and tympany effects as the various sportsmen take their leaps into space and go coasting off into the distance. Then come American Red Cross pictures of American doughboys and troops of other nationalities at Archangel. "Ballet Russe No. 5" is used up to the scenes in the graveyard, where a hundred Americans are buried, and here the music is carried on the organ until pictures of the Bolshevik internment camp, when we have Letter B of "Dance Russe." With pictures of an American hut we get one strain of "American March," changing to an oboe solo with pictures of the outposts of civilization.

Linking right up with these Kinogram presents pictures of the grandmother of the Russian revolution and here we have "Glory of Russia," which is continued until pictures of Trotsky addressing a crowd in Petrograd and through a scene of the apartment house in the Bronx from which he and Lenin went forth to stir up the trouble. "Hymn of the Free" being used during these as the audience sits in silence. Then we have a touch of humor brought in with "A Day with Annette," dainty pictures of a kiddie at her task of caring for her doll and giving her dog medicine. There are a lot of laughs in these and real human interest. "Canzonetta" is used. Final punch to the weekly, which is accentuated by this light spot thrown in, comes with Kinogram pictures of bringing the boys home again. To the music of "Old Glory" we have shots of the warships loaded with men from the distance, then views of the crowded decks and flashes of their messages. At the title "And from Hampton Roads" we have "Eight Bells," and then with the sunset scenes "Retreat" sounded on the trumpets to the end of the

This is one of the best weeklies that we have ever seen. Joseph La Rose, production manager of the two houses, evidently worked hard in gathering the material together from all sources. And though it is unusually long the arrangement makes every portion of it interesting, while the peculiar manner in which it is set in with the overtures provides the novelty.

Miss Annie Rosner then charms the audience with her rendition of Victor Herbert's "In Dreamland," and then comes the feature, "Don't Change Your Husband." For this there is a specially elaborate and pleasing musical score with "Love, Here Is My Heart" as the theme. "Idillo" is used at the opening with "Debutante Valse" following through, then with the title "Fortunately the Guests" we have "Sunbeams" and then "Valse des Bruges," "Extasie" and "Chant Elegique." The theme is first played without the introduction when the wife goes to the husband's bed, followed by "Bluebird." At the scene where the phonograph records are played the records themselves are used on a machine behind the scene, the orchestra taking up "Naughty," as the record of that name is shown.

Where the wife takes up the guitar and plays we have "Serenade Nepalotane," and then with the title of the dangers of a fancy dress ball the music turns to "Gold and Silver Waltz." Then with the title "If I Were King," where the lover paints his word pictures we have "Veil Dance," changing with the scene of the jewels, when "Faust Ballet No. 2" is used and then to "Herodiade." With the change of scene back to the real people we have the music changing to "Imaginary Ballet," "Balkan Queens" when the wife sees her husband coming and then "Chianti" as the husband appears garbed as "Folly." "Erstwhile Suzanne," without the introduction, is played when the wife dances with her lover, and then with the title "With Love's Light Wings" we have a second theme with "Premier Amour" without the intro. As the wife goes to watch the dancing we have "Champagne Spirits" and then "Premier Amour" again as the lover returns to Leila, changing to the main theme as she goes to her husband's bed and then a sudden stop and a long pause as she sees that he is asleep. "Le Retour" is played to action then and then comes "Melodie" with the title "Love Has a Thousand Eyes." The organ takes up the music with the title "Freed at Last," and at the hand organ scene plays "Forgotten," and then at the title "Do You Remember" we have the chorus of the theme as a violin solo, then as they see the mistletoe changing to a 'cello solo. With the visit of "Toodles" we get "In the Tavern," followed by a couple of numbered selections and at the title "And with the Summer" we get "Rose Garden" followed by "Premier Amour" as the scene changes, then "Rose Garden" again with the second change and at the title "Jim, Do You Know" we have the theme and then a rag for the final scenes with the flash of the lover telling the other girl what he would do if he were king.

Then the orchestra plays "Gems of Stephen Foster" to great applause and there follows a howling Mutt and Jeff comedy, "Pousse Cafe," "Smiles and Chuckles," "A Baby's Prayer at Twilight," "The Skaters" and "Me-ow" are the selections. Seeboeck's "Canzonetta" is the final organ selection.

PATHE'S POLICY

Promises Its Synopses of Stories Are Correct

IN last week's issue under the heading of "Your Idea and Ours" we referred to the unfortunate fact that many of the film publicity departments had to prepare their matter before the picture was viewed and called attention to errors in synopses. We carefully avoided reference to names of the companies, but it remains the fact that many of the stories of the picture which are sent out in advance do not agree with the picture as it actually appears.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., however, is not included in this heading and Edgar O. Brooks, exploitation manager, is justified in objecting anyone getting that impression, even by inference. He writes:

"Before one line is written on any Pathe subject, before one catch phrase is coined, before one poster is commenced each Pathe subject is viewed, and oftentimes reviewed more than once, but the respective department heads governing publicity, advertising, posters, exploitations, etc. Not a wheel is turned until those department heads have had an opportunity to study the subject in its complete form, just as it will be seen by the public."

that is bound to result in good in the future. As you probably know he publishes each week "The Movie Fan," which is a full-sized four-page newspaper. In the current issue he devotes part of the front page and nearly all of another to reprinting an article by Dr. Royal S. Copeland, health commissioner of New York, on influenza which appeared in the New York Times. New York theatres were not closed at any time during the epidemic, with the exception of a few unsanitary ones, and Dr. Copeland tells in this article why there was no need to close them.

Then Mr. Decker devotes additional space by calling editorial attention to the article.

Los Angeles Papers Praise Grauman's Showing of Cannibal Pictures

LAST week we printed a few facts about the way that Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" was presented at Grauman's theatre, San Francisco. Fuller details showing the elaborate manner in which the presentation was carried out and the great reception that it received in the Los Angeles press is of interest.

Palm trees and palm huts were used for the main settings, with almost a jungle provided as the background. The prologue came just after the news weekly, the curtain rising on an almost dark stage. It was almost a true vision of the islands of the South Seas even to the presence of a monkey seated on the stump of a tree.

After a full view of the setting had been permitted the lights came up gradually, representing the coming of the morning with an opal sea in the background. In the distance could be seen a native canoe, manned by two savages, and as they drew closer to the shore other savages ran to meet them and then followed the reception and the staging of a cannibal dance.

Mr. Grauman has put on a number of prologues at his handsome house, but none has attracted such attention as this one with the Martin Johnson picture immediately following. A special music score added all the more to the enjoyment of the presentation. The Los Angeles Herald referred to the stunt as "Grauman's finest piece of work. One hundred per cent verdict," and similar opinions were expressed by other local papers.

Exhibitors Mutual reports that this presentation has accentuated the interest in the pictures and that there is an immense demand for them all through the Pacific Coast section.

Carelessness may cause you to forget to turn "off" the light, but only stupidity to turn "on" the light—of advertising.

Adaptable Advertising Cuts Give Exhibitors Chance to Make More Attractive Displays

EXCELLENT examples of the manner in which to use the cuts furnished by producers come in the same mail—one from a big city exhibitor and the other from a small one—St. Paul, Minn., and Medford, Ore.

Metro recently adopted a new style of a press sheet for the productions that it distributes including the Nazimova productions. This consists of four pages, newspaper size, and contains press stories, reproduction of paper, slides, news cuts, etc. But one of the main features of it that the size enables the reproduction of the cuts exactly as they are.

For instance, on the last Nazimova production, there is a four-column ten-inch, a three-column of the same size, two two-column ten-inch display, and a single eight inches. These are all hand drawn, and the only thing that is left for the theatres to do is to supply the name and the date. On account of the crayonesque style that is adopted these print well and the full effect is obtained.

But even with this unusually good advertising it remains a fact that there are many exhibitors who want to design their own advertising, and this matter prepared by Metro is worthy of commendation because it permits that to be done. For instance, while the New Garrick has used the entire two-column display as prepared by Metro with the exception of cutting off "Nazimova productions," and the name of the distributor the Rialto has chopped still further and has then put over the cut a portion of the selling talk.

It must also be taken into consideration that theatres often want to advertise something in addition to the main attraction. For instance, the New Garrick wanted to call attention to the hours of the showing and the special musical setting that was given the offering. It has done this in a dignified way and has added much to the pulling power of the entire advertisement. The Rialto has used a box on either side to advertise shorter pictures, but practically all of the space has been occupied with the date and the two sentences, "Daring in its intensity" and "Boundless in its beauty." It is a mighty good display all the way around. From the reproduction one might get the idea that it is crowded, but remember that it occupied more than a quarter of page of space.

Complaint has come from many exhibitors that most producers in preparing their advertising apparently try to letter into the main drawing either the name of the company or some official or trademark, or else they add the names of everyone connected with the picture down to the camera man. This is, of course, decidedly a short-sighted policy for you are not going to be able to get many exhibitors to use something that they don't want, and the net result will be that they will not use any of the matter and that they won't be able to exploit the picture as they would otherwise have done.

Not only is the Metro advertising distinctive and dominant, but it permits the exhibitor to use such parts as he desires.

Roth Uses Airship Trip to Get Him Business

California theatre, San Francisco, has just shown another example of taking advantage of every opportunity. By doing this it got a large amount of novel publicity during the showing of D. W. Griffith's "Greatest Thing in Life."

Eugene H. Roth, manager of the California and Portola, learned that Gaumont, having inaugurated a Pacific Coast edition of its news weeklies, was about to send up an aviator to get some news of the city and Golden Gate, arranged for cooperation. So when the Gaumont photographer accompanied a Government aviator in a big battleplane above the city he carried with him 200,000 slips announcing the showing of the picture at the California during the current week. These were dropped over the business portion of the city at the noon hour, just as the crowds were coming out of the buildings. Not only did these slips attract unusual attention, but the stunt was so novel that the newspapers carried stories about it.

Chicago Paper Prints 42,679
Lines of Motion Picture
Ads in a Month

HERE is what we believe to be a new record and one that shows the possibilities in the co-operation of motion picture theatres and newspapers: During the month of December the Chicago Herald and Examiner printed 42,679 lines of advertising in its Motion Picture Directory, this being almost 6,000 lines over its nearest competitor. These figures are furnished by the Washington Press, an independent audit bureau.

This arrival at the top of the column is the result of a steady growth which began eight months before, when the Chicago Examiner of William Randolph Hearst and the Chicago Herald of James Keeley merged into the one organ. In eight months the motion picture advertising has risen from 11,519 lines for May, 1918, when it was far below three other papers in directory business, to 42,679 in December.

A motion picture department, set in operation at the time of the amalgamation of the papers, has been responsible for this meteoric change, a department that is based on unique ideas of service and the delivery of something more than mere news.

High-salaried writers trained in the making of editorial features were attached and assigned to provide advertisers with ideas and distinctive copy especially fitted to the Chicago public. The department has been prompt to suggest to exhibitors the coming of pictures particularly suited to their publics and to point out to producers the favorable locations for their special brand of pictures.

Aside from complete news and criticisms of current releases a series of full-page, half-page and quarter-page advertisements on feature films, written in an ingenuous manner constantly added to the number of readers who bought the paper for motion picture information.

The department gave motion pictures an expansion and sweep in the public prints of Chicago that they had not previously known. It gave them a live emphasis and importance that had been but dimly recognized in the city before and yet which had been the right of pictures on the basis of sheer popular favor for years.

Denver Theatres Will Give Concerts Twice Daily

Such a success has been the rendition of orchestral numbers at the Rivoli theatre, Denver, that this house has decided to inaugurate a series of concerts twice daily, at 2:45 and 7:30 p. m. Under the direction of E. Cavallo the forty members of the symphony will put on a selected program to precede the photoplay.

A clever piece of exploitation was used in connection with the announcement by the Rivoli sending to its patrons a letter signed by Mr. Cavallo calling attention to the new plan, and adding that "the only cities in the United States having an orchestra of similar size and quality are New York and Chicago."

Photoplay Editors and Ad. Departments Vote Young Woman Milwaukee's Best Press Agent

TO be considered the best press agent in a city of a half million where motion pictures practically overshadow the offerings of the legitimate stage is a pretty high honor. And when said press agent is a girl the honor is all the more unusual. But it has happened, and we are going to quote the words of the motion picture editor of one of the leading dailies of that city:

"If a vote were taken in the advertising and motion picture departments of Milwaukee's three great newspapers as to whose copy was always in time, always conservative, never superlative and always artistic, the answer would be unanimous for Miss Henryett Luscher, whose daily task is letting the public know what Tom Saxe's theatres are offering."

Miss Luscher's headquarters are at the largest of these theatres, the Alhambra—the Rialto of Wisconsin picture palaces—where an art shop is maintained to produce ingenious lobby displays. The head of this department, Edward J. Weisfeldt, takes care of the drawing of the ideas which are submitted to him by Miss Luscher. In this way the entire ad. is drawn and a cut made from that, so that among two pages of type-set Sunday ads the Alhambra's stands out by force of contrast.

Miss Luscher uses line work exclusively

Miss Henryett Luscher

Here are a few of the reasons why Miss Luscher's ads are different:

She never uses half tones, because she has found that half tones do not reproduce as well as an ink sketch.

She tries to stay away from sensational advertising so that her ads will set a standard for the public by which they may be able to know exactly what they can expect to see and will not be misled by misrepresentation of the type of play shown.

She never uses superlative phrases whether in ads or in publicity, nor does she set forth her own opinion of the picture nor that of the management to the effect "that it is the most wonderful, etc., etc., etc., picture ever unreeled."

She is a firm believer in teaser advertising and when some mysterious hieroglyphics appear in the columns of the daily press which are so constructed as to arouse one's inmost curiosity without satisfying it, there is good reason to suspect that Miss Luscher is about to spring an "announcement extraordinary."

Or if there is any kind of "stunt" which will work successfully in connection with pictures she loses no opportunity of working it. She has just given evidence of this with the clever campaign that she used on "Virtuous Wives." (See next column)

Six days before the opening of the picture Milwaukee collectively was aroused when it picked up its morning paper and noticed the outside column of one of the pages ornamented with the most unusual advertisement it had ever seen. The first thing that caught the eye was a big black arrow and a lot of white space. Then the eye travelled to the top of the page and found the heading: "The truth about married life in New York society circles," and then followed a vignette cut of Anita Stewart and something about the character she played.

This was followed day after day until the list of five principal characters has

Thrills and Personal Element Employed in Advertising of Vitagraph's Newest Serial

VITAGRAPH has just sent to exhibitors and exchanges a forty-eight page campaign book on its latest serial, William Duncan in "The Man of Might." This is so arranged as to include not only the general advertising and suggestion matter on the entire serial, but to provide separate exploitation for each of the fifteen episodes.

In the introduction to this the exhibitor is urged to play up the thrills of the serial, and all of the exploitation is built around this idea. That unquestionably is the proper plan in a serial starring William Duncan, because the feats of daring that he has accomplished in other chaptered stories are so well known that there is no likelihood of your patrons thinking that you are merely handing them a line of bunk.

Vitagraph advises the exhibitor to use the circus style of advertising and to use the paper liberally. There is a striking 24-sheet and then there are one, three and six sheets on each episode so as to continue the interest through the billboards. In addition there is an action herald, which the exhibitor is urged to distribute in public places such as hotels and restaurants. A big banner is provided for lobby purposes.

While full stories of each episode are provided, it is going to be hard for the exhibitor to get these used in the newspapers unless he makes the arrangement in advance and agrees to use considerable space in advertising the serial. The plan book gives good advice in telling the theatre manager to take the matter up with the newspaper well in advance and talk the matter over frankly so as to get the fullest co-operation. The day has passed when there is any use to pay attention to advice that some of the companies used to hand

Branham Uses Real Burlesque with "Perfect Lady"

Charles P. Branham got Detroit talking again last week when he put a hali portion of a burlesque show on the Majestic stage during the presentation of Madge Kennedy in "A Perfect Lady."

In the first reel of "A Perfect Lady" there is a scene showing a burlesque show just starting off its show in a country town. The curtain is just in the act of being raised on the opening number, when Mr. Branham had the lights flash on and the screen lifted away in a jiffy. And instead of a film chorus seven of the real articles were on deck, dressed in the same garb as their sisters of the silent drama and dancing and singing before the same background. These girls did two numbers in happy fashion and then the screen rapidly descended and the picture continued. In fact, the screen was in place before the last note died away.

Woman Voted Best Press Agent by Milwaukee's Newspapers

been covered and then she had complete the most widely read advertisement that ever appeared in a Milwaukee paper. And the receipts showed it. It was a clever, sensible teaser campaign of the sort that is bound to get the fullest amount of attention.

The Alhambra theatre was successful in introducing community singing to the world and its "added attractions" are always something novel and artistic. This is made possible by a wonderful large stage that held hundreds of little children when the Alhambra had Baby Marie Osborne to welcome them and which was the scene of such a successful fashion show with living models last year that a 1919 fashion show will be held the second week in March.

The theatre is also equipped with a large children's play room in which many dainty kiddies' banquets have been held, not the least among which was the one tendered Marie Osborne to which forty prominent children were invited.

Miss Luscher has been able to secure more free publicity for her "stunts" among newspapers than is customary, for the reason that she has never misrepresented a story to a city editor, nor has she ever violated his goodwill by "trying to put something over on him." That's their testimony. When there is good reason why extra publicity should be vouchsafed, she sees the news editor, tells him her story and the publicity is generally forthcoming.

Portland Theatre Scores with "Under Four Flags"

Frank A. Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore., has just completed a presentation of "Under Four Flags" which has had the entire town talking.

Exterior decorations consisted largely of flags of the Allied countries draped about paintings of the various commanders. On the inside there was also a profusion of color.

Before the picture was started there was a curtain covered with the flags of the Allies and as this rose there appeared another drop reproducing the figures of soldiers of the four Allied nations that has been used in so much of the advertising, while Organist E. H. Hunt played "The Star Spangled Banner."

Then he secured the services of R. Clinton Montgomery, now a film salesman, but formerly a singer of illustrated songs, and during the showing of the picture the house was gradually darkened, a red cross flashing on the side of the screen, and Mr. Montgomery, in the uniform of an American soldier, being recognized as the light gradually came up. He sang "Rose o' No Man's Land," and the applause was so vehement that the audience seemed determined to hold up the showing of the remainder of the picture, which was then resumed.

Lobby display of Strand, Birmingham, Ala., on "Under the Top"

Circus Atmosphere Carried Thru Advertising and Lobby Display With "Under the Top"

FOR the first time since it has been under the present management the Strand theatre used a special lobby display during the showing of "Under the Top," the Fred Stone picture. And it is very evident here that the Strand scored a big success with this first effort of Manager H. F. Kincey.

He was able to secure from a carnival company wintering in Birmingham a real circus entrance, and this was used as the main effect with the lobby strewn with sawdust. Regular circus banners filled the lobby and hung on either side were strings of lights such as are used in circuses. In addition to this Mr. Kincey obtained two bears, which were placed in a cage in the center of the lobby.

Fred Stone was advertised as the main attraction, being referred to as the "Death Defying Featist," with Fatty Arbuckle as the side show attraction, "the fattest man." Only the titles of the pictures in which they appeared were given, and the circus atmosphere was maintained everywhere else. Crowds gathered in front of the theatre to witness a display entirely unique in Birmingham and there was a lot of word-of-mouth advertising created.

In the newspaper advertising the name of Fred Stone was not even used, but these were made straight circus display. It will be noticed that in the larger of the Birmingham is almost exclusively a manufacturing city. There is an immense laboring element to which the theatre must make its appeal to get the greatest share of business. and we can well imagine that

NO DIAGRAM

This Letter From a Small City Exhibitor Speaks for Itself

WHEN this department was first launched it was met with a remark from some men who have been veterans in the motion picture trade paper game. They said:

"It cannot be done. The exhibitor will not listen to you."

We thought differently—provided we spoke from the point of view of the exhibitor.

So here are a few extracts from a letter that H. C. Young, manager of the Strand theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., has just written us, referring to Martin Johnson's pictures of "Cannibals of the South Seas":

"You will note that I have followed out the suggestions that have appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and have used a reproduction of the advertisement that the company carried in the NEWS a short time ago. Here is one company that is giving service. The local exchange did not have the cut, so I sent to New York and it was forwarded to me at once.

"As for business—it is right after the matinee now, and it was the biggest house that this theatre ever had in its history. * * * The picture truly lives up to all the claims that were made for it, and the photography is wonderful."

It paid Mr. Young to watch the Special Service Sections in the NEWS.

It will pay YOU.

there are a lot of people in Birmingham who never have heard of so eminent an actor as Fred Stone, but who could be brought to see a real circus story provided the advertising were put on such a basis as that of the Strand theatre.

There is one thing that must be taken into consideration so far as stage stars are concerned, as differing from a few years ago. Before the motion picture reached its real popularity all of the New York successes "went on the road" with either the original companies or second companies and so every city in the country the size of Birmingham saw all of the New York successful productions, though of course at a later date, and therefore the stars that were well known in New York spread their popularity through the nation.

But the theatres playing legitimate attractions through the country have shown an amazing decrease. Some of the comparatively large cities get but a few of the big attractions in the course of a year, and it is altogether possible for a star who has been one of the hits in New York to be an unknown factor in most of the rest of the country. The exhibitor should be sure that the name of the player means something to his community before he uses it as his main selling argument. Otherwise he should use some other appeal. In this case we believe that the Strand theatre acted wisely.

And there is another thing: It's a mighty good idea to get out of the beaten path and do the unusual once in a while.

Alcazar Claims Tom Mix Record

Chicago Theatre Marks Up $600 Average Daily for "Treat 'Em Rough"—House Seats Only Three Hundred

WHAT is the record week's business for a 300-seat picture house?

Manager Harry Miller of the Alcazar and other Chicago theatres thinks the record is held by the Alcazar with an average of $600 a day for seven days.

"Tom Mix in 'Treat 'Em Rough,'" he says, "was positively the biggest clean-up in the history of the Alcazar. In one week's run to capacity at 25 cents with 297 seats, this picture averaged over $600 a day, which I consider a record for any 300-seat house."

There is another theatre—the Star—across the street from the Alcazar. "If this theatre had been owned by a competitor," says a statement from the William Fox offices, "it probably would have been impossible to book 'Treat 'Em Rough' there. The owner would have argued that he could not afford to 'follow' the Alcazar because the latter house, by an exceptional week's business, had exhausted the possibilities of the picture. But Mr. Miller manages both houses and his opinion was different.

"The picture is a knockout," he says, "and I booked it for a second week at the Star. All they did over there was to tear up the brass rail in the lobby trying to get in. Thanks to the Fox Film Corporation for letting me in on the ground floor."

"This telegram," said Acting Manager Herman Robbins of the Fox Film Corporation, "is typical of what Tom Mix features are doing right across the country. Tom Mix has been a star for a comparatively short time, yet I will venture to say that his box office draw is among the biggest of any featured player now before the public.

"He is having week-runs in such theatres as the Olympia in Boston, the Olympia in Pittsburgh, the Orpheum in Cleveland, the Colonial in Toledo, the Rose theatre in Chicago, the Rialto in San Francisco, the Kinema in Los Angeles, the Pickwick in San Diego. I recall these at the moment, and there are dozens of others. Three and four days' runs are given regularly in some one hundred of the best first-run houses in the country. I might mention Proctor's theatres in Mt. Vernon and at 125th street in Manhattan, the Savoy in Fall River, the Strand in Buffalo, the Albany in Schenectady, the Rialto in Indianapolis, the Rialto in Des Moines, the Alhambra in Cincinnati, the Pastime in Columbus, the Crown in Houston, Texas; the Loew's Grand in Atlanta, Ga.—in fact, to name them all is like listing a directory of the country's best picture houses."

General Claims Beat in News Reel

Another important news film is announced from General Film Company in the ARC Review Special Release, "Doughboys and the Bolsheviki at Archangel," which was first shown in New York as the topical feature of the Rialto theatre program.

These exclusive action pictures arrived in this country under American Red Cross auspices, and were photographed with the Allied forces in the Archangel region of Russia by American Red Cross cameramen. No other films from this interesting campaign have ever reached the outside world. The single reel, which is devoted to the American participation in the fighting, has arrived in the midst of intense public attention to the events transpiring on Russia's northern frontier on the White Sea, the New York papers publishing full-page rotogravure spreads from still pictures obtained through the Red Cross. These pictures will be syndicated all over the country.

Rosson Buys "Cannibals" for England

H. Rosson of the Ideal Film Renting Company, London, England, has purchased the United Kingdom rights to Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" for a sum said to be greater than ever was paid for an American production, according to an announcement from the foreign department of Robertson-Cole Company, who control the world's rights to this feature. The territory included in the transaction is England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, The Channel Isles and the Isle of Man.

Mr. Rosson, who is now in New York, considers the purchase of the Cannibals the biggest deal he has ever promoted. He has been dickering for the films for some time, appreciating their value in Great Britain immediately upon seeing them shown for the first time. In a sense, "Cannibals of the South Seas" is a British picture, for Martin Johnson took most of the scenes from British colonial possessions.

Circle Theatre Books "Common Clay"

The Circle Theatre of Indianapolis has booked the Pathe special feature "Common Clay" for a week. Sales Manager Quimby of Pathe put the deal over in a personal visit, on his way to Chicago.

The booking is illustrative of the splendid advance bookings which Pathe is securing on the picture.

'The Red Glove' Promises Spirited Action

SOME of the most spirited and most unusual action ever seen in a Universal serial is said to be brought out in the first four episodes of "The Red Glove," featuring Marie Walcamp.

Episode No. 1 entitled "The Pool of Lost Souls" introduces the characters and picks up speed early in the first reel. The initial chapter explains why Kern Thode and Starr Wiley, representatives of rival oil companies, seek to discover a rich oil field known to no one save a Mexican woman possessing psychic power and a map showing the exact location of the oil pool. The film relates a story of how Wiley realizes that if he fails to locate the lost pool before Thode does will cause his firm financial ruin. In desperate straits, Wiley, vainly trying to find the map of the oil district, resorts to no end of trickery to keep Thode from his prize. He secures an outlaw band, known as vultures because of their peculiar head-dress, to aid him in trying to find the valuable pool and in preventing Thode from making progress and succeeds in destroying equipment being sent to Thode by his company.

"Claws of the Vulture" is the tentative title of Episode No. 2. The third episode is called "Vultures' Vengeance."

Exhibitors to Decide Type of Pictures

New Department Established by Producing Head of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation Makes Exhibitor Deciding Factor—System Now in Operation and in Charge of George N. Shorey

THE exhibitor has come to be the deciding factor in the production policy of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President of that company, in charge of production.

For some time past a new department, conducted by George N. Shorey under Mr. Lasky's supervision, has been in operation, and although no details of the work were made public, the new system has been gradually perfected until each producer of Paramount and Arcraft pictures receives a daily report of what the public taste is throughout the country.

Each exhibitor is asked to throw light on the reason for better or worse box-office results on every picture.

Now in Operation

This system is now in full operation, and Mr. Lasky in an interview last week pointed out the importance of the exhibitor's co-operation in this connection. "I want to say that the exhibitor of Paramount and Arcraft pictures will in the future be the final arbiter as to the type of pictures that shall be produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. We are now utilizing the exhibitor's knowledge and his audiences' wants to an extent never before approached in connection with the production of motion pictures," said Mr. Lasky.

"We have organized a new department which aims to keep the producing forces of our corporation thoroughly familiar with the estimate which the public, speaking to us through our exhibitors, places upon our various offerings. This is a very serious, carefully considered attempt to establish real contact between producer and theatre manager, and to answer the complaints that are frequently made that the producer does not appreciate exhibiting conditions or assist in overcoming exhibiting difficulties. As the head of this department we have installed George N. Shorey, for many years a successful exhibitor himself, because we felt that only an exhibitor could keep us in closest touch with the exhibitor's point of view.

"This policy which we quietly put into operation nearly a year ago now intimately links all the thinking exhibitors in the country with our production plans. There have been attempts at this type of co-operation before, but none of them have been eminently successful, due in a great measure to the fact that, in the past, criticisms and suggestions from exhibitors have, in most instances, failed to reach the people most concerned, the producers and directors, while our new plans especially provide for just this thing.

The Exhibitor Knows

"The producer who assumes that the exhibitor does not know what he is talking about is overlooking an important source of inspiration. We know positively that the exhibitor does know what he is talking about, and we mean to be ever ready to turn that knowledge into advantage for ourselves.

Marguerite Clark, in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," Paramount film

"A special confidential bulletin issued daily by Mr. Shorey's department is studied closely by the executives of this company, directors and studio managers in both New York and Los Angeles.

"We know not only whom to credit for a success, but if a weakness exists in any production we trace it back to the person in our organization responsible for that weakness. We do not expect to make all hundred per cent. productions, but if any exhibitor discovers any serious fault in one of our pictures he cannot hold us responsible unless he personally notifies us. The exhibitor who takes for granted that we see even the plainest faults is failing in his duty to himself and his patrons as well as to us.

"We judge of the seriousness of a fault by the number of times it is called to our attention, yet we do not overlook a single detail, even once called to our notice by a Paramount or Arcraft exhibitor. We have so far found almost no disagreement whatever on what is good entertainment and what is suitable for our theatres. It is to be borne in mind that the Paramount and Arcraft family represents the discriminating masses, not the cheapest class of patronage, and we have found the great American theatregoing public virtually the same whether in Maine or California.

To Please the Public

"It is important that our directors and scenario staff be kept constantly reminded of even the simplest fundamental principles of how to please this great American public. I am personally very much interested and myself note every single suggestion that comes through this office from Mr. Shorey. Not a day passes but we get some new light on what will please the theatre public. The man who says the exhibitor suits his personal taste as against the will of his patrons gives the exhibitor no credit for business good sense or judgment. We have found Paramount and Arcraft exhibitors thoroughly wide-awake to their patrons' wants. That the busy exhibitor should take time to write us letters many pages long, in some cases, and always full of meat, is cause for congratulation. We have received enthusiastic support from men whose success speaks for itself. It is in fact this type of exhibitor who has been most prompt in making himself a very important factor in helping us determine from day to day how we can best meet the unceasing demand for better pictures. We have just begun to cultivate this new field of inspiration, we believe.

"It is now squarely up to the exhibitor at all times to determine, in future, what shall be the policy of our company regarding productions. Some exhibitors may claim that they are too busy to keep in touch with Mr. Shorey, but it is these exhibitors we most need to consult. We have devised a convenient system of very brief but complete report forms, and we feel it is the duty of every manager to register his frank opinion of every one of our pictures and give us freely his suggestions for possible improvement of our pictures in any detail. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has at its command the greatest artists connected with the motion picture industry. Each one is eager to give the public the kind of entertainment that it will most enjoy. We ask the exhibitor to help us utilize to the fullest extent all our resources for the entertainment of his audiences, to our mutual profit and success."

Wm. Desmond Appears in Comedy Dramas

William Desmond, Jesse D. Hampton's popular star, whose productions are released through the Exhibitors Mutual exchanges, will devote all his talent in the future to producing comedy drama. Stories with a tinge of the romantic or with a Western flavor are favored by Desmond, who thus far has contributed "Life's a Funny Proposition" to the big list of Exhibitors Mutual successes.

For his next offering, Desmond has selected "The Prodigal Liar," an original story of the rollicking West from the pen of the popular George Elwood Jenks.

Selznick Avoids a Stock Phrase

Thinks "All Star Cast" Has Become So Hackneyed It Means Nothing
—Olive Thomas Starred in First Picture

LET'S not announce this as an all-star cast," Myron Selznick, president of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, said in a night letter to the New York office of the company, in which was given the names of the players who will support Miss Olive Thomas in the production, "Upstairs and Down." "We are much more entitled to this description than many of those who use it, but it has become so hackneyed that it means nothing. The players in this cast are well enough known so that their names stand for real talent without being called an all-star aggregation."

The principle role in "Upstairs and Down," played by Olive Thomas, is that of Alice Chesterton, a flirtatious young woman, who is always looking for adventure, and who finally finds all she is looking for in the person of Captain Terrence O'Keefe, a young Irish officer, who is in America buying horses for the British Army. This role is played by Robert Ellis, who played it in the original stage production. He has also been seen as leading man in several recent photoplays.

The part of Betty Chesterton, Alice's sister, is played by Rosemary Theby, who has appeared in principal roles under the direction of D. W. Griffith and other leading producers.

Mary Charleson, one of the most popular screen's leading women, will be seen as a vivacious French maid, who takes a prominent part in the escapades of Alice and Terrence. She is the wife of Henry B. Walthall and has been his leading woman in many productions.

Andrew Robeson, well known for his character work in Arcraft and Paramount productions, will be seen as Sprang, a butler, who is very much concerned over the affairs of "Upstairs."

David Butler, who plays the part of Alice's boob sweetheart, had the same role in the stage production and recently appeared in Griffith's photodrama, "The Greatest Thing in Life."

Other members of the cast are Bertram Grassby, who has just been playing under the direction of D. W. Griffith, Kathleen Kirkham, who has been in several of Douglas Fairbanks' recent offerings, Donald MacDonald, Mildred Reardon, Harold Miller, Miss Travers and Ernest Pasque.

This cast was organized by Director Charles Giblyn in Los Angeles.

H. H. Hicks of Cincinnati Visits Home Office

Select's Cincinnati manager, Harry H. Hicks, recently promoted from the Seattle offices, paid a visit to the home office in New York February 3, in order to consult with President Lewis J. Selznick and General Manager Arthur S. Kane regarding the greatly increased business which is said to be in sight in Cincinnati.

Mr. Hicks expressed his faith in a new era of prosperity for the Middle Western exhibitor, the threshold of which has already been crossed.

Monat Buys Rapf's Productions for France

Joseph Monat, prominent buyer of foreign rights, closed a deal last week with Harry Rapf for the rights to the latter's productions for France. Among Mr. Rapf's productions included in the deal are "The Accidental Honeymoon," starring Robert Warwick, and "The Sins of the Children," adapted from a story by Cosmo Hamilton.

Chester Edits Scenarios for Vitagraph

George Randolph Chester has become editor-in-chief of Vitagraph's scenario department, says an announcement from Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph's chief. Mr. Chester will immediately assume his new duties, with headquarters in Vitagraph's big Brooklyn studio.

The appointment of Mr. Chester marks the most important acquisition of the year of its kind to the credit of a photoplay institution. It places at the head of Vitagraph's editorial corps a man who ranks among the half dozen most felicitous writers of the day, either for stage or the popular magazines. The fertile imagination that devised the breezy and buoyant situations that made the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories a distinctive contribution to literature and created in the hero of those tales the most refreshing character, in either a fiction or an histrionic guise, that has ever flattened furrows out of foreheads and caused kindly crowsfeet to crinkle the cuticle about tired eyes, is now to be exerted in a similar cause via the newer agency of administering amusement to the masses.

Milwaukee's Burlesque House Books Serial

The Mid-West Distributing Company, handling B. A. Rolfe's serial production, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, in the territory of Wisconsin, report that it has booked the serial at the Empire theatre, Milwaukee. The Empire is a burlesque house and it is said that this is the first time that a burlesque house has booked a serial.

Another Year Celebrated by Leslie

Arthur Leslie, sometimes referred to as "the man who got the motion picture its first newspaper recognition," will celebrate the seventh anniversary of that event February 10. Previous to that date in 1912 newspaper files show no space was devoted to pictures. Leslie established the first motion picture syndicate page department in over fifty papers.

Seitz Begins New Pearl White Serial

Work has started on the new Robert W. Chambers' serial, "In Secret," in which Pearl White will be starred. Director George B. Seitz spent most of the week in making location scenes for the earlier episodes, and on Thursday took his company to the Barbour Castle, near Paterson, which will figure as a European stronghold in the serial.

All of the night scenes in this serial will be actually taken at night, as a complete electric equipment had to be installed at the Barbour Estate for the night exteriors. Mr. Barbour, the wealthy silk manufacturer who owns the castle, almost ended the serial making on his grounds Thursday when he found that the hated German flag must fly over his home for film purposes. This he objected to strenuously, and Assistant Director William Burt finally won the manufacturer over by agreeing to have a special flag made of white and blue bars.

Drews in Chicago Use Essanay Studios

To produce their two-reel comedies for Paramount while fulfilling a long stage engagement at Chicago, where they are playing "Keep Her Smiling," Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have engaged the Essanay Studios.

In line with Mrs. Drew's original conception of things, she is determined that local color shall always prevail, and that when in Chicago the locale of the photoplay upon which she is then engaged shall be laid in that city, and the same applies to every other city which she might visit while on tour with "Keep Her Smiling."

Ashley Miller Picture

In placing credit where credit is due, V. W. Hodkinson, Inc., draws attention to its publicity matter to Ashley Miller as producer of "Made in America." It is with this production that Mr. Miller enters the ranks of producers.

The picture is distributed by W. W. Hodkinson through Pathe exchanges.

Names Add Luster to Production

"THE WOMAN ON THE INDEX" released by Goldwyn, February 23, is the first Pauline Frederick vehicle for that company, and Goldwyn officials are calling attention to the names of distinction which are said to mark every stage of the production.

In the first place the play itself is considered something to arrest the public. It is a Broadway success of the current season and reported to have caused a sensation when it was produced, evoking from the most cautious critics the highest praise for its extraordinary plot.

The author is one of the foremost American playwrights whose name has been identified with popular successes for a generation. He is George Broadhurst, and the beautiful Broadhurst theatre in New York bears his name.

Pauline Frederick, famous for her achievements as an emotional actress on the stage and screen, is the star of "The Woman on the Index." Her distinction as a beautiful woman is considered no less than her fame as an actress.

Willard Mack prepared the drama for the cinema, which Goldwyn states is in itself a guarantee that the play has lost not one whit of its force and fire, for Mr. Mack also has a Broadway sensation to his credit this season, as he has had for many years past—"The Big Chance."

Hobart Henley directed the play. Responsible for a number of Goldwyn successes in the past year, including Rex Beach's "Laughing Bill Hyde," with Will Rogers, as well as Mae Marsh's stellar appearances, he brought to "The Woman on the Index" his full complement of directorial subtleties.

And the names in the cast are declared to be fairly scintillate. Not only are there Pauline Frederick and Willard Mack, but Wyndham Standing, most popular of leading men, who appeared with Mae Marsh in "The Glorious Adventure," and has supported practically every other feminine star on the screen.

Jere Austin and Tammany Young, already well known in Goldwyn Pictures, were chosen for the high honor of opening Pauline Frederick's series of Goldwyn productions. Florida Kingsley, too, adds her name to the galaxy, with Ben Hendricks and a number of others, not forgetting the cinematographic attainments of Edward Gheiler, who, Miss Frederick says must ever be her own cameraman.

This completes the array of names highly regarded by the public, says Goldwyn. In every department of production, technical experts contributed their best to make "The Woman on the Index" a memorable production.

Fox Star Returns from Florida

After two weeks spent at Miami, Fla., George Walsh, Fox star, returned to New York this week. Mr. Walsh, under the direction of Edward Dillon, has been taking scenes for his late Fox picture, "Never Say Quit." One of the scenes taken here shows the star in an hydroaeroplane. About twenty members of Mr. Walsh's supporting cast accompanied him.

"Wide Field Opened by Merger"—Berst

WITH the consummation of the United-Peerless-World amalgamation, announced last week by J. A. Berst, president of United Pictures Theatres, Inc., and the broad field opened by the merger, President Berst expresses the last word in optimism in the following statement issued anent the resultant outlook:

"With the existing arrangements for production at the Brunton studios, Los Angeles, and its newly announced agreement whereby operations in the East are being established at the Peerless studios at Fort Lee, N. J., United product will shortly be largely augmented and the ultimate aim of fifty-two releases per annum for United comes within easily measurable distance. This, together with the combination of United's sales organization with the distributing organization of World, forming a great business force for the marketing of films, has already exercised a marked effect upon exhibitor opinion as indicated by large increase in United membership. More than thirteen hundred theatres throughout the United States are already associated with United.

"Mr. Ricord Gradwell, representing important banking interests and president of the World Film Company, is an important factor in the extension of the effect of the United-World-Peerless agreement upon exhibitors. In predicting great things for the new combination Mr. Gradwell affirms that the United distribution with its system of fixed price gives wide and certain vogue to its film product beyond that of any other organization in the industry."

"Simultaneously with the effect of the new combination exhibitors are reported to be impressed by the success achieved by United in its first release. Numerous expressions of gratification at the box office records and popular endorsement of "The Light of Western Stars" with Dustin Farnum have followed the earlier telegram and letters reported as received at United headquarters."

Lubin Chooses a Title for Lincoln's Film

THE speculative curiosity which has been rife in motion picture circles during the past few weeks relative to the title of the initial "Ralph Ince Film Attraction," starring E. K. Lincoln, is to be satisfied next week, according to Herbert Lubin.

"The title of the inaugural S-L picture which will present E. K. Lincoln as star under the personal direction of Ralph Ince has been finally selected. Following the method adopted at the formation of S-L pictures in deciding all matters of importance pertaining to productions by a majority vote, the title, before being selected, was put to a similar test. We carefully considered a list of over a hundred titles which was suggested in conference at various times as being appropriate for the first S-L production. It was desired to secure a title which for interest-compelling power and real "punch" would stand out in newspapers, on posters and all other forms of advertising. In announcing next week the title of the first "Ralph Ince Film Attraction" a veritable sensation to the picture industry and exhibitor alike is promised.

The title consists of two words, but in point of strength and interest will create a lasting impression. It is believed the title will create country-wide debate among motion picture exhibitors of all classes, and arouse the greatest curiosity on the part of the public from coast to coast in this country.

Following the announcement of the title of the first S-L vehicle starring Lincoln, the important details of the story will be divulged.

Tom Forman Returns to Famous Players

Lieut. Tom Forman, well-known actor in many Paramount pictures prior to the war, has been re-engaged by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under a two-year contract to play juvenile leads, etc., in forthcoming productions at the Lasky studio.

Mr. Forman is probably one of the most popular younger actors of the screen and his entrance into military life was regarded as a distinct loss to the films. His many admirers will be glad to know that he is once more to appear. His contract takes effect immediately upon his release from the army, which, it is supposed, will be in the near future.

Half Sheet Snipes to Help "Sis Hopkins"

Goldwyn has printed half-sheet snipes to advertise the Mabel Normand feature, "Sis Hopkins," which was released February 16.

"Paw sez: 'Never do nothin' for nobody that don't do nothin' for you.'"—Sis Hopkins.

Half-sheet snipes bearing those immortal words greeted several million New Yorkers from ten thousand "L" pillars, fences, barrels and other coigns of vantage. Those who stopped to peruse them in detail, as thousands did, discovered that they were part of Goldwyn's exploitation campaign for Mabel Normand's newest picture, made from the Rose Melville stage success.

Long Lane's Turning" Is Completed

Henry B. Walthall's latest production, "The Long Lane's Turning," has been completed according to word received from California.

The National Film Corporation produced from the novel by Hallie Erminie Rives, author of "Satan Sanderson," "Hearts Courageous" and "Valiants of Virginia."

Exhibitors Mutual Distributing exchanges will handle the production, and it is claimed to be Mr. Walthall's most successful screen productions. Louis Chauvin directed "The Long Lane's Turning," and the cast reunites Mr. Walthall with many of his cast in the "Birth of a Nation."

William De Vaul and Ralph Lewis appear with the star and are said to have important parts in the new production.

Universal Names More Press Men

Markington Baker, general director of publicity for Universal, has announced the appointment of W. H. Bennett, Jr., as publicity manager of the Salt Lake City exchange, and H. W. Ferguson as publicity manager for the Oklahoma City office. Mr. Bennett is well known in newspaper circles in Utah, having for sometime been connected with the Desert News, a weekly publication widely circulated throughout the territory.

Mr. Ferguson is equally well known to newspapermen and exhibitors in Oklahoma, having previously been publicity man for several theatres and also connected with newspapers of the South.

Small Town Bookings Welcomed

Division of Films Making Drive in Rural Districts for Intensive Exploitation of "Under Four Flags"

EXHIBITORS in the smaller towns are urged by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information to book "Under Four Flags," the Government Victory picture distributed by World Film exchanges.

They state that it is now a part of motion picture history that this wonderful picture created a new record in the industry by its distinctive feat in its presentation in New York City. The people of the nation's largest city displayed a keen desire for this war fact picture, a wish to see how the war was won.

The Division of Films believes that the people of the smaller cities and thousands of towns, both the motion picture fans and those who are not, are as keenly interested in the facts of the war as are the people of the larger cities.

They declare that the only difference is that the people of the cities have had many opportunities to see pictures of the war and may be more or less surfeited with them, or else have gained from them a rather complete knowledge of America's participation in the conflict, while the people of the towns have seen but few of the pictures and therefore have a more keen desire for them.

There is said to be no question but that the Government pictures of the great war have a nation-wide interest and the thousands who have not yet been permitted to see them are only awaiting that chance.

Because of its box-office value, "Under Four Flags" is claimed to give the exhibitors of the smaller cities and towns an opportunity to help both their house and bank account and at the same time to give their patrons what they want.

The Government rental is said to be fixed on a basis that allows the exhibitor a large margin of profit, and is so arranged that he can play the picture at his regular admission prices and gather his profits.

This feature has been recognized by exhibitors throughout the country, and the Division of Films states that bookings from the smaller cities and towns are coming in at a rapid rate.

Fox Sells Some "Salome" Foreign Rights

A FOREIGN deal has been closed by the Fox Film Corporation with the firm of Gaytis & Mosco, whose main office is in Athens and whose American headquarters are at 1482 Broadway, New York.

Constantine Patsios, American representative of this company, has purchased, the Fox office reports, the exhibiting rights of "Salome," the Theda Bara super-production, for Greece, Italy, Spain, Portugal, France, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland and the Balkan States—including Roumania, Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro and Albania—as well as for Turkey and Egypt.

This is said to be one of the most far-reaching deals ever made for a single feature and, following close on the announcement last week of the contract with O. J. Monart of Paris, further cements the hold of the Fox organization as a leader.

Speaking of this deal regarding "Salome," Mr. Patsios said: "The business of the cinema exhibitor in Europe is taking an immense stride with the close of the war. In the Balkan states, in Greece and in Italy many theatres were obliged to close entirely during hostilities, because they could not obtain fuel or electricity—all available supplies being held by the governments for the manufacture of munitions."

Gaytis & Mosco have offices in Rome, Paris, Barcelona, Alexandria, Cairo and Bucharest, from which headquarters the "Salome" campaign will be directed.

"Made in America" Shows Army in Training

IN speaking of "Made in America," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation this week said:

"Figure it for yourself. More than three million young Americans went through the experiences so vividly shown in 'Made in America.'

"There are few of these millions who will not be keenly interested in an authoritative pictorialization of the greatest of America's achievements—the making of our victorious armies.

"Besides these millions are the other millions of the home folks, who have heard much of America's wonderful training system; enough to sharpen their appetites for the first screen production dealing with the subject in its entirety and with the basic idea of giving to the American people an adequate and satisfying picture story of the training of the American soldier.

"These millions are to be found in every city, town and hamlet in all sections of the country. All that is necessary to bring these millions to the theatre to see "Made in America" is to let them know the truth about it—what it really is.

"There are patriotic organizations in every community to whose members 'Made in America' will have a strong appeal. It bears the official endorsement of some of the strongest organizations in the country. They will urge their local branches to give 'Made in America' cordial support.

"Every person who is a believer in the advantages of military training will find in 'Made in America' the best of arguments in its favor, although there is no propaganda of any kind in it.

"The work of the Y. M. C. A., the K. of C., the Y. W. C. A., the Y. M. H. A. and kindred organizations is featured in 'Made in America.' These live organizations are found in almost every community and for each and all of them 'Made in America' will have a peculiar interest."

"Woman Thou Gavest Me" Gets Star Cast

WHAT is believed to be one of the most powerful casts assembled in many months for a motion picture has been selected to appear in the Paramount-Artcraft special adaptation of Hall Caine's novel, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," to make which Hugh Ford, Eastern supervisor of productions for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has journeyed to California, to work at the Lasky studio.

The readers of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" will recall that the characters are strongly defined and that to satisfactorily represent the principal figures in the story exact types had to be found who were in addition finished artists.

The plot revolves about the woman, Mary; her husband, Lord Raa, and the young explorer, Conrad.

For the part of Mary, Katherine MacDonald was engaged. Miss MacDonald will be remembered for her interpretation of Lady Diana in "The Squaw Man," a Cecil B. DeMille picture, and for numerous other renditions in previous Artcraft or Paramount pictures.

William Marshall is cameraman and Joseph Boyle assistant director to Mr. Ford. The play covers a wide radius and many important sets will be required as well as locations of the most exotic sort.

Work began January 22 on the production, which from all indications will be a superior one in every respect.

Color Posters Provided

The eight-reel motion picture series, "Made in America," which shows the making of the American soldier, is said to be provided with very handsome lithography for exploitation purposes.

"Silent Strength" Draws Much Interest

Exhibitors are said to be taking a lively interest in the early release of "Silent Strength," a new Vitagraph picture featuring Harry T. Morey. An entire upsetting of the laws of double-exposure, aside of the dramatic importance of the play, is responsible for inquiries that exceed in number and in the curiosity shown any similar batch of letters received at the home office Vitagraph in a considerable length of time.

"Silent Strength" is set for release on February 17. It was directed by Paul Scardon, and in support of Harry T. Morey are seen Betty Blythe, Robert Gailard, Bernard Siegal, Herbert Pattee, James Costello and others. Its plot deals with the mistaken marriage of a woman to a man who is the prototype of the one she loves.

Universal Promotes Barney Rosenthal

Barney Rosenthal, veteran St. Louis exchange manager, has been appointed district manager for the South-Central section by Universal, according to an announcement by J. I. Schnitzer, general sales manager.

Mr. Rosenthal has been St. Louis exchange manager for Universal for about five years and is one of the best known film men in the Central section. The offices to be under Mr. Rosenthal's supervision in the future are St. Louis, Indianapolis, Kansas City and Oklahoma City. Mr. Rosenthal will continue to make St. Louis his headquarters.

Lincoln Gets Chance in New Picture

In the star role of the forthcoming "Ralph Ince Film Attraction," E. K. Lincoln has been afforded an opportunity to do the most excellent acting of his long picture career. The stellar part of the initial feature which inaugurates a series of S-L Pictures in which Lincoln will appear as the leading figure, offers him a chance to typify the American man, filled with the joy of living and the knack of doing things. The production, a finely mounted society melodrama teaming with excitement and action, contains innumerable fast-moving and dramatic situations.

Blackton Finishes New Production

Commodore Blackton is now completing the film version, titled "A House Divided." It was adapted by Anthony Paul Kelly. Plans for the release of this new superfeature have not yet been announced. The cast selected to interpret its principal characters includes the Blackton stars, Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer, Lieutenant Lawrence Grossmith, little Charles and Violet Blackton, William Humphrey, Eric Mayne, Sallie Crute and Marie Burke. Jack Martin assisted Commodore Blackton on the production.

"Honeymoon for Three" Is Completed

Marguerite Clark, who will be seen in one of the best characterizations of her career when the Paramount version of Alice Hegan Rice's "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is released February 9, has completed her newest Paramount production, which was filmed by Director John S. Robertson under the title "A Honeymoon for Three." Miss Clark will not be called upon to work before the camera again for four or five weeks and has seized the opportunity for a runaway vacation with her husband, Lieut. Harry P. Williams.

The new play is a farce and is said to abound in amusing situations.

MacGregor Directs Lewis for Select

During the filming of Mitchell Lewis' forthcoming Select picture, "Children of Banishment," which was completed on location in the Yosemite National Park Reserve last week, the big Select Pictures star had the services of Norval MacGregor as director.

Like Mitchell Lewis, Norval MacGregor, who is a "canny Scot," has spent a great deal of his life in the North woods and is thoroughly familiar with the life and customs of backwoodsmen.

"The Heart of Humanity" at Denver Rivoli

Manager Edward Armstrong of the Universal exchange at Denver, Colo., booked "The Heart of Humanity" to the New Rivoli theatre, Denver, for first run west of the Mississippi.

The big Jewel production was shown at the theatre for the week beginning February 2, and was one of the first week runs of a film feature staged in Denver in some time as four-day runs of big features are the rule in the Colorado capital.

Goldwyn Offers Three Winners

"Sis Hopkins," Starring Mabel Normand, Comes to Screen February 16—Frederick and Laurell Films Follow

OCCASIONALLY the gods smile on a picture producing organization and permit it to release an unbroken chain of productions foreordained to success. Such an event now comes in the career of Goldwyn, which is releasing, as the forerunner of its spring season Mabel Normand in "Sis Hopkins," Pauline Frederick in "The Woman on the Index," and Rex Beach's "The Brand," with Kay Laurell and Russell Simpson.

"Sis Hopkins," which is released February 16, is considered the peak screen achievement of Mabel Normand. This production was directed by Clarence G. Badger and supporting Miss Normand are Thomas Jefferson as "Paw" Hopkins; John Bowers, as Ridy Scarboro, her sweetheart; Sam De Grasse, as Vibert; Eugene Ford, as Miss Peckover, and others.

Pauline Frederick's first Goldwyn picture, "The Woman on the Index," is an acquisition from the legitimate theatre. The play is the joint work of two successful dramatists, Lillian Trimble Bradley and George Broadhurst, and it had a successful run at the opening of last year's theatrical season at the Forty-eighth Street theatre, New York, besides runs in other cities.

Rex Beach's "The Brand" is a big action drama of the Yukon, directed by Reginald Barker. It is issued in seven reels because when completed the Goldwyn editorial department and Mr. Beach could not find a spot anywhere in which the length could be shortened. Telegraphing from Los Angeles, Mr. Beach says to Goldwyn: "Knowing how careful I am in making comparisons between my pictures, you will be glad to hear that I think 'The Brand' is bigger than 'The Barrier' or any of my other pictures. I rank it right alongside 'The Spoilers.'"

These three productions are but the forerunners of the strongest sequence of big Goldwyn productions that the organization has had since its formation two years ago. They possess all of the technical style and beauty that has been associated with Goldwyn as well as the power of brilliant authorship and successful direction.

Metro Schedules Viola Dana in a Romance

VIOLA DANA has started work at the new Metro studios in Hollywood in a screen romance of Parisian life, entitled "Jeanne of the Gutter." This five-part production, in Metro's all-star series, is an original story from the pen of June Mathis, scenarioized by Finis Fox. It follows "Diana Ardway" and "The Gold Cure," although the theme is widely removed from either.

Herbert Blache, who directed Miss Dana in "Diana Ardway," is again directing the star in "Jeanne of the Gutter," under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director-general.

The titular role is that of a frail outcast of the underworld of Paris. Jeanne of the gutter is also Jeanne of the Bohemian resorts, the prey of an unscrupulous Apache, who battens on the money she earns by dancing in the cafes of gay Páree.

Director-General Karger has assembled a noteworthy cast to support Miss Dana in her new production. Playing opposite the star is "Bob" Walker; a strong, "heavy" role is in the hands of Henry Kolker, who played the Kaiser in the Screen Classics, Inc., production, "The Great Victory, Wilson or the Kaiser, The Fall of the Hohenzollerns"; Louise D'Arcy will do the Apache; and others in the supporting cast are Edward Connelly, Leo Perason and Paul Weigel.

"Iron Test" Rides Wave of Popularity

VITAGRAPH'S newest serial, "The Iron Test," in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are featured, rides merrily along on a wave of popularity that is keeping the company's exchanges busy, despite the fact that first runs on this chapter-play are nearing the final episode. Crowded houses have followed "The Iron Test" throughout the country and the less fortunate exhibitors who have "waited to see" are contenting themselves as best they can with re-runs in the wake of the first houses' enormous business. From the records in the Vitagraph office, it seems, however, that the life of a serial is as long as the life of the celluloid on which it is printed, and first runs, and even second and third, by no means monopolize the possibilities of profits.

A case in point developed at the Wyckoff theatre in Brooklyn. The management recently wrote Vitagraph's New York Exchange as follows:

"You undoubtedly remember that I decided to play your serial, 'The Iron Test,' after three other theatres, all within four blocks.

"I used an 'Acid Test.'

"By playing 'The Iron Test' on my poorest day, I increased business 35 per cent.

"Not bad, but all your serials proved winners in our four theatres and I am now reserving dates for your next."

Vitagraph places "The Iron Test" first in point of business done in all of its serials so far released and exchanges are reporting more bookings daily.

Select Plans Ad Campaign for Davies Film

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces that it has arranged an extensive newspaper advertising campaign to back up the serial publication of Marion Davies' forthcoming Select picture, "The Belle of New York," which, as reported last week, will be published serially in thirteen newspapers in the leading cities of America, beginning on February 9, in the Philadelphia North American, and on the following day in the New York Journal. On succeeding dates the story will begin in eleven other publications, namely: Pittsburgh Press, Atlanta Georgian, Cleveland News, Chicago American, Minneapolis News, Boston American, Des Moines Register and Tribune, San Francisco Examiner, Kansas City Post, Los Angeles Examiner and the Omaha News.

To back up this big display of story matter each of the above-named newspaper will carry, in different issues, advertising totaling three thousand lines for each paper, with the exception of the Philadelphia North American, which will carry four thousand lines to be distributed over the period during which "The Belle of

New York" is playing at Pittsburgh and vicinity theatres. This amount of space will be divided into quarter-page displays.

Altogether the thirteen newspapers included in Select's extensive advertising campaign have a total circulation estimated at more than three million, averaging in reading circulation more than twelve million.

Jack O'Brien Completing New Pearson Picture

Jack O'Brien, managing director, Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., announces that Miss Pearson's first independent production, "The Bishop's Emeralds," will be completed in about two weeks and furnishes the star with every opportunity to surpass anything she has done before.

"The Bishop's Emeralds" is a screen version of Houghton Townley's novel of the same title. Louis Meyer, president of Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., purchased all rights to Mr. Townley's novel, which has had a big sale on London bookstands.

Griffith Production Gets Big Run at Clune's

Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life" proved a tremendous box office hit at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles, according to the following message Famous Players-Lasky:

"The popularity of D. W. Griffith's A-craft production, 'The Greatest Thing in Life,' is so enormous that we have been forced to continue for the fourth week at the Auditorium. Our turnout has been so great we had to double our regular program by giving two shows both New Year's Eve and New Year's night. This with the competition of many invited counter-attractions."

Two Rupert Julian Films on February 10

"Creaking Stairs," starring Mary MacLaren and "The Millionaire Pirate," featuring Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford, both Rupert Julian pictures, were the Universal release schedule for February 10.

Evelyn Campbell is the author of the MacLaren vehicle, and the Salisbury film has been adapted from the Hungarian story by Emil Nitray. "Creaking Stairs" is the first MacLaren release in over three months, while "The Millionaire Pirate" brings the Salisbury-Clifford combination back to the screen after an absence of eight months.

Marcia Manon Appears with Barrymore

Marcia Manon, one of the most popular of the Famous Players-Lasky actresses, has traveled all the way from the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal., to New York to play the leading feminine role in John Barrymore's next Paramount picture, "The Malefactor."

In Cecil B. De Mille's "Old Wives New" Miss Manon had a splendid opportunity to display her artistic taste in clothes and jewelry. Her toilettes were copied by modistes and fashion publicists and many pages of adjectives have been printed in praise of her originality.

Holubar Film Scores in Cleveland

Universal announced this week that few pictures have been so enthusiastically received in Cleveland as "The Heart of Humanity," Allen Holubar's super-drama, according to Manager Kuhn of the Stillman theatre, where the Jewel production began a showing January 26.

The film opened to such a big business on January 26 that Manager Kuhn decided to stage three showings each evening instead of two as originally planned, and during the first week the theatre was filled to overflowing at each performance. During the second day of the showing an aviator from the Glenn L. Martin aeroplane plant flew over Cleveland, taking a panorama of the city and releasing several thousand leaflets calling attention to the showing.

At Toledo, Ohio, where the film was shown at the Alhambra theatre beginning January 26, overflow business was the rule. At Baltimore, where the film was shown at Loew's Hippodrome, the S. R. O. was put up during the first showing and not taken down.

H. B. Warner at the Hampton Studios

Instead of the Brunton studios as previously announced, H. B. Warner, under his recent contract with Jesse D. Hampton, will produce at the Hampton studios at Los Angeles.

Mr. Hampton produces all his pictures in his own studios, where he filmed Grace Darmond and an all star cast in the six-reel special "What Every Woman Wants," which, like the Warner plays, will be released by the Exhibitors Mutual.

William Desmond, another Hampton star, works under Mr. Hampton in the Los Angeles studio.

In a wire from California, Mr. Hampton informs the local offices of Exhibitors Mutual that great preparations are being made to receive Mr. Warner, who will leave New York very shortly for the West Coast.

World Reports Demand for "Better 'Ole"

Exhibitors all over the country are said to be sending in a constant stream of inquiries to World Pictures regarding "The Better 'Ole"—the screen version of the play which is now running at the Cort theatre, New York City. It is evident that the exhibitors everywhere realize that in this production they have the opportunity of securing an attraction of extraordinary drawing powers. "The Better 'Ole," or The Romance of Old Bill, is internationally known through its great success on the legitimate stage. It is chuck full of entertainment, sentiment and humor, and is the sort of a picture that makes everyone happy. Realizing the possibilities in this production the Strand theatre, New York City, booked it for the premier presentation during the week of February 23.

"Man of Might" on Billboards

Exhibitors Keenly Alive to Advertising Possibilities of Vitagraph Serial—William Duncan Is Starred

BILLBOARDS over the country are beginning to show the effects of the monster campaign exhibitors are putting over in the interests of their first showing of "The Man of Might," latest of the famous Vitagraph serials.

Exhibitors have been alive to the unusual advertising aids extended them, and scores of showmen have begun an intensive campaign on billboards and in newspapers.

The rush of bookings of the serial, which again brings to the fore the athlete-star William Duncan, with his all-star supporting cast, which includes Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, whose past Vitagraph serializations have won for them quite a niche in the affections of screen fans, have been beyond the most sanguine anticipations of Vitagraph. A rush was looked for, even beyond the precedents established by past serials, but the torrent that developed set a new record in concentration of bookings, more resulting in a lesser period than has been the case in connection with any of the former Vitagraph chapter-plays.

The first episode is entitled "The Riven Flag" and graphically introduces the plot, which grows in interest and in suspense with each succeeding episode. It tells the story of Captain Ben Ransome and his daughter Polly, who live on the outskirts of Los Angeles. Years before his father rounded the Horn on the merchantman Lion. The crew mutined and he alone reached shore on the Gulf of Mexico. He found a treasure where he landed and buried it there, marking the latitude and longitude on a flag. Years later he led an expedition in search of the treasure.

It was attacked by bandits and Ransome divided the flag in six pieces, giving each one. Each piece told nothing; together they located the treasure. Ben Ransome treasured his bit of flag. For all he knew, the other holders had died. The day this story opens, he was looking at the flag when he was attacked by "Scarface" Bender, one of the expedition, who was bent on getting all the six pieces.

Bender is beating Ransome to death when Dick Van Brunt, engaged to marry Polly, rushes in, frustrating "Scarface." He learns the story of the flag from the dying man, and, after marrying Polly, decides to get the treasure for themselves.

Marines Enjoy William Fox Production

"Tell It To The Marines," starring Jane and Katherine Lee, was shown recently as the feature of an entertainment given in the post gymnasium at the Marine Corps training camp at Quantico, Va. In its story of the entertainment the Leatherneck, the camp paper at Quantico, had this to say:

"The big night's performance opened with a bang at 7 o'clock with the representation of a special feature film. 'Tell It To The Marines' was the title of the film, so named by William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation. Miss Hattie Gray Baker, film director of the Fox Corporation, came from New York for the occasion and sat among the leathernecks. Probably the most amusing thing about the film, aside from the antics of the two kid stars and the marvelous dummies, as the surprise of not finding any honest-to-goodness 'Gyreens' marching all through the film."

Miss Bara Returns the Favor

THE generosity which motion picture starts manifest toward one another is a trait which hitherto has been evident only in scenarios of low jokesmiths, in data for the ribald, in material for ground and lofty cacchinations of raucous mirth. But, with the Peace Conference at Paris fairly glowing with Brotherhood, and the whole world feeling the Impulses of the Higher Humanity (upper case, please), our stars are becoming little playmates in the garden of art.

Co-operation! That is the word of the hour; and every night when they sink into the Ostermoors, our stars ask themselves: "Have I co-operated today with my fellow stars—or have I not?" If not, then the star so failing gets six retakes as punishment.

The MOTION PICTURE NEWS, with its finger on the pulse of the Infant Industry, is able exclusively to record this new trend in Art; and in recording it adds another world-shaking beat to its long record of journalistic accomplishments.

Readers of the News will recall that a short time ago this magazine published an exclusive story that Tom Mix and Theda Bara had collaborated in the production of "The She-Devil." This fact was given to the industry in spite of the efforts of the Fox Film Corporation officials to keep it secret—the desire for secrecy being born of the fact that Theda Bara has an iron-clad clause in her contract with William Fox which stipulates that no other player's name shall be mentioned in the same breath—in the same story with hers. But the News obtained the story that Tom Mix had driven a stage-coach for Miss Bara in the filming of "The She-Devil," and printed it, let the chips fall where they might, as the feller says.

Now the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is in position to state that Theda Bara has returned the compliment and has helped Tom Mix stage his latest Victory picture, "Fighting for Gold."

Miss Bara, with a characteristic modesty and self-effacement, has said nothing about the incident. The publicists in the employ of William Fox have said nothing; indeed, even if the Fox Exhibitors' Service Bureau had known about it, the various persons who write the deathless prose that emanates from the Fox offices would have to keep silence—for a contract is a contract, and Heaven have mercy on the luckless wight who broke the Bara rule!

But the incident is such a striking example of the new spirit of Co-operation, and Fellowship, and Brotherhood, and Humanitarianism, and Help-Me-and-I'll-Help-You-ness, that, gol darn it all, the News has simply GOTTA spill it.

Pieced together from the fragments of gossip that have filtered through from Ma Alexandria's boarding house in Los Angeles, the story is this:

When "Fighting for Gold" was bought for Tom Mix it was found that one of the characters was a vamp—a sinuous, alluring, kiss-me-you-fool person, who took men's hearts and ground them into powder by the mere narrowing of a set of ball-bearing eyelids. The role was so important that it could not be slighted by the engagement of an actress of mediocre ability. This role required Art—huge gobs of it; and Director Ed. Le Saint was in a most gosh-awful mess trying to get somebody who had genius enough to measure up to the part.

Theda Bara, the bear, and Tom Mix, the star, co-operate in a new Wm. Fox production

He made a thorough survey of all the available artists then "at liberty" in Hollywood, and its fashionable suburb, Los Angeles; but his search was futile. There was only one person who could play the part; only one artist who had the temperament, the genius and the grasp of detail which would give this role its proper interpretation; only one player whom he could depend upon to rise to the impassioned heights that the script demanded—Theda Bara. (Prolonged applause.)

But how could one expect Miss Bara to play a role in support of another star? How could one, indeed! "C'est impossible!" said Director Le Saint, in his native tongue.

But Mr. Le Saint was wrong. In some mysterious way word reached Theda Bara that the Tom Mix company was held up for lack of a person of her attainments.

Recalling instantly that Tom Mix had come to her rescue in the filming of "The She-Devil," Miss Bara immediately declared she would take the part. Fortunately, it was between two of her productions—a period when ordinarily she would rest; but she gladly gave up her vacation to be of assistance to Tom Mix—thus marking the advent of that new era of co-operation which has dawned on the motion picture profession.

Miss Bara plunged into the work with zest, and persons who saw her acting declare she has done in "Fighting for Gold" the best work of her career.

That is the story as relayed to us from Hollywood. Now, through characteristic

Pathe Completing Three New Serials

With two serials now on the screens, Pathe's declaration that 1919 will be the greatest serial year in history is being adhered to according to the latest announcement of Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager.

There are three new serials in course of production. Work has already started on the Pearl White serial, "In Secret," by Robert W. Chambers. This serial is being directed by George B. Seitz at the Pathe studio, 134th street and Park avenue, New York City.

The Astra Company, at Glendale, California, is reported to be making rapid headway on Ruth Roland's new serial, and Director Ellis is rushing the work so that it will be completed in time to follow Pearl White's serial, "The Lightning Raider." Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue wrote the new Roland serial and the title will be announced shortly.

"The Great Gamble," featuring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, is being directed by Joseph Golden, who also directed the previous Western Photoplays serial, "Wolves of Kultur."

Fox Scenarioist Deplores Lack of Stories

Referring to the recent announcement of the Fox Film Corporation of the purchase of a story for William Farnum, especially written by George V. Hobart, and of the purchase of "Cowardice Court," by George Barr McCutcheon, for Peggy Hyland, Hamilton Thompson, William Fox scenario-editor, spoke this week of the great difficulty in finding good screen stories outside the work of well-known writers.

"We are anxious to discover new talent," said Mr. Thompson, "but the record of acceptable work from unknowns is not an inspiring one. The willingness of William Fox to give new people every opportunity is well known, and this, added to the value of a new writer securing a Fox production, brings us perhaps more than our share of unsolicited manuscripts. But though they come in a deluge, very, very few—say, one out of a hundred—has anything even to recommend it for serious consideration."

enterprise, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is able to publish on this page an exclusive photograph of Theda Bara and Tom Mix actually working in the same scene.

As the observing reader will readily see the Theda Bara here shown is a bear. Nevertheless it is Theda Bara.

This Theda Bara was formerly the mascot of an infantry regiment stationed at Camp Lewis, Wash. When the regiment was ordered to France, the mascot was sent to Hollywood as a gift to the famous actress after whom it was named. The bear was only a cub then, but Miss Bara—the real Miss Bara—fed it so lavishly on mill and other delicacies that it grew and grew and grew until—Well, now look at it!

And when it comes to Co-operation, and Fellowship, and Helpfulness, why, Theda Bara is a bear!

Vitagraph Aims for New Art Standard

Exploitation aids that represent the last word in craftsmanship and art are being prepared by the Vitagraph Company in behalf of "The Lion and the Mouse," the big special production in which Alice Joyce appears, scheduled for release on February 24. Extraordinary activity along this line is taken by the observant technical clan that tackles the typographical and color problems heaped on it by fertile advertising schemers as a sure indication of Vitagraph's confident belief that in "The Lion and the Mouse" it has truly a "special feature."

Departing from usual practice and appropriation limits, the Vitagraph Company has placed a record order for a full line of hand-colored lobby prints, both in 22 x 28 and 11 x 14 sizes. Samples viewed in the advertising offices of the company reveal these to be exquisitely blended and a breathing example of the art of hand-tinting.

Metro Gives Lytell Unusual Cast

A wronged man's long fight for restitution and revenge is the basis of "The Blind Man's Eyes," the newest Bert Lytell picture, which is now under production at the new Metro studios in Hollywood, with John Ince directing, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

It is doubtful if Lytell ever drew such a splendid cast as the one with which Director General Karger has surrounded the young star in "The Blind Man's Eyes." Frank Currie, veteran character actor and a familiar figure in many Metro films, has the role of Basil Santoine, a blind lawyer; Naomi Childers, beautiful and talented leading woman, plays Santoine's daughter, "the blind man's eyes"; Joseph Kilgour, distinguished Broadway actor, is Matthew Matron, the money master and rogue.

Others in the cast are Mignon Anderson, Gertrude Claire, Richard Morris and Morris Foster.

Goldwyn Boosts Normand in "Sis Hopkins"

THE decision to star Mabel Normand in "Sis Hopkins" closely approximates a stroke of genius on the part of the Goldwyn organization. It could be foretold that "Sis Hopkins" was everything that a Mabel Normand role ought to be, and the completed production, now ready for release February 9, bears out all of the Goldwyn, advanced predictions, according to all reports.

Mabel Normand is pre-eminently a broad comedy heroine, and there could hardly be a broader comedy than "Sis Hopkins." It calls for animation and action, for ridiculous situations, for superior clowning and fun-making. In the Goldwyn production of the play Rose Melville made famous throughout the land for two generations you find Mabel Normand riding the handlebars of a bicycle pedalled at breakneck speed up hill and down dale in pursuit of Vibert, the sharper, bent on buying Paw Hopkins' farm at what Vibert thinks is a ridiculous figure for land swimming in oil; dashing on foot through a field of pumpkins, hurling the big ones right and left and finally sprawling flat with the vine of one entangled with her awkward feet; cleaning out a country grocery by fisticuffs when the village "humdinger" tries to flirt with her; tumbling head over heels down a flight of cellar stairs when Vibert thrusts her and Ridy Scarboro into the trap while he tries to sneak Paw Hopkins to the notary's without their knowledge and later breaking out of this improvised prison with an axe; performing bewildering circus stunts on an improvised trapeze hung back of the family barn and doing a hundred and one other things that will quickly stamp her as a "stunt" comedienne and add new thousands to her uncounted admirers.

A great deal of the fun of "Sis Hopkins" in its picture form comes from the subtitles, many of them taken directly from the original story as Rose Melville arranged it for the stage.

Riesensfeld Contracts for Lloyd Comedies

CLOSELY following the news that Pathe Exchange, Inc., will, beginning March 9, release a Harold Lloyd comedy once a week, instead of at two-week intervals, comes the announcement that Hugo Riesensfeld, director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York City, has signed a year's contract for these one-reel Rolin features of the Rolin Company for the year.

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., considers that the success of the reels is largely due to the country-wide survey and the campaign that has been in progress for some time to place the comedies in the front rank. A great mass of exhibitor and newspaper comment, supplemented by thousands of personal criticisms, have given a definite idea of the high points of excellence in idea and treatment to attract and hold public favor.

This information and suggestion has been enormously helpful to Hal Roach, head of the Rolin Film Company, who has steadily bettered his work, so that the comedies are now being played in more than 5,000 theatres throughout the United States and Canada. Joseph Plunkett, manager of the Strand theatre, New York City, where they have been shown, has declared them to be the best one-reel comedies on the market, and showing steady improvement.

The supply of features for a year is amply assured, and with the change of release to a weekly basis a new form of contract will be made by which these proven features will be booked for a year solid, as in the case of the Rialto theatre.

Writing to Mr. Brunet last week, Hal Roach says: "I thank you for your commendation and the constructive material which Pathe has placed at your disposal. If you think the comedies that I have been turning out have reached the hundred per cent standard, I can assure you that, having in hand the sense of thousands of picture followers and exhibitors, furnished by you, I am certain that I can make the comedies still better."

Says "Hoarded Assets" Proves Very Popular Ontario Exhibitors to Start Exchange

VITAGRAPH exchange managers report a big demand for "Hoarded Assets," starring Harry T. Morey. They state that the part of Harry T. Morey as a river-pirate in "Hoarded Assets" may be traced to the passion of the author, Raymond S. Spears, for boating, particularly river-boating.

Mr. Spears, who wrote this story for Scribner's Magazine, is a former New York newspaperman, but now lives upstate in a city on the Mohawk River.

In a sort of "shanty-boat," which he built himself, Mr. Spears made a trip the full length of the Mississippi River a few years ago. It is but natural that boats should have a foremost place in his mind when he wrote "Hoarded Assets."

As the river-pirate, Harry Rufus, in "Hoarded Assets," Mr. Morey steals a shipment of gold, and when the "bulls" trail him too closely he buries it in a cove of the river. By an original twist of the story Jerry Rufus comes through the deal safely, although the police are present when he digs up the hoard.

It is said to be all so surprising and yet so logical that it gives the story an unlooked-for "punch" ending of the sort that so strengthened the tales of the late O. Henry. Mr. Spears, the author, recently witnessed a screening of "Hoarded Assets" in Vitagraph's Syracuse exchange, and he remarked that while he didn't know at the time that the rights would ever be purchased for Harry Morey, it was the virile Morey type of male that he had in mind when he created the character of "Jerry Rufus."

"Hoarded Assets" was directed by Paul Scardon. In Mr. Morey's support is to be seen a strong cast of Vitagraphers, including Betty Blythe, Jean Paige, George Majeroini, Robert Gaillard and Bernard Siegal.

Official announcement has been made that the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario has decided to enter the moving picture exchange business. The concern which has been organized is known as the "Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange" and the capitalization has been placed at $100,000, with the par value of shares at $100 each.

The decision to organize the company was reached at a general meeting of the members at 143 Yonge street, Toronto, and the official statement regarding the move was issued by Secretary Thomas Scott on January 14.

A committee composed of nine members of the association was appointed to canvass the whole business throughout Ontario for the purpose of establishing the activities of the concern throughout the province.

This committee consists of A. A. Huttlemayer, Queen's theatre, Niagara Falls; J. C. Brady, Madison theatre, Toronto; W. G. Sturgess, Imperial theatre, Toronto; J. C. Crang, Oakwood theatre, Toronto; F. Guest, Strand theatre, Hamilton; H. Alexander, Park theatre, Toronto; W. Bailie, Cum-Bac theatre, Toronto; W. F. Sexton, Family theatre, Toronto, and L. Feighan, Eclipse and Broadview theatres, Toronto.

A number of these theatres are large and important units in the field. The new exchange is to be operated by a board of directors to be elected annually by stockholders.

"Lafayette We Come" Is Praised by McMahan

Exhibitors' Mutual reports that I. W. McMahan, president of the McMahan & Jackson Film Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, was so delighted after he screened "Lafayette, We Come," an Affiliated release, that he sat down and dictated a letter to J. A. Kent, Cincinnati branch manager of Exhibitors' Mutual.

"I was agreeably surprised to find that it had no elements of war in it," he wrote, "but instead, was very interesting as a dramatic production."

"I dare say that it is one of the finest pictures I have ever had the opportunity of witnessing. The production is first class from an artistic and director's standpoint, the sets are elaborate, the acting is excellent and, in fact, the picture is, in my mind, as stated above, one of the best I have ever seen."

Assists Exhibitor Direct to Exploit Picture

Universal's policy of assisting exhibitors in every way to properly exploit attractions, led it to send G. Horace Mortimer to Baltimore, Washington and Cleveland to help the theatre men launch their publicity and advertising campaigns on "The Heart of Humanity" the Jewel super-drama.

Mr. Mortimer is said to have the honor of being the first publicity representative sent in advance of a film booked into a theatre as a regular attraction.

"The Fall of Babylon" Is Shown on Coast

D. W. Griffith has brought to the screen again the days of ancient history in his film play titled "The Fall of Babylon," which had its first public presentation at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, starting the performance on Sunday, January 19th.

This showing was a try-out one, and Mr. Griffith re-edited the picture from day to day, using the studio cutting print for the engagement.

This film constitutes all of the Babylonian epoch of his famous tri-story production, "Intolerance," with the addition of a number of other characters and an entirely different climax to the love affair of the mountain girl, Constance Talmadge, and the Rhapsode, Elmer Clifton.

He's Charles' Cousin!

Al Ray, cousin of Charles Ray, will be Ruth Clifford's leading man in a forthcoming Universal release entitled "The Game's Up," which has been completed by Elsie Jane Wilson at the Pacific coast studios. The film play is woven around the complications that arise when a young girl, an art student, writes home of her successes, her automobile and influential friends, and is, by coincidence, called upon to prove her claims, and who, with the aid of a young millionaire who poses as her chauffeur, conducts her surprised guest through a series of parties and fetes that at their conclusion bring four lovers together in a double honeymoon.

U. S. A. Series Attract

According to the Division of Films of the Committee of Public Information wide interest is being manifested in the series of two-reelers made by the United States Government to illustrate the activities of a number of specialized branches of war service.

The four pictures of the "U. S. A. Series," which take the public behind the scenes and give them many secrets of methods that helped America toward victory, are all now released and have been widely booked. The Government made the pictures to fulfil public demand, and it is reported from the Division of Films that the public is showing unusual interest in the series.

Feature Marks Return of James Young

The return of James Young to the staff of Vitagraph directors is marked in the latest Earle Williams picture, "The Man Who Wouldn't Tell."

Some of the most noteworthy of Vitagraph productions in the past were directed by Mr. Young, and his re-engagement by Vitagraph not only brings him back into the fold once more, but his assignment as director of the Earle Williams pictures reunites two old friends.

One of the most noteworthy pictures ever produced by Vitagraph, "My Official Wife," was directed by Mr. Young, and Earle Williams was a leading member of the cast that played in the production.

Mitchell Lewis Finishes Another Select

"Children of Banishment" is the title of the newest production Mitchell Lewis has completed for Select Pictures. According to the report there is left only a few days of location work around Los Angeles.

As soon as these shots are taken work will be started on the cutting and titling of the picture, which constitutes the second of Mr. Lewis' Select Star Series.

"Children of Banishment," says the statement issued by Select, will be one of the most thrilling pictures of the Northwest ever filmed. There is not a man-made set in the entire production.

Glass Has Juvenile Role with Clark

Gaston Glass will be seen in the leading juvenile role opposite Marguerite Clark in her latest Paramount picture, "A Honey-moon for Three." Mr. Glass has finished recently an important part in John Emerson-Anita Loos Paramount Artcraft, "When the Boys Come Home."

Mr. Glass was born in France. He came to America with Mme. Bernhardt in 1916 and played in her repertoire. Then he served in the French army, and since then has come back to motion picture acting. Mr. Glass has been seen in Pathe, Gaumont and Eclair productions.

About New Pictures

Alec B. Francis, the veteran screen player, has a lovable role in Madge Kennedy's new Goldwyn picture, "Day Dreams," by Cosmo Hamilton. Francis is cast as Grandpa Burn.

With his clear insight into American life, David W. Griffith in his new Artcraft picture, "A Romance of Happy Valley," which was released January 26, has taken the incident of a boy running away from his home in the night for one of the minor climaxes in his story of a cross road settlement in the Ohio River country.

"The Blind Man's Eyes," the new Metro production starring Bert Lytell, which is under way at the Metro studios in Hollywood, is making excellent progress towards completion. Lytell is directed by John Ince, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

With Vitagraph's release of "The Highest Trump" on February 3, Earle Williams will appear for the first time in the dual role of both author and star. He collaborated with H. H. Van Loan in the writing of "The Highest Trump."

A game of chess is a feature of Bessie Barriscale's latest success, "All of a Sudden Norma," released by the Exhibitors' Mutual.

Following a rest, Vivian Martin has started work at the Morosco studio in Hollywood on a new Paramount picture titled, "You Can't Just Wait," Robert Vignola directing.

When Vitagraph releases "Silent Strength," the Harry Morey picture scheduled for February 17, a glimpse into the estate of Gifford Pinchot will be offered. Mr. Pinchot has been a leader in conservation work.

In "One Every Minute," the Paramount-James Montgomery Flagg comedy released February 2, Olin Howland plays the part of Royal Hosford, a rural bumpkin engaged to Anne Dearest, a rural pippin, played by Florence Dixon.

May Allison and her supporting company of Metro players are on location at Catalina Island, where Henry Otto is directing them in Miss Allison's newest starring subject, "The Island of Intrigue."

Dorothy Gish has the role of a slavey named "Boots" in her next Paramount picture, released February 16. She is called "Boots" because it is the English custom to refer to the bootblack by that term. The setting of the picture is in London.

"What Every Woman Wants" is the title of a six-reel special for which Jesse D. Hampton, according to an announcement, has signed Grace Darmond as the star.

For the big Famous Players-Lasky Salvation Army picture, which is rapidly nearing completion, Edward Jose, the director, recently took his company to a nearby cantonment and made what are believed to be some of the most remarkable militant scenes that have ever been secured for a motion picture.

Phyllis Blake thought she was having a great time with Josephus Potts, Jr., from Homeburg, Pa. She posed as a distracted heroine in search of the Green Gullabaloo and a valuable lost half of a note. She thought she was putting over some "reel serial" stuff, but she didn't reckon on a country bumpkin having sense. The last laugh was on her.

The L-Ko Comedy Company at Universal City has just completed a two-reeler featuring Babe Hardy and entitled "Blame It on the Ford," and another featuring Eddie Barry and Harry Mann, entitled "It's a Bird."

Priscilla Dean's latest Universal special attraction, "The Wild Cat of Paris," was well received at the Broadway theatre, New York, last week, according to Manager Kashin.

Under the direction of Vin Moore, Alice Howell has completed her latest Century comedy, "Society in Tents."

"To make people laugh," says "Fatty" Arbuckle, "is of course my chief aim. In the past years, the years of war, it has been a duty incumbent upon every person engaged in my character of work to win smiles."

Full Week Runs a Big Success at Buffalo

Full week runs are proving a tremendous success for Manager Earl L. Crabb, of the Strand theatre at Buffalo, according to report. He is said to have been unusually successful in picking pictures that stand up well for the entire seven days.

Capacity audiences were reported for "Eye for Eye," the Nazimova attraction distributed by Metro.

Manager F. S. Hopkins, of Universal's exchange at Buffalo, is also authority for information that longer runs are being given the larger attractions especially. He gave a special trade exhibition in Shea's Hippodrome recently of "The Heart of Humanity," with the entire Hippodrome symphony orchestra playing the musical setting.

Western New York exhibitors, members of the press and friends were in the audience. The showing was given after the regular performance in the evening. The production, it is announced, will be shown in Shea's Hippodrome.

Walter Hays, of the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation and director of the First National Exhibitors' Corporation, has returned to Buffalo from the Los Angeles film conclave. He says that in spite of the merger of "The Big Five," assurance was given that present contracts would be carried out by Chaplin, Pickford and others on the First National program.

Selznick Opens Offices

The latest addition to the Fifth Avenue film district is the new offices of the recently organized Selznick Pictures Corporation offices at Room 1,503, 501 Fifth avenue. The Selznick offices are in the Astor Trust Building, which is one of the most modern business structures in the city, having been just completed when the war put an end to extensive building operations.

All the New York business of the Selznick Pictures Corporation will be transacted at this office, which is in charge of Randolph Bartlett.

Meanwhile production is going on in the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, President Myron Selznick and Director General Charles Giblyn being at the coast for this purpose.

"Out of the Fog" Runs Week at Broadway House, Beginning February 9—Star Has Dual Role

IT was announced this week by Nazimova Productions that Alla Nazimova in the superproduction "Out of the Fog" is scheduled to appear on the screen at the Rialto theatre in New York the week beginning February 9, presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger.

The exhibition of this feature in the Rialto is but a confirmation of the predictions of the producers that this drama, adapted from the stage play "Ception Shoals," by H. Austin Adams, would prove one of the most striking motion picture productions of the year.

The three principal characters besides Eve, the central figure, are played by the same persons who shared with the star, Mme. Nazimova, the success of "Ception Shoals" when it was presented a season or so ago at the Princess theatre, New York. They are Charles Bryant, in the role of Phillip Blake; Henry Harmon, whose work on the stage as the religious, fanatical old Job Coffin brought unanimous praise from New York dramatic critics, and Nancy Palmer, in the part of Maude Standish.

Added to the power of the human drama, there is a depiction of the restless menace and mystery of the sea in the marine scenes taken about a famous lighthouse near Gloucester. The beating of the surf against the foundations of the beacon light, the impenetrable shrouding fog, the uncanniness and eeriness of the waters at night, all are brought out with extraordinary artistry and effectiveness. In fact, during the work of taking pictures of the sweep of the waves against the rugged, weed-clogged rocks upon which the light stands, the cameraman in charge, Eugene Gaudio, nearly lost his life and was himself pulled out of danger only by the quick forming of a human chain. He succeeded not only, though, in obtaining magnificent close-ups of the breakers but also in filming for the first time in the history of motion picture photography realistic glimpses of the fog which is expected to cause much comment.

In "Out of the Fog," Nazimova is called upon to play a dual role: that of Faith, the unfortunate sister of Job Coffin, a bigoted, almost fanatical fisherman, and of Eve, the child born to Faith.

Select Names Its Features for February

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces three new productions for distribution during the month of February with Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Mitchell Lewis as the stars. These attractions are Constance Talmadge in "Romance and Arabella," Mitchell Lewis in

"Children of Banishment" and Alice Brady in "The World to Live In."

The first of Select's February attractions, "Romance and Arabella," in which Constance Talmadge is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, is a screen version of William J. Hurlbut's stage play of three seasons ago. Miss Talmadge is seen in the part of Arabella Cadenhouse, a young widow who is determined that her second marriage shall be filled with romance.

Mitchell Lewis, Select's newest star, whose first picture under the Select banner was "Code of the Yukon," has contributed an attraction for February that Select expects will bring him thousands of new admirers. The name of it is "Children of Banishment," a screen version of Francis William Sullivan's novel of the same name, which was prepared for the screen and directed by Norval MacGregor.

Alice Brady's Select picture for February, "The World to Live In," is by W. Carey Wonderly. It is the story of a girl who works by day and plays by night, one of the "tinpan" sort with which New York is filled. In the day time Rita Charles, the character played by Alice Brady, is a capable stenographer, but her evenings are spent in places of amusement with the son of her employer.

New Outing Chesters Are Released

February 2 was chosen as the release date for "From Scales to Antlers," the opening number of a new series of Outing Chester scenics which are now ready for presentation. The Outing Chester Pictures are produced by C. L. Chester in co-operation with Outing Magazine, and the entire series will be distributed through First National exchanges.

"From Scales to Antlers" depicts a canoeing jaunt in the Canadian Northwest, where lily-studded streams and fragrant pine forests are the props, and furs, fur and feathers clothe the actors.

Beginning with the first release, the Chester pictures will be distributed weekly, the second on the schedule being "Teddy Birds."

Melville Helped Normand in "Sis Hopkins"

Rose Melville, who created the role of "Sis Hopkins" upon the stage and is now retired, is said to have journeyed especially to see Mabel Normand, and it is reported that she imparted to Miss Normand many valuable suggestions as to costumes and gestures.

Goldwyn released the feature, "Sis Hopkins," starring Mabel Normand, on February 16, and it is stated by no less an authority than the Goldwyn publicity department that both pig tails arch with the proper ethical curve and that Miss Normand is an ideal "Sis Hopkins."

Adds to Cast of World's All-Star Feature

In addition to the all-star cast of principals announced as having stellar roles in World Pictures' late production, "The Price of Doubt," William Riley Hatch, popular character man, has been engaged for the role of Captain Arden and Mathilda Brundage will portray the role of Mrs. Vale. The World stars who will appear in this production are Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, June Elvidge, Montagu Love and Johnny Hines.

Florence Reed Starts New United Picture

J. A. Berst, president, United Picture Theatres, Inc., announces that work was commenced this week at the Tribune Production studio on the late Florence Reed picture, the title to which is not announced. Marc MacDermott has been engaged as Miss Reed's leading man. Mr. MacDermott will be remembered for his work with Vitagraph and Edison and on the speaking stage, having supported Richard Mansfield, Mrs. Patrick Campbell and appeared under Charles Frohman's management. Miss Reed will be directed by John M. Stahl and she will have the role of a novelist who devotes her talents to the political emancipation of her sex.

Miss Reed first United picture, "The Call of the Heart," has been cut and titled and is announced for release soon. The star has a dual role—a young girl reared in America and a beautiful Parisian of the Latin Quarter of Paris. William Desmond, Alec Francis, George Stevens, Robert Frazer, Marcelle Roussillon and Irving Cummings are in support.

A pre-release showing of Dustin Farnum's late United picture, "A Man in the Open," was given this week. It is set for release February 23.

Essanay Schedules More Chaplin Films

Essanay has scheduled four of its early Charlie Chaplin pictures for a new showing. The release dates have been set two weeks apart and the subjects chosen are "Shanghaied," released February 15; "A Night in the Show," released March 1; "The Bank," released March 15, and "Police," released March 29.

This is the first showing of new prints on these subjects, which were produced shortly after Charlie Chaplin joined the Essanay forces nearly four years ago. These are four of Chaplin's best pictures.

These four releases are now booking through the George Kleine System, whose representatives are in all General Film Company exchanges.

Universal Sums Up Studio Work

Announcement Tells of Completion of Stories and Progress of Others

—Pigott in Charge of Continuity Writing

AN announcement from Universal this week carries a summary of the work accomplished and in progress at the company's studios.

"Gentleman Jim" Corbett, with his company, under the direction of James W. Horne, has gone to the California mountains to film scenes of the seventh episode of his Universal serial, "The Midnight Man."

Rupert Julian is completing his latest photoplay, starring himself, and entitled "The Fire Flingers," at the Universal City studios.

Thurston Hall is seen as Priscilla Dean's leading man in "Raggedy Ann," which is now being completed by Director Tod Browning at Universal City. Director Paul Powell has gone to Flagstaff, Ariz., to begin work on the next Monroe Salisbury feature entitled "The Great White Darkness," which is to be released by Universal shortly.

William S. Campbell, Universal comedy director, is at work on the first of a series of animal comedies entitled "His Dutiful Wife." Almost the entire Universal City zoo is used in this film.

Violet Mersereau is featured in a special two-reel release entitled "Her Proxy Husband." Having completed his latest Universal special production, "The Outcast of Poker Flat," Harry Carey is soon to begin work on a series of short-reel Western subjects.

Carmel Myers has completed her latest Universal film play entitled "The Little White Savage." The story relates how two circus owners obtained one of their "side show queens" after thrilling adventures.

Charlotte Merriam, a fifteen-year-old Californian, is the latest screen find, according to Casting Director Arthur Hoyt at Universal City. Miss Merriam, despite her tender years, is an expert horseback rider, and because of her all-round talents has been featured in several new short-reel Western film plays.

William Pigott has been in charge of the continuity-writing at Universal City. Mr. Pigott recently superintended the creation of the scripts for "The Red Glove," a Universal serial featuring Marie Welcamp, and "The Midnight Man," featuring James J. Corbett.

Vitagraph Names New Love Release

With "The Enchanted Barn" acclaimed with delight all over the country, Bessie Love becomes at once a figure entirely prepossessing in the cinema world, and Vitagraph expects double interest will be taken in the announcement of her third Vitagraph release of the years, which is entitled "The Wishing Ring Man."

As was the case with her last medium, "The Wishing Ring Man" is founded on a book of that name, from the pen of Margaret Widdemer. Like "The Enchanted Barn," it teems with the fancy of childhood, yet its emotional demands are perhaps more exacting. It will propound new demands in delineation and proves a real test of the dainty star's actual powers, bringing to the surface every latent talent.

First of Burton Holmes' "Yanks" Series

Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue release for the week of February 2, the first of the "Yanks" series, shows the various stages of training through which our boys pass in their training on the other side. This subject is titled "With the American Y. M. C. A. in London." In taking the scenes, Mr. Holmes visited the Eagle Hut of the Strand in London and Washington Inn, the "Y's" club for American officers in London.

She Stopped the traffic in St. Louis

The Globe Democrat says:

"THE WILDCAT OF PARIS" registered a riotous hit, congested traffic along Sixth Street, from Olive to a point which led to the Royal Theatre and withal smashed all preceding theatre attendance records, when this heart-compelling, red-blooded story of Romance, Ardor and Action made its introduction yesterday.

"IT may be a broad statement to make but, judging from the human freight that blocked the vicinity of the Royal Theatre, one could have assumed that 'THE WILDCAT OF PARIS' was the only attraction in St. Louis. At 8 o'clock in the evening the crowd became so dense that the police found it difficult to break a path. And within, the play winnowed its appeal into the hearts of the audience, easily registering the most pronounced hit of the season."

"Now, see here, Priscilla"— says Brass Buttons

"WHO gave you permission to pack—jam the ROYAL—and block the sidewalks—and fill up the streets—and stop the trolleys—and drive us cops half crazy with your 'WILDCAT OF PARIS'? You always seemed such a quiet little mouse—do you mean to say you're a real, live moving picture Star? Have these here—now—critics said so?"

"PLEASE, Mister Brass Buttons—I am a Star, only, the nice old critics didn't wake up till yesterday, simply because my Company never megaphoned the country for me but just waited along till the real critics, the people, settled it beyond the shadow of a doubt."

"ALL right, Priscilla—betwixt you and me, I think you're the dazzling little diamond of the screen—but—have you got it in your little head to jam us fellows up again?"

"YES, sir, please—in about two weeks. I'll be 'THE WICKED DARLING'—and this time I'll call out the reserves."

European Campaign For United

David Howells Leaves for Europe to Arrange for Foreign Distribution of United Product

DAVID P. HOWELLS, of David P. Howells, Inc., before leaving for Europe this week, completed arrangements with the United Picture Theatres, Inc., whereby he will pave the way for an extensive campaign in European countries for the distribution of United product. Mr. Howells is one of the most prominent and successful operators in the foreign market. He is the sole distributor of United product in the foreign market and recently closed negotiations for the placing of United pictures in South American centres.

Mr. Howells took with him on his trip to Europe prints of "The Light of the Western Stars," featuring Dustin Farnum; "Adele," starring Kitty Gordon, and a print of the Florence Reed picture, recently completed, "The Call of the Heart." For these pictures Mr. Howells will arrange trade showings in all of the important European centres. He will be absent two months.

Mr. Howells' plan is to institute a method of close co-operation between the representative American producers and the purchaser of selling rights to American films in foreign countries. Before his return to New York Mr. Howells will have established in every film distributing centre of Europe a personal representative of David P. Howells, Inc., whose chief duty will be to study the market in which he is assigned and make regular reports upon films being shown there, conditions from the exhibitors' standpoint, and other matters which will aid in the procuring of films of the nature most desired.

"I believe that a film exporter," said Mr. Howells, "should regard himself as the American representative of every foreign exhibitor who shows a film which he has handled. For that reason I regard the Howells, Inc., as the representative of every exhibitor in the world outside of the United States and Canada, because those who have not already shown films of ours are potential customers. Because I want the confidence of every foreign exhibitor I am establishing a service station in every film distributing centre in the world. The service station will be there for the use of the exhibitor and through the aid we can extend to him we will learn of his needs and thereby be able to cater to them." He will visit London, the Scandinavian countries, Holland, France, Spain, Portugal and Italy.

Hall Closes Big Foreign Deal

President of Independent Sales Contracts with Apollo Company for Foreign Distribution

FRANK HALL, president, Independent Sales Corporation, and Lawrence Weber, president, and Robert North, treasurer, of the recently incorporated Apollo Trading Corporation, for handling business in all foreign countries, closed a deal this week whereby the latter corporation will distribute in foreign countries all the big productions, the world rights of which are invested in the Independent Sales Corporation.

"The first two of these extra attractions," said Mr. Hall, "to be immediately distributed throughout the world, excepting the United States and Canada, by the Apollo Company, will be J. Stuart Blackton's production, 'Life's Greatest Problem,' starring Mitchell Lewis, and Frank Reicher's sensational mystery drama 'Suspense,' in which Mollie King is featured.

"The formulated plans of the Apollo Trading Corporation will be put into immediate operation. Capt. Benjamin Hicks, one of the best known film men in foreign markets, sailed Saturday on the Lapland for London, where he will establish the English headquarters of the concern. Other units of the company will be opened in rapid order in every important foreign center, thus insuring the widest possible distribution of the Independent's numerous specials covered by this arrangement.

"With the war over, all eyes are now on the foreign markets. Europe especially is an objective of the American producer. It is very gratifying to the Independent Sales Corporation and to the big foreign buyers to know that the big specials of my company will be handled in the foreign field by such capable men as Lawrence Weber, Robert North and Captain Hicks."

Houdini Serial Offers Many Aids

In order that exhibitors may be enabled to take full advantage of the advertising possibilities in exploiting "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, produced by B. A. Rolfe Productions and distributed by Octagon Films, Inc., Octagon has issued as a supplement to the campaign book on this serial four press sheets, each of full newspaper size, containing data for four episodes, excepting the fourth sheet, which covers the last three episodes only. A publicity campaign is mapped out for each episode of the serial. Catch-lines for ad-talks and inexpensive stunt suggestions are also included. The advertising aids prepared for this purpose contain material on every phase of the serial's advertising possibilities.

Foreign Rights to Frohman Production Sold

The entire foreign rights to "Once to Every Man," Frohman Amusement Company's six-reel production, were purchased this week by Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., foreign buyers. William L. Sherrill, president of Frohman Amusement Company, closed the deal with Mr. Garrett.

"Once to Every Man" is a screen version of Larry Evans' novel of the same title and presents Jack Sherrill and Mabel Withey in the stellar roles.

In addition to this production for exclusive distribution in all foreign countries, Mr. Garrett acquired the European rights to Frohman Amusement's "The Witching Hour" and "God's Man." "The story is altogether human," said Mr. Garrett, "it starts off with a smash between the eyes, because in the first reel there is a fight that is without parallel for intensity and realism, and then the story develops along a human and soul-grIPPING line, leading up to a climax that will appeal to the home-loving as well as sporting element throughout the world."

Webster's "Reclaimed" Alpha's First Release

The first offering of the Alpha Pictures, Inc., a newly organized concern operating on the open market, is announced as Harry MacRae Webster's production, "Reclaimed," adapted from a story by Richard Field Carroll and starring Niles Welch and Mabel Julian Scott, supported by Anders Randolph, Warren Cook, Fred W. Peters, Mabel Wright and Bobby Connelly. George Edward Hall cut and edited the picture. Harry Forbes photographed. It is announced for immediate release.

Stokes Production Manager for Prizma

Howard Stokes, who for seven years has been head of the advertising department of the New York Telephone Company, has been appointed productions manager for Prizma, Inc., producers of the new natural color films. Mr. Stokes is best known for his advertising slogans, his catch line in advertising the New York Telephone's activities, "The Voice With the Smile Wins," having won country-wide recognition. His specializing on courtesy campaigns in training employees to handle their work courteously under all circumstances qualifies him to make like contributions to the picture industry. He has contributed many articles to current magazines on advertising subjects. He is a graduate of Colgate University and a member of the Sphinx, Salmagundi and Press Clubs.

Hoffman Succeeds Hirsch in Pioneer

Nathan Hirsch has severed his relations with the Pioneer Film Corporation and is no longer connected with that organization in any capacity, it is announced by Pioneer. M. H. Hoffman, formerly manager of Universal and more recently operating in the independent market, has merged his interests with Pioneer and will fill the office of general manager of this company. Pioneer is exploiting "Civilization," "Redemption," "To-Day," "The Mad Lover," "Wives of Men," "The Still Alarm," "Little Orphan Annie," "The Prodigal Wife" and "After the War."

Title for Ford's Serial

Francis Ford announces the title of his next serial, to be produced in Japan, China and India, as "The Mystery of the Purple Cross." Mr. Ford and his company will sail for Japan the middle of March. Mae Easton will be his leading woman.

Territorial Sales Reported During the Past Week

Raver Handling Maciste Serial

"The Liberator," Starring Hero of "The Warrior" and "Cabiria," Selling to Four of Five Buyers' Viewing Episodes

HARRY RAVER, who is handling the territorial rights to the new serial, "The Liberator," starring Maciste, the hero of "The Warrior" and "Cabiria," after selling four of every five buyers who saw this serial, claims the record for sales on an independent production. Mr. Raver has handled all of the giant Italian's starring vehicles in the United States and Canada and he reports that sales on Maciste's serial, "The Liberator," have far exceeded those on any of the other productions in which the big fellow appears.

The serial is in twelve episodes and Mr. Raver has determined that these episodes must bring so much. There is no "sliding scale" of prices.

"I can save a great deal of time by this method," says Mr. Raver, "because I save a lot of argument with the quibbler and can take up the next prospect who may be more certain of what he wants when he sees it. I have fixed a price for 'The Liberator' very much lower than the cost to make a serial in America and am only able to do this because our foreign sales have been tremendous. That 'The Liberator' represents a production cost running many thousands of dollars higher than any serial ever made is no reason why America should be saddled with the burden of this expenditure. My reputation for selling films of quality at a fixed and unalterable price has been established after many years of dealing with the most substantial exchange men of this country. I know and have faith in my product and can sell every territory at the figure determined, perhaps not to every curiosity seeker, looking for a bargain, but eventually to the showman who can sense the value of Maciste as a star and the entertainment value of 'The Liberator' in which he appears."

R. C. Cooper Tries the Newspaper Medium

R. C. COOPER, of the Bee-Hive Exchange, with offices in Chicago, Milwaukee and Indianapolis, who is booking "The Silent Mystery," starring Francis Ford in this territory, is a firm believer in advertising—and advertising the limit. The benefits derived from the trade paper advertising have accrued to Mr. Cooper in such favorable lots that he is going to bring his product before the public through the medium of the newspaper. The Herald-Examiner, one of the best sheets in Chicago, and the Chicago American, are going to be Mr. Cooper's medium of exchange. A campaign with photographs, cuts, banners, daily ads and teasers are the features.

Following his announcement to this effect, Mr. Cooper states that several exhibitors in the Chicago-Milwaukee-Indianapolis territory, have booked the serial in way of approval of this move.

"There are some exhibitors," said Mr. Cooper, "who favor the newspapers and some who place all their faith in the trade paper. One exhibitor, formerly a distributor, now exhibiting near Chicago, told me that he thought newspaper space prohibitive and that because it was necessary to use space in all the newspapers, if the proper results were to be gotten, the smaller exhibitor hadn't a chance. But I am going to try this medium," continued Mr. Cooper, "and I expect big results for myself, my picture and for the exhibitor that books my product."

Kaplan Gets "Liberator" for "Dog States"

R. Kaplan, Variety Pictures Corporation, Baltimore, purchased the Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia rights to Harry Raver's serial production, "The Liberator," starring Maciste. After viewing the episodes of "The Liberator," Mr. Kaplan said, "It is the first picture I ever purchased where I had to pay the first figure asked, but after seeing the picture through I feel that the price is not only fair but exceedingly fair for such an excellent serial production."

Without Change

The National Board of Review has passed B. A. Rolfe's "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini and distributed by Octagon Films, Inc., without change. Thirty-one reels were passed in review. Ohio and Pennsylvania boards have passed on this serial.

Grelle Reports Big Receipts on "Mickey" Plaza Star Returns to the West Coast

HARRY F. GRELLE, of Supreme Photoplay Productions in Pittsburgh, controlling the rights for "Mickey" in Ohio and Pennsylvania, said that if Altoona is a fair criterion of what "Mickey" is going to do in that territory, he expects wonderful results.

Mr. Grelle encloses a box office report to W. H. Productions, on the first three days of showing in Altoona at the Mishler theatre, and he states that although he expected unprecedented box office receipts, the actual returns surpassed even his expectations.

On the first day of showing, January 13, the gross receipts for the day amounted to $642.44. January 14, the second day—and a rainy day—the gross receipts went up to $1,005.10, and on the third day, January 15, the gross receipts amounted to $1,291.20.

"As a result of our successful engagement," continues Mr. Grelle, "we were booked for an immediate return the next Tuesday and Wednesday, and following that we got in the same house February 7 and 8. We regret now that we have booked some of the other towns on a flat rental, and I phoned trying to cancel the flat rental engagements, which it will be difficult to do of course.

"I expect to book Cincinnati for an unlimited engagement and feel confident that it will break every record ever established by any picture in that city."

"Good showmen appreciate also that a good picture, to prove its full worth and to produce its full quota of box office returns, must be put over right. W. H. Productions Co. have outlined a publicity, advertising and exploitation campaign on 'Mickey,' which excels in practicability and effectiveness anything ever attempted in motion pictures."

After spending the holidays in New York, Kathleen Clifford, the Plaza star, has returned to the West Coast. It is stated that negotiations are under way whereby she expects to make an announcement regarding new film connections very shortly.

Miss Clifford is stopping at the Virginia, in Long Beach, Cal. She returned in time to participate in the annual automobile show festivities, held in Los Angeles, where the petite star and her classy roadsters were said to be the cynosure of all eyes, and Lily, the famous Pekinese spaniel, is said to have shared in the attentions of the crowd.

Spanuth Shows New York a Novelty

H. A. Spanuth, after bringing three releases of his original Vod-a-vil Movies, out of eighteen completed ones, to New York to place them on the Eastern market, showed them to the trade recently and was rewarded by several complimentary expressions. The releases shown are reviewed in the Advance Reviews of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The Spanuth Vod-a-vil Movies have been shown around Chicago to much success, and it is felt that the same degree of satisfaction will greet the pictures in the East. Many theatres have booked the novel films, and Mr. Spanuth has received several letters of praise from various exhibitors.

Lillian Hall Engaged for Ingenue Lead

Lillian Hall has been engaged to play the ingenue lead opposite Taylor Holmes, who commenced work this week at the Biograph studio, in a screen version of "Taxi?" a serial story which ran in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, the last installment of which appears in the current issue. Miss Hall has the role of Imogene, a chorus girl who falls heir to a large fortune and wins the love and respect of a wealthy young clubman. She will be remembered for her work in William A. Brady's production of "Little Women" and more recently in support of Elaine Hammerstein in Harry Rapf's production of "Wanted for Murder."

Popularity Increases with Each Episode

OCTAGON FILMS, INC., distributing B. A. Rolfe's production of "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, the Handcuff King, report gratification with the good accounts emanating from the New York houses that have shown this serial. All report the serial a big business getter and one that gives every satisfaction to their patrons. With each episode these houses report an increase of business.

The success reported by the Keith and Proctor houses in New York with Houdini in B. A. Rolfe's serial, "The Master Mystery," is being duplicated in other houses in the same territory, according to Carey Wilson, manager of the Effano Film Exchange, distributors of the serial in the City and State of New York.

Mayer & Schneider Circuit is playing "The Master Mystery" over its chain of fourteen houses, the first time that a serial was booked to play every theatre.

Capital Reports Demand for Pictures

The Capital Film Company this week reported a big demand for its two-reel features, and stated that the six exchanges now in operation are doing well. They have been open but a few weeks.

As announced by Ike Schlank, president of Capital, in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the company will release each week three two-reel pictures, including all types from Westerns to comedies and dramas.

Strauss Enters Field

It was announced this week that Malcolm Strauss, artist, has decided to enter the motion picture industry as a producer. He has engaged as star Leila Hope, who has not appeared in pictures and has never been on the stage. The type of pictures to be made has not been announced.

"Ruling Passions" Books Heavy

Promises to Be One of Select's Most Extensively Distributed Specials of Season—Many Runs in New York

WITH contracts from first-run theatres in the foremost cities in the country calling for five, six and seven-day runs, Select's special attraction, "Ruling Passions," written and directed by Abraham S. Schomer, promises to be one of Select's most extensively distributed specials of the season.

According to the tabulation of reports from Select's different branches, booking on this special seems to be running about even in the various sections of the country. The New England states have been well taken care of through the booking of the entire Poli circuit, with the additional booking of the Boston theatre in Boston for six days and Fay's theatre in Providence for six days.

Reports of bookings in and around New York City include the Mount Morris, four days; Empire, Bronx, three days; North Star, two days; McKinley Square, three days; New Fourteenth Street, two days; Westchester theatre, Mount Vernon, three days; Tremont, two days; The Heights, two days; New Law, two days; Alhambra, Brooklyn, four days; Palace, two days; Fox's Bedford, four days; Fox's Folly, four days; Sheffield, two days; New Garden, two days; Classic, two days; Cleveland, Brooklyn, two days; Dykeman, one day, and the Goodwin theatre, in Newark, seven days.

More promising even than the New York and vicinity houses are the reports from first-run theatres in all of the biggest cities, including Sig Faller's Bijou Dream in Chicago, seven days; Fay's theatre, Rochester, three days; Dome, Youngstown, Ohio, four days; Empress, Toledo, seven days; Strand, Cleveland, seven days; Alhambra, El Paso, two days; the Hulsey houses in Dallas and Houston, four days each; America, Denver, three days; Strand, Grand Forks, N. D., three days; Prostor's entire New York State circuit; Princess, Sioux City, Iowa, four days; Family, Davenport, three days; Lyric, Camden, two days; Colonial, Camden, two days; Liberty, Wheeling, W. Va., three days; Minerva, Pittsburgh, three days; Portola, San Francisco, seven days; Strand, Washington, D. C., four days, and the Criterion, Atlanta, six days.

This list does not include the theatres where "Ruling Passions" has already been shown, nor does it include a large number of contracts which Select expects during the current week. The bookings herein announced are for future dates which have been booked solely upon the favorable criticisms received from managers who previously have shown it.

Robertson-Cole in Deal with Bell-Howell

THE BELL & HOWELL COMPANY, manufacturers of motion picture machinery, have closed a deal whereby the Robertson-Cole Company will handle their cinemachinery in every country outside of the United States and Canada. Through this transaction the Division of Films of Robertson-Cole obtain the foreign rights to the Bell & Howard standardized cinematograph camera; film perforators, continuous feed film printers, stop feed film printers and splicing machines.

In Europe, where virtually every manufacturing plant was turned over to war-time production, there is said to be a heavy demand for just the articles made by the Bell & Howell Company. The Bell & Howell perforating machine, which has practically standardized film perforation in this country, is in especially big demand in Europe at this time. So are motion picture cameras, and with the opening up of the big field now presenting itself following the four years of war, the product taken over by Robertson-Cole, which already has a smooth working organization in Europe, will be welcomed by the foreign motion picture people.

Because of the tremendous influx of business anticipated through the exploitation of the Robertson-Cole Company, the output of the Bell & Howell plant in Chicago will be doubled within the coming year. In France, where the people were too busy straffing the Hun to manufacture any but war material, the motion picture equipment produced in the past four years is negligible. What equipment was on hand at the beginning of the war has been sadly neglected, and large sales are expected.

Tourneur Productions to Show in Belgium

PICTURE audiences in Belgium, and especially those sections in which Paul Clerget, prominently known on the French and Belgium stages and more recently seen in Maurice Tourneur's production, "Woman," are going to get their full quota of made-in-America productions, if Mr. Clerget's present plans go through.

Mr. Clerget is the owner of two of the largest motion picture theatres in Brussels, Belgium, and has theatre holdings in other parts of that country. He is planning to present in his houses "The Bluebird," "Prunella," "Barbary Sheep," "A Poor Little Rich Girl," "Trilby," "The Rise of Jenny Cushing," directed by Mr. Tourneur, and Mr. Tourneur's independent productions, "Sporting Life" and "The Whip," which he directed for William A. Brady. The author of "The Bluebird," Maurice Maeterlinck, is a Belgian playwright of world renown, and through Mr. Clerget's efforts his work is to be given to his native land through the medium of the American film.

"The American motion picture is the thing," said Mr. Clerget, "and I am going to show them in my theatres." A season or two ago Mr. Clerget appeared in "Perret, the Prodigal."

In and Out of West Coast Studios

Universal Newsettes

Dorothy Phillips, who was reported last week as ill with influenza, is rapidly recuperating, it was announced this week from the Universal studios. Miss Phillips only recently returned from a trip East, the influenza attack coming just after she had arrived in Los Angeles. Miss Phillips believes she contracted the malady while on the train. In the meantime Director Allen Holubar is casting about for a suitable vehicle for her to follow "The Heart of Humanity" picture that is said to be one of the best in which Miss Phillips has ever been starred.

Monroe Salisbury's next picture will be titled "The Great White Darkness." It was written by Stuart Paton and Jack Clymer. He will have two leading women, Helen Eddy, who last appeared with him in "Winner Take All," and Claire Anderson, formerly with Triangle. Others who are prominent in the supporting cast are Alfred Allen, character actor; Arthur Maude, an English player. Paul Powell is the director, and among some of the first scenes to be filmed were snow scenes made at Pine Crest.

Kenneth Harlan, who played opposite Mae Murray, Mary MacLaren and Carmel Myers in a number of their recent releases, after several months in the army, has returned to Southern California.

Eddie Polo, while waiting for his next serial vehicle to be selected, is producing a two-reel western, called a "Prisoner for Life."

About Metro Players

"The Red Lantern," probably the most pretentious production ever filmed at the Metro studios, in which Madame Nazimova is the star, was completed this week. The picture will be titled immediately, and the cutting will proceed this week. "The Red Lantern" was made under the direction of Albert Capellani, and was personally supervised by Director General Maxwell Karger. Two players having important parts in the production are Noah Beery and Darrell Foss. Beery interprets the role of Sam Wang, leader of the Boxer revolution in China, around which the story has been written. During the process of filming the production some notable sets were constructed and some gigantic street scenes were filmed. Madame Nazimova will rest for two weeks, it is announced, before starting a new picture. The nature of her next subject has not been announced.

MORE THAN EVER

Coast Studios as Busy as Proverbial Busy Bee

PRODUCTION at the various Los Angeles studios continues full swing and more companies are now working than at any time since the beginning of the new year. Cecil B. De Mille has begun production on the story he recently purchased in New York from Edgar Selwyn, producer and playwright. Madame Nazimova has finished her notable production, "The Red Lantern," at the Metro studios. These two events constitute two high lights in production circles this week.

Production at Universal City continues active. Three important features with well-known stars are in progress, and two Universal serials for 1919 are under way. Rupert Julian, Monroe Salisbury, Eddie Polo, Priscilla Dean, James J. Corbett, Fay Tincher are some of the stars who are busy this week.

William S. Hart has started a new picture, his latest selection being something new—a western. Production continues in a lively fashion at both the Ince and Goldwyn studios at Culver City. Mary Pickford, who has been ill for nearly three weeks with influenza, this week returned to her studios and resumed production on "Daddy Long Legs." Several film plays are being made at the Fox studios and Vitagraph reports an unusually busy program.

producing in the East, will leave this week for Los Angeles, according to information received by the West Coast Metro studios. Preparations are being made for her coming, and she will receive a real welcome from the Los Angeles film colony, it is understood.

Bert Lytell is this week finishing his first picture for Metro since returning from the officers' training camp at Fort McArthur, Waco, Texas. The title of the play is "The Blind Man's Eyes." John Ince is the director. Some of the final scenes were made in a specially constructed Pullman car, which was operated on one of the big stages at the Metro plant. Some real Pullman scenes were made, however, on the Southern Pacific railway just a few miles from Los Angeles.

Fox Studio Doings

The Frank Lloyd company, which went to San Francisco last week to film some scenes in the new picture in which Gladys Brockwell is the star, has returned from the North and was this week shooting scenes on the Fox lot. The picture has been temporarily titled "Fifty-Fifty." Herbert Hayes is playing the male lead.

One of the new Sunshine comedies now being produced at the Fox studios has been titled "High Life in Drill." The subject is being filmed under the direction of Fred Fishback.

The newest production in which Madeline Traverse is playing, entitled "Madame Rouge," will be finished early next week, it has been announced. Harry Millarde is the director.

Al Ray, who was recently engaged by the Fox forces, this week began production on his first picture for the Fox Film Corporation. The working title is "Up Against It," and the play is being produced under the direction of Art Rosson. It is a comedy drama, and Elinor Sair will be Mr. Ray's leading woman.

The newest play in which Tom Mix is appearing before the camera for Fox, originally titled "The Highgrader," has been changed to "Fighting for Gold." The new title will in all probability be the releasing title for the play, it is said, which is a strong western subject. Teddy Sampson is leading woman, and Edward Le Saint is the director.

Paramount-Artcraft

After many weeks of preparation, and following many conferences between author and producer, Cecil B. De Mille last Tuesday began production of Edgar Selwyn's play that was intended originally for a stage production. The first scenes were shot at the Lasky studios in Hollywood, but did not indicate in the main the nature of the story. Two of the principal people who will appear in the cast are Elliot Dexter and Gloria Swanson. The production will be an Artcraft special, and much thought and detail will be devoted to making it one of Mr. De Mille's greatest pictures, it is understood. It will be recalled that at the end of last year Mr. De Mille, while in New York, talked with Mr. Selwyn about the proposed new play. Upon learning its plot the Lasky director general promptly made arrangements for the story to be made into a film play instead of a stage play.

Here and There

Lieut. Carlisle Robinson, who left the publicity work for Charlie Chaplin to enter the officers' training camp at Little Rock, Ark., is back at the Chaplin studios in his former capacity as director of publicity. He returned to the Chaplin studios this week.

Bessie Barriscale's new picture, "Hearts Asleep," is about half finished. Howard Hickman is her director, and the play is the third production on her new contract with Robertson-Cole.

Ruth Roland, who is now producing her second serial for Pathe which is entitled "The Tiger Face," is now working in the second and fourth episodes of the play. The production is being made at the Diando studios in Glendale. It is said that Miss Roland, when this serial is completed, will begin work on another for Pathe, the Pathe company having an option on her services for a third serial.

The Alma Rubens company, in which Miss Rubens is the moving spirit, has reached the second week's production in her newest play for her own company. The production was this week titled "Diana of the Green Van." It is a Gypsy story.

Hayes Hunter, a New York director, who produced Zane Gray's "The Border Legion," now being released by Goldwyn, has arrived in Los Angeles and will soon begin the production of another Zane Gray story for Ben Hampton, it is announced, and will work at the Robert Brunton studios.

A new juvenile lead is to be introduced to the motion picture public by Thomas H. Ince. He is Lloyd Hughes, aged 21 years, who is playing in a current production with Enid Bennett. He was born at Bisbee, Ariz., and was educated at the Polytechnic High School in Los Angeles. He has been playing small parts in pictures when recently he attracted the attention of Mr. Ince.

Although Douglas Fairbanks has been engaged intermittently during the past ten days on his new filmplay, he encountered a peculiar experience this week when his automobile dashed into a car operated by a Ventura school teacher, and the school teacher refused to accept any damages. The teacher's final reply to Fairbanks was substantially as follows: "When I tell the youngsters in my school that my automobile was struck by the machine driven by Fairbanks I shall be a hero. Therefore, forget the damages."

D. W. Griffith has used three different babies in "The Mother and the Law," all playing the same part, and as the film is not yet on the market, he may have a dozen or more. Who can tell? It was this way. Right after finishing "The Clansman," he made "The Mother and the Law," then decided to make the spectacle for that film to be a part of. By the time he had the spectacle completed, he found the need of a change or two in scenes in which the baby appeared, and so remade all the baby scenes with another baby, that was for "Intolerance." When he decided, recently, to release "The Mother and the Law" as a separate film play, he found he needed more baby scenes, and so another baby was secured because the other two were well along in years. It is hinted that the first one that worked in this part may now be a Griffith star, but there are not records to prove this. Anyway, we all hope "The Mother and the Law" will be released shortly, so that Dave won't have any new ideas and go and find another baby to go and make the scenes all over.

Punch Holes

IN the past we have hammered away on the mal-treatment of film which is still very prevalent but which must be stopped. We have had some success through our efforts and through the National Anti-Misframe League but it has been an uphill fight and will continue to be so till all projectionists are lined up together determined to change things.

Why the exchange should start a brand new film out with punch marks seems absurd but it is done; or why a right minded projectionist should go over a film before showing it and mutilate it by punching holes at the end of every reel is beyond reason.

It looks as though it were a case of weak mindedness for would it not be just as simple for the exchange to mark on the band or insert a card in the film can stating on what title the change over should be made?

This would not necessitate any closer attention to the screen then is necessary when watching for punch holes though by this method many feet of film would be saved. The up-to-date and progressive projectionist will not allow punched film to pass through his machine. He, therefore, outs frames from every reel thus shortening the footage and by degrees spoiling the continuity of the story.

The only way to avoid this vandalism is by having the projectionists as a body or through the theatre managers carry on an active campaign against the practice in the exchanges. If the complaints are loud enough and long enough the practice will be discontinued and we will have un-mutilated film circulated.

The projectionists must also get in line behind the movement and stop the practices which are altogether too prevalent in the theatres themselves when scenes are out as souvenirs and film is otherwise mal-treated.

If the theatres will carry on their campaign with the exchanges and send carbon of their letters to us, we will take up the fight directly with the main offices of the companies in question. In this way this movement will be the more rapidly advanced and results achieved.

The following came in from Mr. Werlan and is worth no little attention:

DIRECT FROM THE PROJECTIONIST

There has been a big talk concerning the waste of perfectly good film and providing operators and producers would work together it would be reduced to a minimum.

First of all, it is manufacturing or exchange reels which are always punched in the beginning of each reel. Why not save the film and punch the numbers in the leaders instead of in the scenes? Every operator who has the interest of his profession and of the I. A. T. S. E. at heart will not project a reel with punch-holes in it; he will cut them out.

I am running pictures seven days every week and cut at least forty to fifty exchange numbers out of the film, which cover from two to four frames. Figuring three frames every time, it would be on the average eight or nine perfectly good feet of film. Who is to blame for this waste? The operator, who spends his own free time in going over his show, or the producer? Another thing punch-holes. I have found punch-holes in subtitles where the operator could have well used the reading of the title as change-over mark, instead of misusing the film.

I have screened brand new prints but there are very few which don't require patching up. Don't blame operators for using change-over marks. I have changed over on one single cross scratched in the upper left hand corner of one frame. If the operator attends his business he doesn't need more than one mark. I have seen scenes practically ruined, eight frames and a punch-hole in every one of them. If an operator can't make a good change over on one mark, providing he attends to his business, he isn't worthy to be in the booth. Your Anti-Misframe League has, without doubt, done very much good, as many small town kid operators are keeping their pledge, but if we want to cut the mark to a minimum it can only be done if we have the cooperation of Mr. Producer. If a fellow considers film conditions, it isn't any wonder that rentals are high, considering waste and misuse. I think in so far as rentals are concerned, there's no kick coming. Keep up your good work with the N. A. M. L. but if the News intends to do it right, it will mean to go where the waste started—in the producer's office.

A. B. WERLAN,
I. A. T. S. E.

What are your opinions on this subject? Is the film you show in this condition? What are you doing to help change things? It is important to you therefore to get active.

E. K. GILLET.

Questions
Answered*Shall Projectionists Be Classified?*

PROJECTION is the most important consideration facing the theatre owner today. It is a problem which he cannot overlook or neglect, yet we find projection conditions which are admittedly bad and in many cases are so acknowledged by the very men in the projection room themselves.

Better, more careful, more conscientious men than we find in many places today must be brought into the industry and put in charge. The vandals, the careless, the clock-watcher, must be done away with and the man who is proud of the results which he puts on the screen must take his place.

Gentlemen, the conditions are serious; how they are to be overcome is a question which must be solved by the men themselves. The union can do a great deal of good or a great deal of harm, depending on its attitude. They must clean up their own ranks. It is a duty they owe to themselves for their own future, while the big future of the motion picture depends upon their action.

The exhibitor has the right to know the ability of the man he hires from the union, just as much as he has the right to know how much he must pay the projectionist each week.

Here is what Mr. Simmons thinks. What do you think?:

Mr. E. K. Gillett, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Dear Sir:

The opportunity of reaching the projectionists of the country through the pages of such an excellent publication as MOTION PICTURE NEWS is something to be realized and used with gratitude by every man who is connected with the projection end of so great an industry as the production and presentation of motion pictures. There has come a time when every honest and legitimate labor-employing concern is crying, "Give use efficient and capable workmen."

It is the trumpet call for organized labor and must and will be heeded. It means that the men who employ labor are fast realizing the importance of having competent skilled workmen turn out their work and they are willing to pay for it accordingly. (People of socialistic ideas and inclinations can pass over this article.)

Efficiency in our daily occupations is something to be attained and retained and it will bring its own remuneration. Inefficiency is a menace to civilization, a stumbling block to progress and will forever hold the man down who does not overcome it. Luck or chance may in rare cases remove your financial or social embarrassment, but believe me, men, it will take your own brain and your own efforts to make you efficient and to make you actually worth an increase in pay, and don't you forget it.

When you read of, or enter a magnificent structure that has been built for the presentation of motion pictures, don't think of the man in charge of the projection and remark to yourself or your friend, "Lucky dog." He is, I'll admit, a lucky man, but lucky in that he has made himself fit to be there by hard work, study and strict attention to his profession. He was not picked at random from a bunch of applicants and would-be projectionists, but he was picked because he knew his business. People are getting over the habit of putting the most important part of a half-million dollar business in charge of an incompetent. The time is not far distant when there will be no room for the second-rater. It will be a question of "Are you a projectionist or are you not?" Now is the golden opportunity, the time to qualify.

Three things are of paramount importance in this age and projectionists will do well to give thought to them. They are qualification, organization and thrift. Organization must stand for qualification and thrift will keep both alive.

Classification of the projectionists has some good points and some bad ones. Candidly, we as a union or as a professional body have no right to draw a line between the first and second rate projectionist, permitting the former to work in the cities and putting the latter in the smaller towns for the very good reason that there are first rate theatres and first rate exhibitors and first rate patrons whose good United States money entitles them to first rate projection in the smaller towns. First rate projection cannot be had with a second rate projectionist in the projection room. However, classification on a basis of qualification can be made a protection to the real projectionist and at the same time protect the small town exhibitor by a method similar to that which our schools and colleges employ.

Our esteemed brother, W. B. Allen of Local 360, has given us an expression of his views under date of February 1, 1919, and advocates a source outside of the local unions for the proposed examination and classification, contending that as the union owes allegiance to its members it is not the one to classify them according to their ability.

I offer as a reason for differing with him the following facts: It is very true that the union owes allegiance to its members, but the first principle of unionism is that it produces strength, and there is no semblance of strength in inefficiency. It naturally follows that in order to have a union made up of efficient workmen there must be a stone wall between the unqualified man and a union card. They can be admitted as second raters and be made to qualify by work and study before they are given a journeyman's working card. Then when they go to a job to fill in they go as second raters, the man employing them KNOWS he is getting a second rater, and if the man does not make good there is no reflection on the union, whereas a second rater with a journeyman's card will almost invariably throw an unfavorable reflection on the union.

Our schools and colleges are supported and maintained to a great extent by the students and the people, and therefore owe allegiance to them, but you must qualify before you can graduate and enter the business or professional world as a finished product of the institution. You are classified according to what you KNOW and not according to who you are or what you may be worth financially. If you leave before you graduate you don't get the endorsement of the school, and whoever employs you does so at his own risk, and if you prove incompetent it is your own fault.

Unionism does not want, nor is it expected, to furnish incompetents to fill positions where there is so much responsibility as in the profession of motion picture projectionist. Therefore in my opinion the union local IS the one to judge who is and who is not a competent projectionist, as its reputation depends on the quality of the work done by its members.

LEGISLATION compelling the examination of projectionists for the purpose of classification would be an insult to the intelligence of organized labor. LEGISLATION compelling the projectionist to have a LICENSE issued by the city or state would be a proper course and a protective measure. The issuing of the license should depend upon the applicant's ability to pass an examination by a qualified projectionist who is competent to determine the merits and ability of the applicant and who is familiar with the requirements.

Legislation compelling the examination and classification of all the projectionists in the country would be another big job for the army exemption boards.

The point to be seen, felt and understood by the projectionists and their respective locals is that by furnishing really competent men to fill positions in the projection rooms of the theatres of the country they have a foundation upon which to stand when asking for an increase in pay and in commanding respect from employers and brother organizations, and the whole thing finally dissolves itself into the old adage that "True worth will bring its own reward."

A great many projectionists have the idea that by spilling some of their accumulated knowledge they are taking away from their own prospects as too many competent projectionists will flood the field and make it harder to get a good position. There never was a more selfish and absolutely groundless idea. I have yet to see or hear of the man or woman who had acquired all the knowledge that could be crammed into a normal brain containing the average number of brain cells. Edison, Marconi, Alexander Bell, Ford, or any other great genius that has produced many and wonderful inventions still had several million brain cells that had never been used and never will be used. The quicker you realize that by helping others you are helping yourself and strengthening your organization the quicker you will succeed. There are millions of good ideas that are lost and untried simply because the possessor refuses to take others into his confidence.

I do not mean that when a man has a good invention he should pass it out to everybody but when you have stumbled on to something that will make your profession greater and enlighten your fellowmen, spill it.

Countless projectionists are working under conditions that should not exist simply because the other fellow that has the right idea refuses to divulge it and help his brother to better himself.

If you don't feel like giving us the benefit of your ideas, put it up for sale and let us have a chance to profit by it.

Get the idea of good fellowship and let's work together for the benefit of our profession and the industry of which we are a part.

In all sincerity, I am Yours very truly,

(Signed) LOREN C. SIMMONS,

Building Requirements in New York City

WE have been asked on a great many occasions exactly what the building requirements are in the City of New York as regards the amount of space required under the City Ordinance around a theatre building.

The following regulations give the statute requirements in clear and concise form:

In July, 1916, the Building Code was amended and Sec. 2, Sub-division 2 of section 527 of article 25 of chapter 5 of the Code of Ordinances now reads as follows:

"2. Exits to Courts. In addition to the aforesaid entrances and exits on the street, there shall be reserved for service in case of an emergency an open court or space on each side of the auditorium not bordering on a street. The unobstructed, clear width of every such open court or space shall be not less than 8 feet where the total number of persons to be accommodated in the auditorium is not over 700, increasing proportionately in width above 8 feet in the ratio of 1 foot for every 500 persons above 700 to be accommodated. Every such open court or space shall extend from each and every exit required to lead thereto, to a street or open public space and open thereon either directly or through a corridor or passage way of fireproof construction not less than 10 feet high in the clear, having an unobstructed clear width equal to that required for the open court or space and separated completely by solid walls, floors and ceilings from the building or structure through which it passes, provided that no such passage or corridor shall pass under any portion of the auditorium or stage."

There are also other provisions covering a common court between two theatres, etc.

The particular differences between this reading and the old law lies in the following points. There is substituted for the arbitrary requirements of a court, 12 feet or more in width on all three sides of a theatre building, a method of assuring proper space at the sides of the auditorium of a graduated width in proportion to the number of people to be accommodated. Attention is called, however, to the provision that this must be clear width and can-

FOR DIRECT CURRENT PROJECTION THE COLUMBIA-SILVERTIP COMBINATION

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives a light source that fills the bill in every particular. The Silvertip is a quality product that has been tried and tested by the experts of the motion picture industry. It has received the stamp of approval of the best operators in the country and is standard.

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives:

1. High current carrying capacity. The Silvertip is heavily plated, making it capable of carrying the heavy currents used in projection without harmful heating.
2. A strong, flexible light. The arc can be varied at the will of the operator, according to the density of the film within a reasonable limit of the rated amperage of the combination used. No two films are of the same density, and therefore, true artistic presentation of a picture requires a flexible light source.

Note: Silvertips are for direct current only not be encumbered with fire escapes landing in same as was a common practice under the old law. It is provided that these courts need extend only from the exit opening into it to the street thus eliminating the court at the rear. This is considered as an improvement from the standpoint of safety, and at the same time greatly conserves property as the court, 12 or 14 feet wide at the rear of a theatre, could serve no useful purpose.

The provision that these passages may lead into fireproof passages or corridors through other structures is of advantage as such a passage would be absolutely cut off from the building proper and would afford a safer passage than an open court.

In summary, as a question of area, the main features of the later provisions are that the court at the rear of a theatre may be eliminated and that the side courts need not extend the full length of the auditorium, but only so as to include the necessary legal exits. Also the reduction in minimum width of the side court from 12 feet to 8 feet.

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Chemical Fog

By J. I. Crabtree

(Reprinted from the American Annual of Photography, 1919)

IF the sensitive emulsion with which a photographic plate is coated is examined under a high power microscope, it is seen to consist of fine crystals of silver halide (chloride, bromide, iodide, etc., or complexes of these) embedded in gelatine. When light is allowed to fall upon these crystals they are affected in such a way that they are capable of being converted into metallic silver by certain chemical solutions known as developers, while the crystals not exposed to light remain unaffected. The process of converting the silver halide to metallic silver is called in chemical terms reduction, and the developer is called the reducing agent.

All reducing agents, however, are not developers. An alkaline solution of stannous chloride will reduce unexposed silver bromide, while a reducing agent like sulphurous acid does not affect it at all. Developers therefore lie between these two extremes, an ideal developer being one which completely develops all the exposed but does not begin to develop the unexposed crystals in the emulsion.

Most developers fall short of this ideal condition and develop a small proportion of the unexposed emulsion, producing a uniform veil or layer of silver over the entire plate, which has the effect of obliterating fine shadow detail and diminishing the contrast. This fog, produced by undesirable chemical action, is known as "chemical fog," and it may be measured in terms of "density" in the same way as the silver image.

The amount of chemical fog produced in any particular instance depends on the following factors:

I. The Nature of the Emulsion.

A. The Type of Emulsion.

Photographic emulsions may be divided broadly into the following classes:

High and low speed negative emulsions.

High and low speed positive emulsions (lantern slides).

High and low speed paper emulsions (bromide and gaslight).

Chemical fog occurs most frequently during the development of high speed negative emulsions, because in view of their highly sensitive nature and the infinitesimal amount of light action required to render the silver halide developable, if the developer is too energetic or not compounded correctly it will develop the unexposed crystals also.

Low speed emulsions usually give images free from chemical fog providing a suitably restrained developer is employed, though it is somewhat of an anomaly that some developers will give clean images on high speed emulsions but will fog a slow emulsion like that on a lantern slide or positive motion picture film. It is therefore desirable in all cases to adapt the developer to the emulsion.

B. The Age of the Emulsion.

On keeping, all sensitive photographic emulsions become more or less fogged, the rate of formation of the fog being hastened by heat and the presence of moisture. Precisely what change takes place when the silver halide crystals are changed from the non-developable to the developable condition is not known. A large number of theories have been propounded, though these cannot be confirmed without further experimental investigation.

C. The Previous History of the Emulsion.

A new emulsion will give fog immediately if it is exposed to certain chemical agents, such as coal gas, sulphuretted hydrogen, or the vapors from benzol, turpentine, etc. The amount of fog produced depends on the concentration of the various chemical agents, the temperature, and the time of action. It is important therefore to store all photographic plates and paper in a cool, dry, well-ventilated place.

II. The Nature of the Developer.

Fog caused by the developer is known as "developer fog." A developer usually contains four ingredients as follows:

- the developing agent (pyro, etc.)
- the accelerator (sodium carbonate, etc.)
- the preservative (sodium sulphite, etc.)
- the restrainer (potassium bromide, etc.)

The amount of chemical fog (ignoring the presence of impurities) produced by a developer on any given emulsion depends on the proportion of each ingredient present, that is, on the particular developing formula employed. Considering each ingredient individually:

(A) The common developing agents, elon, hydroquinone, pyro and paraminophenol (Kodolon) in actual practice appear to differ in their fogging power, elon and hydroquinone having a greater propensity for fog than the other two, though so far as our present knowledge goes there is little difference in the fogging power of the pure developers. The apparent differences are due either to impurities or to oxidation products of the developer formed either before or during development.

The oxidation products of paraminophenol (Kodolon) produce very little fogging action even at high temperatures, and advantage may be taken of the fact when developing under tropical conditions (see British Journal, 1917, p. 555).

The limiting proportion of the developing agent to be used in any formula can only be found by trial, though this does not usually exceed 10 grams per liter for economical reasons. Increase in the proportion of elon beyond this usually gives fog, though in the case of hydroquinone an increase in the proportion may prevent fog. The following formula will give extreme contrast on a positive emulsion without fog when used for reel development, whereas a reduction of the proportion of hydroquinone to, say, 5 grams, would give fog before any great contrast was obtained.

Hydroquinone	25 g.
Sodium Sulphite (desiccated).....	33 g.
Sodium Bisulphite.....	3.3 g.
Sodium Carbonate (desiccated).....	66 g.
Potassium Bromide.....	1.5 g.
Water to.....	1000 cc.

(B) The accelerator, in the form of carbonates or hydroxides of lithium, sodium potassium or ammonium, is added to accelerate the developing action of the developing agent. If too much is added, the developer passes from a true developer to a fogging agent, that is, its reducing power is so great that the unexposed portions of the emulsion are reduced to metallic silver also. The correct proportion of accelerator to be added in any case can only be found by trial. Amidol does not require the addition of an alkali, while in the case of hydroquinone, if sufficient sulphite is present, the proportion of sodium carbonate in many cases may be increased from 25 to 100 grams per liter, without increasing the amount of fog produced.

(C) Sulphite, in the form of sodium sulphite, bisulphite, or potassium metabisulphite, is added to prevent oxidation of the developer by the oxygen present in the air, which would otherwise cause oxidation fog. The proportion necessary to prevent undue oxidation is usually equivalent to 50 grams of sodium sulphite per liter, though if sulphite is added in considerable excess of this sulphite fog is produced.

The nature of sulphite fog has been carefully investigated by Mees and Piper (Phot. Journal, 1911, p. 226, 1912, p. 221) who found that silver bromide is appreciably soluble in sodium sulphite, so that sulphite fog is caused by the reduction to metallic silver of the silver salt dissolved away from the emulsion by the sulphite in the developer.

The proportion of sulphite used determines the keeping qualities of the developer, but if an excess is employed more or less bromide must be added to compensate for the sulphite fog otherwise produced.

(D) The restrainer in the form of sodium or potassium bromide or iodide is added to the developer when mixed in order to prevent chemical fog. In cases of known over-exposure bromide is of course added, though when mixing the developer only sufficient bromide should be added to compensate for any impurities or slight fogging tendency of the developer used.

III. Impurities in the Developer.

Impurities in the developer are the chief cause of development fog and they may be divided roughly into two classes as follows:

A. Oxidation products formed during development.

During development several oxidation processes are going on, (1) the developing agent is being oxidized by the air, and (2) the developing agent is being used up by virtue of its reducing action in changing the exposed silver salt to metallic silver. In so doing it is oxidized itself, the product formed being usually identical with that produced by aerial oxidation. The oxidation products formed in this way usually exert a powerful fogging action, especially in the case of metal and hydroquinone. The oxidation product of pyro, which is present when the pyro developer turns brown, exerts little or no fogging action except when present in strong solution.

A third oxidation process taking place is "sulphite oxidation" or the formation of sodium sulphate together with hydroquinone mono and disulphonates (Zeit. Wiss. Phot. 1913, p. 289). Sodium sulphate is not a fogging agent, while hydroquinone disulphonate exerts a protective action on the oxidation of hydroquinone (loc. cit.), so that the sulphite (if not present in excess) affects the fog produced only indirectly according to its protective action on the developing agents.

The reason why sulphite protects a developing agent from aerial oxidation is not known, it being generally supposed that the affinity between oxygen and sulphite is greater than that between oxygen and the developing agent. The life of a developer, before it gives excessive fog, depends on so many factors, such as the catalytic and anticatalytic action of the oxidation products of the developing agent and sulphite, that it is difficult to differentiate between the various effects.

It has been observed, however, that the rate of formation of fog varies in proportion with the rate of oxidation of the sulphite. Thus a small trace of copper will accelerate the rate of oxidation of a sulphite solution and produce fog in a developer, while the rate of oxidation of a pure sulphite solution decreases as the concentration increases. Taking advantage of this fact a developer formula suitable for developing motion picture positive film by the reel method (which gives fog with the common developers except glycin) was worked out by the author of this paper as follows:

The method of procedure was to fasten the film on the periphery of a small metal reel and to rotate this while dipping into a tray of the developer maintained at a constant temperature.

The following formula was taken as a working basis, and the proportion of the constituents A and B varied as follows:

Elon	.5 gram
Hydroquinone	10 "
Potassium Bromide.....	3.5 "
Sodium Sulphite (desiccated).....	A "
Sodium Carbonate (desiccated).....	B "
Water to.....	1000 cc.

Effect of Varying the Sulphite Content

While B was maintained constant and equal to 100 grams, A was varied as follows:

(A) Time for Fog on Cine Positive at 80° F.

25 grams.....	3 mins.
50 "	3½ "
75 "	5 "
100 "	6 "
125 "	7 "
150 "	6 "

Any increase in the sulphite content beyond 100 grams considerably retarded the rate of development, and as a minimum of fog was produced at this point, 100 grams was considered to be the most suitable proportion.

Effect of Varying the Carbonate Content.

A was maintained constant, equal to 100 grams, and B varied as follows:

(B) Time for Fog on Cine Positive at 80° F.

25 grams.....	3 mins.
50 "	3½ "

125	"		5	"
150	"		4½	"

The least fog is therefore produced when the content of both carbonate and sulphite is equal to 100 grams.

The most suitable formula is therefore:

Elon		0.5	grams
Hydroquinone		10	"
Potassium Bromide		3.5	"
Sodium Sulphide (desiccated)		100	"
Sodium Carbonate (desiccated)		100	"
Water to		1000	cc.

The effect of dilution of this formula was to increase fog as follows: To 100 volumes of the developer C volumes of water were added.

(C) Time for Fog on Cine Positive at 80° F.

0 vols.		5	mins.
50	"	3	"
100	"	2	"
150	"	2½	"
200	"	3	"

In practice on the large scale the above developer was found to give positives remarkably free from fog even after continual use with the temperature of the developer and surrounding atmosphere at 80° F.

It was found that if the developer was splashed on the floor during working, this crystallized out and caused trouble due to particles of sulphite and carbonate dust settled on the film. This was overcome by replacing the sodium carbonate by an equal weight of desiccated potassium carbonate, since owing to the deliquescent nature of the latter, any liquid splashed around did not dry up but remained moist. The developer containing potassium carbonate was also somewhat more energetic than the one containing sodium carbonate.

The increase of the fogging action on dilution is probably due both to the increased rate of oxidation of the sulphite on dilution, and to the increased rate of penetration of the developer, since on dilution, the velocity of development increased also.

The above developer is more economical than the developer on page three, which contains more hydroquinone but less sulphite. The non-fogging properties of this developer are probably due to the anticatalytic action of the products of oxidation of the hydroquinone on the rate of oxidation of the sulphite and the hydroquinone.

A possible explanation of the cause of excessive fog during reel development is the heat produced by the oxidation of the sulphite, the finely divided silver image possibly acting in the same way as finely divided platinum which accelerates the rate of oxidation of coal gas in the case of the familiar gas lighter.

B. Oxidation Products Formed While Mixing the Developer.

Although a developer formula usually contains enough sulphite to prevent excessive aerial oxidation during development, oxidation products may be formed during mixing if the developer is not mixed correctly. It is important to observe the following rules:

(1) Dissolve the preservative before adding the developing agent.

(2) Thoroughly dissolve the developing agent before adding the carbonate.

(3) Mix the developer as cold as possible.

If the developing agent is dissolved first before adding the sulphite, the small amount of dissolved air in the water is sufficient to form enough oxidation product to cause fog.

In the case of elon, add only a small portion of sulphite first, then dissolve the elon and add the remainder of the sulphite. This procedure is necessary because elon forms a difficultly soluble compound with sulphite and will therefore not dissolve readily in a cold strong solution.

If the carbonate is added to the solution before the developing agent is dissolved, each crystal becomes oxidized at the surface, thus causing fog.

How to Play for Western Dramas on the Screen

WESTERN railroad and outdoor pictures in general are crowded with vivid action and dramatic incidents. In their musical treatment, absolute synchronization and intelligent employ of contrasting music is the great cue to success. In choosing music for Western pictures, musicians should first decide which kind of action predominates in the picture (slow or rapid tempos). From this standpoint only, the musician should make his choice. Once he has done so, it is in very few cases necessary to change music for very short scenes, and a change of tempo is more than sufficient.

A musical setting selected in such a manner will prove successful, the secret of its success being synchronization; the welding of picture movement and music movement, the matching of picture mood and music mood, the merging of picture and music in a unified effect.

Mere timing is not the true secret of a successful musical setting. It has its decided advantages, but its evident limitations as well. Adaptability, quickness in handling unforeseen contingencies which call for instantaneous decisions on the part of a musician and sense of fitness for local color are far more important than careful timing. As for instance, in a railroad hold-up, where the bandits are lurking in ambush, waiting for the train to flash by, a mysterioso can be effectively employed, but with the escape of the bandits, a galop or hurry is absolutely necessary.

We are all aware of the fact that the tempo of very few mysteriosos can be changed into a hurry or galop, and a solution of the problem would be to let the vivid action of the picture predominate. In such instances, a galop or hurry played slow and pp. during the first mentioned scene and changing into a regular galop tempo during the bandits' escape would be the only perfect and correct selection of music. This, of course, is only one of the many instances which substantially prove that it is of vital importance to first definitely decide which action predominates in the picture (slow or vivid), before selecting the music.

Another very important factor in Western pictures is the bar-room dancing scenes, especially in such productions where the film director has not considered music in assembling his picture. In general it is not difficult to find music whose character will adequately express the thought of the picture, but again the real problem is one of synchronization. It is mainly in interrupted dance scenes that the leader is most apt to confront difficulties. Here again very careful judgment is necessary before deciding on the selection of music. The predominating situation must again be the deciding factor. In many instances fights are the finale of such dancing scenes. In such a case, the length of the fight is the decisive factor of the character of the music to be performed. If such a fight is short, effects of shots of tympany rolls produced during the playing of the dancing number is sufficient, but in a case where the fight is long, a hurry is a necessity. Frequently, during such long fights, flashes of short dancing scenes are cut in. If the musical setting is based upon the principle that the predominating action decides the selection of music, it is not advisable to use dancing numbers for very short flashes, but to simply play a hurry with a mezzo voce effect, as a musical background, and to break forth again in full whenever the fighting scenes are shown.

This is but another illustration that synchronization is the secret of a proper musical accompaniment, especially for Western drama. It is true every musician has his own detailed method of working out his musical synchronization, but there can only be one method in playing Western dramas, and this is PREDOMINATING action must decide the character of music.—THE EDITORS.

"Victorious Democracy," the Latest Publication of Belwin, Inc.

TRUE to their reputation, Belwin, Inc., have just secured another composition of exceptionally standard merits entitled "Victorious Democracy," by that composer of world-wide reputation, Gaston Borch. The name implies that this number has been issued at a most appropriate time, and is consistent with the feelings of the American public. It is suitably described as a Grande Fantaisie Triomphale.

"Victorious Democracy" was inspired by America's glorious ideals and the immortal words of President Wilson, "To Make the World Safe for Democracy."

Amid the distant rumble of war and the tramp, tramp, of moving troops is heard the answering sympathy from America, suggested by patriotic excerpts in symphonic form. Then comes the cry of tortured Belgium, the mobilization of France and Great Britain and finally America's entrance, typified by the glorious "Star Spangled Banner," in which is interwoven the "Marseillaise," leading to a thrilling and dramatic finale.

Vandersloot Music Publishing Co. Not Members of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers

IN the January 25 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, a list of those publishers who are not members of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, and whose music therefore can be freely performed in public, was printed. However, through an oversight, the name of the Vandersloot Music Publishing Co. was omitted and we herewith desire to rectify our mistake.

The Vandersloot Music Publishing Co. are not members of the American Society, and desire us to inform our readers that they have a large catalog of orchestra, band and sheet music which is particularly adapted to their needs, and is also free from any tax or license.

New Theatre for Missouri Capital

JEFFERSON CITY, the capital of Missouri, is to have a new $75,000 motion picture theatre, according to announcement just made by William Mueller, manager of the Jefferson theatre. He has just acquired a piece of property adjoining the Walther-Eydmore Building, 56 feet wide and 109 feet deep. While the plans have not been completed, it is expected that the new house will seat not less than 2,500.

Work on the theatre will begin shortly. It is expected that Eastern capital will be interested. Mr. Mueller will retain the management of the Jefferson, operating the two houses.

Theatres Worth While

Looking from and toward the stage in the Theatre de Luxe, Detroit

Model Neighborhood House for Detroit

WITH the opening of the Theatre de Luxe in November, Detroit acquired one of the model neighborhood theatres of the country. This modern house, which is under the management of A. J. Moeller, is located at Kercheval and Parkview avenues.

The building, which is of brick and terra cotta, occupies a plot 140 by 80 feet and seats 1,800 people. The front of the theatre is in light terra cotta with a large marquee lighted with two large flashing electric lights. There is a lobby 75 by 40 and a foyer of the same size.

The general interior decorations are those of the Adam period, carried out in pearl gray and ivory, with blue velvet hangings and carpets. The foyer is finished in marble.

The emphatic note that strikes the senses on entering the magnificently proportioned foyer, which extends the full width of the block between Kercheval and Vincennes avenues, is the luxuriant tone of the appointments. The delightful appearance of this long vista of cozy nooks and lounges has been achieved without conceding one iota to ostentation. The use of wicker furniture, upholstered with soft cushions in floral designs and banked at intervals with splendid tub plants and fernery, obviates the over-ornate.

Underneath the hippodrome tiers of seats in the auditorium and facing the foyer, another surprise is encountered, where milady may wait in semi-seclusion amid the settings of a well-ordered drawing room.

Improved washed air is used for the ventilation, the air being changed every five minutes. Steam and combination heated washed air is also installed. The lighting system is direct, with a perfectly controlled system of lights for the entire theatre and stage.

Two Powers 6-B machines are used for a throw of 122 feet to a Velvet Gold Fibre screen.

Lobby display fixtures consist of cream enameled wood frames, with all of the exterior frames in mahogany.

At the right the luxurious foyer and the special stage setting of the Theatre de Luxe

"Midnight Patrol"

(Thomas Ince-Select—5 Reels—Directed by Irving V. Willat)

IF you handle this picture right, there is no reason in the world why you shouldn't stand them up for twice the number of days you run a regular program picture. Almost every element that goes to make a picture distinctive has been embodied in "The Midnight Patrol." The feelings of a spectator are excited to a high pitch; while his pleasurable emotions are stirred in the same manner a cyclone stirs a forest.

The chief aim of this picture is to show the better side of a policeman; also the dangers that lurk around him in the performance of his duty to protect our lives.

Hardly a week passes by that one or more of the releases don't deal with the black sheep of the force; and if I am not mistaken, this is the first time in the feature life of the motion picture industry that the conscientious policeman has been given a fair deal; his human side is convincingly depicted.

At the opening of the picture, and before the main story starts, four different incidents are shown how a policeman performs his duty. The one in particular, which shows him climbing the rising drawbridge to save a little boy who was caught there while bringing his father's dinner pail; then his jumping into the river from a dizzy height, where the boy had fallen, and rescuing him, is very thrilling.

The main story is built around a western Chinatown, where opium smuggling and white slave traffic is flourishing; it shows underground passages and trap doors and other devices where the kidnapers hide their victims. The raid of the police force; also the hero's entering there, risking his life to save some victims, are very exciting.

The picture might prove a little strong for few audiences; but if this fact is no bar to your booking it, there is no other reason why you should not do so, because the picture is never vulgar. It should not offend even your most discriminating patron.

If you book this picture, the best way to handle it is to get the co-operation of your local police force. Explain to them what it is and I am sure they will be glad to co-operate with you. You may even make arrangements to give them part of the receipts. Thus you could have them sell tickets for you. Length, 5 reels. —P. S. Harrison.

"Hoop-La," with Billie Rhodes (National Film-Robertson-Cole—5 Reels)

BY all rules of the game, "Hoop-La" should confirm the rights of Billie Rhodes as a star. She is so charming in this picture, and her acting is so sincere and convincing, that she will undoubtedly make a strong impression upon your patrons.

As to the entertaining qualities of the picture, they are so good that, were it possible for every picture released to come up to the standard of this one, the number of picturegoers would treble within a short time.

There are so many good features in it that you could bring out in your advertising campaign, that it is hardly possible to put them all in a review without making it almost too long to read. One of the many is the way the star puts over the comedy touches; she couldn't be more natural; and the laughs she creates could not be more hearty.

Another one is the circus scenes that make up the first two reels almost exclusively; these scenes are complete in every detail—so complete that the illusion they create is that of being actually present in a circus.

A further feature is the dog used all the way through the picture; he is almost human. He follows his mistress and her kind-hearted guardian wherever they go; and he shows such a strong attachment for them that you can't help loving him. At times he appears with a cap on his head that makes him look very funny. He should delight children as well as grown ups.

A still further feature is the pathetic touches embodied in many of the situations.

The action of the plot is steady; the acting of the supporting cast, fine; the direction as good as could be desired; and as it is a clean picture, it should give excellent satisfaction. Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Four Outing-Chester Subjects

(1 Reel Each—Released Through First National)

It would be difficult to pick a winner from the quartette of one-reel Outing-Chester subjects, shown for review this week—they're all winners. But the one that stands a bit forward in the limelight is a subject titled "Teddy Bears," with the late Colonel Roosevelt shown on a visit to one of our Southern Coast bird preserves.

The camera has caught the late Colonel, standing on elevated ground, with countless inmates of the preserve flying about him. He is standing with bared head, presumably paying homage to his feathered friends and to Nature, which he loved so well. Those who see this picture of our ex-President will never forget it.

Second honors go to "From Scales to Antlers," scenes of which were "shot" in the Northwestern Quebec region of Canada on the Atikamek. This offering is remarkable for two reasons—first because of the intimate views which have been obtained by W. O. Runcie, cameraman, of the bull and cow moose. In one scene he has caught a giant bull moose with his head under water feasting on the tender water-lily roots. The cameraman's canoe approaches within a few feet of the giant of the forest before he detects the presence. And then a most interesting shot has been obtained of the big fellow tearing through the water to the shore and into the forest.

"OUT OF THE FOG"—NAZIMOVA

"Triumph of the Pictorial Art" Is Verdict on This Production

ONCE in a while there comes along a splendid combination of drama and star. Such a one is "Out of the Fog," in which Mme. Nazimova is presented. The power of the original play by H. Adams Austin, entitled "Ception Shoals," in which the same star appeared on the speaking stage, can hardly be summed up in plain type. Its wonderful character drawing and its sharp conflict of human wills, together with the mental and physical rebirth of Eve who has been confined all her life on a distant lighthouse island, has been transferred to the screen in all its amazing significance. Nazimova's portrayal of the twenty-year-old girl is a thing of the utmost art. The very light of youth shines from her eyes and she undergoes the transition at her awakening with a skill that completely absorbs the spectator.

Mayhap it is that Nazimova is so fine in this because she knew the part so thoroughly from the stage. But at any rate it is a great performance, one that leaves no room for doubt regarding her rank in the files of screen actresses. Charles Bryant is a suitable hero, Henry Harmon gives a remarkably well sustained performance as the religious fanatic and Tom Blake's Jim Smoot, the hardened sailor, is a characterization of skill.

There is not room here to delve into the wonderful force of the Adams play. We feel confident that the intelligent motion picture going public will find in it something of an oasis in a desert of less artistic productions. The production that Albert Capellani has given it includes an ideal setting, rare photographic effects and reveals a taste and discrimination in the handling of the many high lights that is admirable. Our only fault with the whole production, and perhaps this should not be charged to the director, is that the first two reels which are apart from the body of the drama and serve the single purpose of planting the cause for Coffin's fanaticism, should have been accelerated slightly.

But as for "Out of the Fog" as a whole, it is so intensely dramatic, so skilfully acted and so intelligently produced that it easily ranks as one of the triumphs of the pictorial art.—Length, 7 reels.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Mme. Nazimova will be presented at the theatre on _____ of _____ week in her latest production entitled "Out of the Fog." The management feels great pride in being able to offer this picture to its patrons, for it is one of the very few rare gems that filter through to the motion picture screen. Adapted from H. Austin Adams' play by the name of "Ception Shoals" in which Mme. Nazimova was also seen on the stage, it presents a remarkable study of the elemental emotions in a young girl to whom, at twenty, are revealed for the first time the miracles of life.

To delve into the details of the story here would be a gross injustice to the art of the picture itself. It tells its simple story so directly, and with such consummate art that it fairly defies repetition in cold type. Mme. Nazimova is a revelation in the role of the girl whose fanatical uncle has reared her on a distant lighthouse island and has never permitted her to set eyes on any other human but himself. She shows us the vital spark of life in her brilliant rendition of the part and her awakening to the momentous secrets of life and living, are marked by the realest yet subtlest of expressions.

The star receives brilliant support from Charles Bryant, Henry Harmon and Tom Blake among others. The picture was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Albert Capellani and produced by M. Capellani. The production has given the drama is identically in tune with it and from the standpoint of photography and appropriate scenic investiture "Out of the Fog" remains in a class by itself.

CATCH LINES

Mme. Nazimova in a screen version of "Ception Shoals," one of her famous successes on the speaking stage. By all odds see this unusual photodrama—it is one of the rare gems of the art.

The story of a girl reared on the barren shoals of a far-off lighthouse from whom the mysteries of life were withheld for twenty years. See her mental and physical re-birth in the startling and wonderful dramatic offering "Out of the Fog."

Nazimova, the screen's supreme actress in a photodrama of unusual artistic distinction and merit. It is based on her stage success entitled, "Ception Shoals" and reveals her in her greatest character.

The perfect picture of a young girl, unlearned and of the sea—her awakening portrayed with tremendous power in "Out of the Fog."

THE STORY

In a storm at sea Luke Allen is lost and Faith Coffin mourns for him, for he was her lover and she had given herself to him. Her brother, Job, a religious fanatic, determined that she shall be punished for her sin, takes her to a lonely lighthouse on "Ception Shoals. Here her child is born, but Job's fanaticism, which takes the form of cruelty, is more than Faith can bear and she finally leaps from the top of the lighthouse into the sea.

Job rears the young girl until she attains the full bloom of youth. Yet she is in ignorance of life. Job intends to keep her from all men, to punish her for her mother's sin. He attempts to hide her when the lighter arrives on its infrequent trips to the shoals, but one time Jim Smoot, a brute, discovers her, and kisses her. He is called away before harm is done, but this is the beginning of Eve's awakening. Later when a yacht strikes the shoals and she makes the acquaintance of its occupants, Philip Blake, a wanderer, and the widowed wife of the first mate who has given birth to a child, her eyes are opened wider.

It is Blake who arouses in Eve the desire to love, and she arouses within him a love that never before has been touched. After a stay at the shoals, during which time Job lives in mortal fear that Eve will find a true happiness, Blake leaves to take the mother home, promising to return as soon as this mission is accomplished. The days pass wearily for Eve. Job intercepts Blake's letters and finally when the girl joyfully hears the ringing of the yacht's bell, he locks her in the tower saying that she has gone mad. He tells Blake that she is dead. Smoot, now Blake's mate, returns to the lighthouse when Job has released Eve. The old man himself is now locked in the tower and Smoot savagely attacks the girl. Her cries bring Blake to the rescue. When the tower door is open they find Job dead, a victim of his own wild frenzy on hearing the distressed cries of Eve. And with his end comes peace and happiness for Eve and Blake.

"LUCK AND PLUCK"—FOX

Stunts and Speed Characterize George Walsh's Latest

GEORGE WALSH is after them again. "Them" meaning that crowd of fellows who are always after the papers—sometimes they are crooks and sometimes they are German spies—this time they belong to the latter species. And, of course, they are quite harmless when the athletic Walsh gets after them. In the last scene he handles at least twenty and has a bit of energy to spare when they all decorate the floor.

The star performs a good many stunts that give proof of his strength and physical prowess. He chases a squirrel all over the park, up trees and down, rescues a lady on a runaway horse, undertakes porch-climbing, etc. And when it's all over he has saved the girl from the leading spy and discarded his old life forever—for, truth to tell, the star plays a crook.

At least "Luck and Pluck" moves rapidly. The director, Edward Dillon, has seen to that. In fact, speed seems to have been the element striven for—the comedy is somewhat neglected and when attempted doesn't always register.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 2.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Joe Grim, alias "Velvet".....George Walsh
 Laura White.....Virginia Lee
 Her Father.....Joe Smiley
 Karl Richter.....George Fisher
 Countess Briand.....Corinne Uzzelle
 "Velvet's" Valet.....George Halpin
 Story by George Scarborough.
 Direction by Edward Dillon.

SUGGESTIONS

Inasmuch as German spies are "kidded" along throughout this production, it might be a good plan to adopt this course in your advertising. Compare their blundering stupidity with the pep and action of George Walsh. A line such as "An American crook proves the better of a whole band of German spies" would sum up the substance of the picture is fairly good style and at the same time it helps to give an original twist to the usual spy stuff.

However, if you think your public is scared away by the announcement of the spy picture, leave it out altogether and advertise "Luck and Pluck" as another presentation of George Walsh's athletics and thrilling stunts with plenty of romance on the side, etc. There is sufficient material in the five reels to base this sort of advertising on, for "Luck and Pluck" is by no means dominated by the spy stuff.

The title of the film has a good catch to it. Advertising might be shaped in a horseshoe to carry its meaning even further.

AD TALK

George Walsh, William Fox's athletic star, will be seen in his latest picture entitled "Luck and Pluck" at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week. Written by George Scarborough and produced under the direction of Edward Dillon, this picture tells the story of a safe-cracker who had it all planned to loot the sub-treasury in Wall Street, New York City. It is during the day and Joe, the gentleman in question, doesn't feel quite easy about pulling the job in sunlight, so he hies himself to the park, there to bide his time until evening shadows fall.

In the park events happen which change his plans. Joe becomes exceedingly angry when a squirrel makes off with his bag of peanuts and gives chase to the amateur robber. He pursues him all over the stately trees of the park, but the creature of fur leads him a hopeless chase. That is hopeless in one respect. Joe discovers that it is beyond a safe-cracker's pale to catch a squirrel, but he also learns the peculiar movements of Fate. For while perched high in a tree and in despair as well, Joe sees a runaway coming along the bridle-path with one Laura White mounted thereupon. Joe effects a rescue and thereafter decides to go straight—reform forever after.

How this decision leads him an existence equally as strenuous as his previous chosen profession occupies the rest of "Luck and Pluck." The action is filled with the fine Walsh stunts which the star performs so easily. It moves rapidly and Director Dillon has managed to instill many a laugh and many a thrill into it.

CATCH LINES

George Walsh in his latest picture of stunts and laughs—a whirlwind film in which a safe-cracker turns his attention to German spies and proves that even a crook is smarter than enemy agents.

You just have to pardon "Velvet" Joe Grim—he was a crook all right and had even planned to rob the sub-treasury, but when German spies hove into view he decided to quit working against the law and lend a helping hand to his country instead; his success forms the thrilling and amusing picture, "Luck and Pluck."

He was chasing squirrels in the park just like a regular nut when a runaway horse went tearing by carrying Laura White on its back. Joe quit the pursuit of the elusive squirrel and captured the horse. Then and there he decided to go straight—how he accomplished this is excitingly told in "Luck and Pluck," the latest George Walsh comedy-drama.

"Luck and Pluck" contains stunts that it doesn't seem possible a human being could perform. George Walsh is never afraid to take a chance.

"ROMANCE AND ARABELLA"—SELECT

Good Star Saves Weak Story; Romance Is Keynote

THE popularity of the star, due to her personal charms and fine acting, will no doubt help draw you a good patronage; but the story is somewhat weak.

The plot is based on the stage play of the same name, but it is hardly strong enough for a picture entertainment. It does not stir the feelings, nor arouse any of the deep emotions.

Romance is the theme. During the unfolding of the plot, the heroine, a young girl of highly romantic disposition, changes lovers as fast as she changes her dresses. In time, she realizes that her character is unstable; so she determines to stick it out and marry her new love, an old doctor. But at the last minute, she turns him down because he was too late for the wedding. In the end, she marries the young man who always loved her and was patiently waiting for the time when she would become firm in disposition.

The picture is clean and well produced; it should please the women more than it would the men.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison:

THE CAST

Arabella Cadenhouse.....Constance Talmadge
Bill.....Harrison Ford
Aunt Effie.....Gertrude Claire
Harry Atteridge.....Monte Blue
Claude Estabrook.....Arthur Carew
Peter Harper.....Antrim Short
Doctor Henry.....James Neill

By William Hurlbut.
Scenario by Edith M. Kennedy.
Directed by Walter Edwards.
Photographed by James C. Van Trees.

CATCH LINES

Nothing so small as the eternal triangle in this Constance Talmadge comedy. No less than five men pay court to her! Some of the sprightliest and most unusual humor ever screened can be found in "Romance and Arabella."

Arabella was sought after by a raw westerner, a disciple of free love, a calf-like youth, a professor of eugenics, and she might have married any one of the four if it hadn't been for Bill. Bill was just a regular fellow and how he managed the other four forms delicious comedy.

When we announce another Constance Talmadge comedy, it's enough said.

Select has presented Miss Talmadge in a long line of comedy successes. We don't believe you can name one of them that failed to please. And "Romance and Arabella," an adaptation from the play of the same name, is by no means the least of her many hits. Don't miss it.

AD TALK

Constance Talmadge, the bright and vivacious young comedienne who has appeared in so many brilliant Select pictures, will return to the theatre on — of week in her latest screen venture entitled, "Romance and Arabella." This is an adaptation from a stage play of the same name by William Hurlbut and introduces Miss Talmadge as Arabella Cadenhouse, a charming young widow who decides that she hasn't had enough romance in her life. As a consequence she is inclined to look with disfavor on the suit of Bill, a young man she has known all her life. She knows him so well, in fact, that everything is quite matter-of-fact between them and not romantic in the least.

Bill senses the situation and decides to give Arabella her fill of romance. As a consequence he introduces her to four men, one a crude, unconventional man from the West, another an exponent of free love, still another a callow youth indulging in his first romance, and a fourth an ancient professor of eugenics who sees in Arabella a perfect mate. When Bill sees the first affair progressing too smoothly he introduces a counter-irritant in the shape of a successor and he manages to stop each one from getting serious, with the exception of the last. The professor goes as far as to arrange for a wedding—but then forgets to appear. So Bill performs as bridegroom.

The comedy in this picture is rich and as its sources are so unusual, patrons of the theatre will find it possessed of an originality that is irresistible. Harrison Ford appears as Bill, while the other suitors are successively played by Monte Blue, Arthur Carew, Antrim Short and James Neill.

THE STORY

Arabella Cadenhouse, a charming young widow, is loved by one Bill, a man she has known all her life. Her Aunt Effie suggests that he would make a fine husband, but Arabella laughs at this. She wants romance, spelt with capital R, and this Bill doesn't seem to be able to offer. He watches with consternation the appearance of Harry Atteridge, an unconventional westerner who nearly sweeps her off her feet with his ardent wooing. Bill gets busy and produces a counter-irritant to Atteridge in the person of Claude Estabrook, a disciple of free love. Estabrook puts Atteridge quite in the background and Arabella is inclined to look upon him favorably.

But this affair also progresses to dangerous limits and Bill casts about for another counter-irritant, which he discovers in the person of Peter Harper, a very young boy who thinks he is a man. Peter's naive succeeds in counter-balancing the false doctrines of Estabrook and this affair progresses to elopement plans. Then Bill appears on the scene again, this time with Doctor Henry, a famous eugenist. The doctor is a somewhat cold but persistent wooer and Arabella is fascinated by him. Things progress until a wedding has been arranged, but the doctor forgets to appear at the proper time and when he does show up very late Arabella refuses to marry him.

Bill now steps in, believing that Arabella has had a sufficient dose of romance and with the preparations for the wedding on the one hand and the pretty bride on the other, he decides to marry her himself. And Arabella accepts. Bill hasn't proved himself so devoid of romance after all.

SUGGESTIONS

No Select exhibitor need be told the worth of the Constance Talmadge pictures. As a series of high comedies they remain in a class by themselves. In advertising them it would be best to employ some simple line to the effect that when Constance Talmadge is announced a good entertainment is assured. The producers have proven to be back of you in any such statement. The productions, the casts, the stories, the direction of the Talmadge pictures are always of the highest order.

"SILENT STRENGTH"—VITAGRAPH

Dual Role Subject That Looks Good; Should Please All

THOSE who like dual role subjects ought to be pleased with this picture, as the double exposure scene have been handled skilfully. No dividing line can be seen at any time.

The entertaining qualities of the story are only average; but the good acting of the star should help please the Harry Morey fans. The beautiful outdoor scenery that forms the background in almost all the scenes also help make the picture acceptable.

The hero is shown in the story as having been defrauded by his cousin, who looks exactly like himself. In the woods where he lives, he meets the heroine. She returns to the city. At a reception she meets the hero's cousin, and taking him for the hero, they marry.

Due to their likeness, the hero is arrested for his cousin's crooked deals; but he escapes from jail. The two men meet somewhere in the woods, and a struggle ensues. The cousin is about to shoot and kill the hero, when the latter's friend, a mountaineer, shoots with his shot-gun from afar and kills the former.

By this time the heroine has become aware of her husband's deception; and there now being no bar to her happiness, she weds the hero who loves her.—Released Feb. 17.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Dan La Roche	Harry T. Morey
Henry Crozier	Betty Blythe
Ruth Madison	Robert Gaillard
Corporal Neville	Bernard Siegel
Tom Tripp	Herbert Pattee
Inspector Burke	James Costello

By Lawrence McCloskey.
Directed by Paul Scardon.

AD TALK

Harry Morey will be seen on the screen of the theatre next in "Silent Strength," a feature in which he assumes a dual role. This is said to be one of the strongest of such stories to be offered a male star to portray, for in its various unusual twists and situations, dramatic crises of great power are developed. Mr. Morey appears as cousins, Dan La Roche, a man of nature in love with the forests in which he has made his home, and also as Henry Crozier, a financier of the great city who stoops to foul means to achieve his ends. How the fates of these two men cross and how Ruth Madison, a woman loved by Dan, plays a peculiar role in the working out of their destinies, forms a photoplay of an unusually powerful nature.

Mr. Morey's dual characterization is one of the strongest performances he has yet given to the screen and the support rendered him by such capable Vitagraph players as Betty Blythe, Robert Gaillard, Bernard Siegel, Herbert Pattee and James Costello is of a finished type. "Silent Strength" is an original story by Lawrence McCloskey, one of the foremost of Vitagraph's writers, while the direction was in charge of Paul Scardon, for a long time Mr. Morey's director. The film abounds in beautiful outdoor scenery in which much of the important action is staged, while on the other hand there are contrasted the busy and crowded streets of a great city. From every standpoint "Silent Strength" is a great picture. Story, star and production unite to make it Harry Morey's worthiest effort.

THE STORY

Dan La Roche, a lover of nature, lives alone in his cabin in the north woods, his only friend being Tom Tripp, the trapper. A letter from his cousin, Henry Crozier, in the city, informs him that they have fallen heirs to vast timber and ore holdings and he goes to meet his relative. The men are startled by their resemblance to one another. They settle matters to the effect that Dan is to assume control of the timber while Henry develops the ore. On Dan's return to the forest he is at first angered by the presence of Ruth Madison, who has taken a cabin near his own, but when he discovers that she also is in love with nature he is attracted to her. Henry mismanages the funds and visits Dan to secure ready money, ending by selling him his portion of the timber lands.

Later Ruth returns to the city and meets Henry. She mistakes him for Dan and Henry, quick to realize her confusion, marries her, for she is wealthy. Henry treats his wife cruelly and in time she grows to wonder at the change that she believes has come over Dan. Henry is forced to flee after a stock swindle and Ruth goes to the mountains, believing to find him there and hoping to restore his old self there. She again meets Dan and is astonished to note that he is again the gentle lover.

Her eyes are opened to the truth of the situation when Dan is arrested for Henry and when her husband returns and accuses her of fleeing to Dan. The innocent man escapes from jail and again attempts to help Henry. Henry takes his money and then shoots him in the back. Tripp, who has watched the whole game, then kills Henry and the final barrier between Dan and the woman he loves is removed.

"A MAN IN THE OPEN"—UNITED

Dustin Farnum's Second United Big in Every Respect

UNITED'S presentation of "A Man in the Open," its second feature to star Dustin Farnum, is big from every one of its many angles. Blessed with the strong story to start with, a story filled with a number of dramatic episodes of real power, the director, Ernest Warde, has produced it with all the skill at his command, which is not a little. Mr. Warde's years of dramatic training have shown to good stead in all his recent pictures. He knows what constitutes suspense on the screen and how to handle a star—moreover, how to gain realistic effects. All this ability of his is again established after viewing "A Man in the Open." We repeat, it is big from every viewpoint.

The story has been set in some splendid locations—locations that make significant that little word "open" in the title. And these have been photographed in excellent style.

Mr. Farnum's role is that of a man disappointed by life and buffeted by a cruel fate that seems destined to snatch happiness from him forever, but which takes a deciding turn for the better only after a series of startling events have been unfolded on the screen. He plays it well and sustains his character with remarkable skill all the way through. His support is always effective, for one reason that the picture was excellently casted.—Length, 6 reels.—Released February.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Dustin Farnum, who was last seen here in "Light of Western Stars," will appear again on the screen of the theatre on _____ week in his second United picture entitled "A Man in the Open." Picturegoers have come to associate Dustin Farnum with the virile, forceful story of the western plains, the sort of story which is, in fact, immediately suggested by the title of this, his latest picture. And the contents of "A Man in the Open" reveals that the suggestion of the title is fully carried out in the six reels that comprise the picture.

Adapted from the novel by Roger Pocock, it tells the story of a sailor, Jesse, shipwrecked on the coast of Texas, who, after a disagreeable experience with a cattle rustler, settles down to a happy existence on a nearby ranch. A clairvoyant's troupe comes to town and Jesse becomes infatuated with the "medium" for the fakir, a girl by the name of Polly. Within two weeks he marries her and then she shocks and disgusts him by revealing her true character to him. After a short but stormy time with her, Jesse learns that she has committed suicide and sets out for the "open places," there to begin life anew.

How, in this invigorating environment, he found a new love and happiness and how this was all but spoiled by sensational disclosures forms a series of events that literally keep the observer's eyes riveted to the screen. Mr. Farnum appears to splendid advantage in the star part while his support, which includes Irene Rich, Claire DuBree, Lamar Johnstone, Hershall Mayall and Joseph Dowling, is of an exceptional order.

THE STORY

Sailor Jesse is shipwrecked on the coast of Texas and becomes the innocent tool of a cattle rustler. The sheriff's posse gathers him in but his story frees him and thereafter he becomes a cowboy on a nearby ranch. Polly, medium for a fake hypnotist, attracts Jesse and he marries her, shortly afterwards learning that she went through the ceremony merely to win a bet. He attempts to make her see the falsity of her life but she laughs at him. Shortly afterwards,

"Bull" Brookes, the rustler, reports to Jesse that Polly has shot herself and the sailor makes off to a distant spot in the mountains to begin life anew.

Here he meets the Trevors from the city. Kate has brought her husband West to cure him of his drinking but he grows worse as time goes on. One time when he sees her with Jesse from a point across the river he becomes enraged and attempts to reach them. The swift current sweeps him out of sight. Shortly afterwards Jesse and Kate realize that they were meant for each other and marry and in time their union is blessed by a child. Everything is peaceful until Brookes again appears on the scene—and with him Polly.

The story of her suicide had been a ruse and now she returns to make Jesse's life miserable by opening a saloon near his home, operating it under his name and flinging her vulgarity in his very face. Kate takes a home by herself but one night is attacked by Brookes. Jesse is informed of the matter and hastens to protect the woman he loves, while Polly follows. The men struggle and Polly shoots, mortally wounding Brookes, who tells Jesse before he dies that Polly deserted her husband for him. Thus the last barrier between Jesse and Kate is swept away.

CATCH LINES

A true Dustin Farnum picture—one which deals with life in the open country in all its elements—a man's story, a woman's story, a story for each and everyone is presented in this picture.

"Fork over twenty! You said I couldn't catch him in two weeks and I'm his wife now!" These were the words that staggered Sailor Jesse only a few minutes after the minister had pronounced Polly his wife! She had married him on a bet!

Jesse buried the horrible past and went forth to begin life anew in the open. In time he married Kate, a woman whom Fate had destined for him—but in the moment of his greatest happiness Polly appeared! Polly, the woman who had disillusioned him—the woman he thought was dead!

Dustin Farnum's second United picture, a worthy successor to "Light of Western Stars," which returned him to his many admirers. Don't miss "A Man in the Open"—it's the sort of a story that appeals to all—magnificent outdoor scenery.

SUGGESTIONS

If you should book this picture you have one big enough to advertise as a special: that is, you can go the limit on advertising, real boosting advertising, and you won't have any of your promises come back at you in any other way than big returns. A long run would also be advisable, because of this picture itself, in the first place, and owing to the fact that Dustin Farnum's previous picture for United has played to such good business during its period of existence.

That which constitutes a big picture is not always to be summarized in a few words. With the case in "A Man in the Open" there are several things which go to make it big; one is the character that the star portrays, another is the remarkable "story" interest and the skillful manner in which the high lights of the plot have been handled and the other is the wonderful scenic and photographic effects provided. These points may seem in the way of repetition to what has been said in the review; they are only repeated here because the exhibitor should know on what lines to travel in his advertising. And if these points are emphasized you will be presenting the picture in its true light.

Carry a line to the effect that the star's success in "Light of Western Stars" was phenomenal and use a catch line that goes into one of the startling points of the story: one taking up the marriage of the hero to the "medium" would be preferable inasmuch as this contains good sensational possibilities and certainly arouses the interest as to what may follow.

"ROMANCE AND ARABELLA"

You have some original angles to play up in presenting this current picture to your patrons, chief of which is due to the fact that there are five suitors for the heroine's hand in this story. This fact offers you a number of possibilities. If, from some of the black and white stills, you could procure a head of each of these five, arrange them along the bottom of an advertisement, with a picture of the star at the top. Use wording something on this order. "These are the five suitors for the hand of the charming widow in 'Romance and Arabella'—who wins?" In addition you might use under each head descriptive matter such as, "The raw westerner," "the fakir," "the youth," "the eugenist" and "the man." This sort of advertising will pull business, because it awakens curiosity. If you can procure the pictures it would be an excellent plan to try out.

"COURAGE FOR TWO"—WORLD

World Co-Stars Offered Fine Comedy-Drama in Harry Hoyt's Story

HERE is another Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley comedy-drama that has a wealth of each element and one that contains so much merit as a piece of screen craft that other words than of praise cannot be penned in reviewing it. Again we find the name of Harry O. Hoyt as its author and this busy World scenarist has contrived a vehicle of unusual stripe and delightful quality for the attractive leading pair. Mr. Blackwell is afforded a dual role and the humor and interest which is derived when the characters change places is plentiful to an extensive degree.

The direction of Dell Henderson is, as usual, adequate when it comes to the comedy scenes, whereas his handling of the serious moments in this instance is good enough. There is considerable double-exposure work and while the action would have been smoother if these scenes had been fewer in number, they are certainly well timed and technically of a good order.

Mr. Blackwell plays his roles with discrimination and senses their values excellently. Miss Greeley shares feminine honors with Rosina Henley, a young actress whose past appearances in World pictures have always elicited praiseworthy comment, and whose work here is doubtless the best she has done.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 17.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Another one of the enjoyable Carlyle Blackwell-Evelyn Greeley comedies will hold the place of honor on the screen of the theatre on _____ of _____ week when "Courage for Two" is shown for the first time in this city. "Courage for Two" tells the story of two cousins, similar in appearance but totally unlike in character. The rich fellow, Tony, has lost ambition, "pep" and nerve through a life of idleness, while Cal, a rough diamond from the east side, possesses all these qualities in abundance. The story so manoeuvres that it is necessary for the two men to change positions for a short time. This proves to be the making of Tony and the polishing of Cal. There is a charming dual romance enacted, each of the girls involved, finding the change in the character of their suitors very much for the better.

"Courage for Two" has an exceedingly generous amount of comedy. The east-sider's initiation into society forms a humorous contrast on the one hand that is cleverly matched with the society man's debut into gangster circles on the other. The author has introduced a number of fine comedy scenes in these phrases of the picture that are splendidly enacted by Mr. Blackwell, Miss Greeley and Rosina Henley, who carries the role of the other girl. Nor has the dramatic side of the picture been left unattended. There is suspense aplenty and action and excitement sufficient to make the five reels pass very quickly.

"Courage for Two" was written by Harry O. Hoyt, author of some of World Film's most successful features, while the direction was in charge of Dell Henderson.

THE STORY

After a mixup with a tough gangster, Cal Douglas decides to see his cousin, Anthony Hopkins, in order to secure some money to leave town. Tony is Cal's opposite in every way. Whereas the man who has fought for an existence on the streets of New York is fearless and impetuous, the other has grown flabby because of his wealth and is unable to seriously cope with his business enemies, and one in particular, Nichols. Tony tells his troubles to his cousin when he calls and the upshot of it is that they change places. There are girls to be considered, however. Cal had seen much of Marion, a girl who had at times longed for wealth. Tony had seen much of Olive Herrick, who had at times longed for a man of action. The girls are the only ones not taken in by the change in identities and each finds herself preferring the impostor to the former suitor. And, truth to tell, it is the same with the cousins.

It takes a good bit of courage on Cal's part to attend teas and the like and a good bit more on Tony's part to walk the streets of the east side when a gangster is liable to pop out of any corner and finish him off. But each succeeds in a way. Finally, Cal's enemy, Buck Comas, makes Tony a captive. It is only when Tony sees Marion threatened by the big brute that he summons up his courage and beats him up. In the meantime Cal has made Nichols' shady business take a back seat through sheer nerve and daring.

And when finally the two cousins meet again, each has absorbed the good points of the other; the bad points have gone in the discard. And the dual romance comes to a happy ending.

CATCH LINES

Another delightful comedy-drama with those two popular stars, Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley sharing honors. A fast-moving, unusual story in which the resemblance of two men is responsible for many a laugh and many a thrill.

An east-sider steps out in high society—a social lion samples the life of the underworld, and each is a success in his new sphere. There are equal portions of comedy and drama in this picture—one of the most enjoyable of all the features in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley have appeared.

SUGGESTIONS

You get a lively comedy-drama and a good title, besides the stars, when you book "Courage for Two." Personally, we think that you can safely advertise it as the best that the two stars have done, for it is a fine combination of comedy and highly sustained situations. It is to be hoped that all exhibitors that have booked World pictures have cashed in on the brand of entertainment in which the company is placing this starring team. If you have advertised them well and have let them know that "Blackwell-Greeley" always means a fast comedy, the mere display of the names furnishes a complete announcement in respect to these most recent of their features.

"THE MILLIONAIRE PIRATE"—BLUEBIRD

Story of Impossible Kind, But Good Acting Puts It Over

OWING to the fine treatment, and the good acting of the two principals as well as of the supporting cast, this picture should satisfy the majority of your patrons; but the story is of the impossible kind—no one could believe that the things the picture depicts could happen. Besides, people are least interested in stories of Pirate days. It is true that only the first reel shows the doings of pirates, but the balance of the story uses that part for its foundation.

Although the interest of the spectator is aroused and retained throughout the picture, it hardly ever appeals to any particular emotions, except it be to the esthetic kind. The photography and general artistry is of the same standard that characterizes all Universal productions.—Released Feb. 10.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Jean Lafitte.....Monroe Salisbury
The Girl.....Ruth Clifford
Her Mother.....Lillian Langdon
Her Father.....Harry Holden
Her Sweetheart.....Jack Mower
Robert Spurr.....Clyde Fillmore

By Emil Nyitray and Herbert Hall Winslow.

Scenario by Waldemar Young.

Directed by Rupert Julian.

THE PROLOGUE

Early in the eighteenth century a pirate, Jean Lafitte and his lieutenant fought for a woman. Jean won the fight. The woman signified her willingness to give herself to him if he would but spare the vanquished, the man she loved. Jean refused this and forced the other to walk the plank. As the woman cringed from Jean she cried, "Never shall you or any of your descendants know the true love of a woman!"

THE STORY

In modern times Paul Winthrop visits an island and paints a picture of Joe, a picturesque pearl diver. He dresses him in pirate garb and when the picture is done Joe cannot take his eyes from it. The two men instinctively recognize each other. Joe is another Jean Lafitte, Paul is his antagonist of the years before. Later Joe stumbles across a case of pirate treasure buried along the shore. By a plate on the box he reads the name of the one-time owner, Jean Lafitte. With this treasure he is enabled to visit the United States, where in New York he again finds Paul Winthrop.

Paul is in love with Lily Demorest, but her parents have signified their desire that she marry Robert Spurr, a millionaire. Joe is immediately attracted to her and decides to kidnap her. First his motive is charitable. He intends turning her over to Paul, who is timid about such action himself. Then he decides to keep her for himself, but Lily cries out for Paul and then to the pirate descendant dawns the true meaning of the curse fastened on his ancestor by the woman he coveted. So he returns her to Paul, and though it is difficult he finds some happiness in the thought of their reunion.

CATCH LINES

The peculiar story of the manner in which the lives of three people of the present were strangely linked with the lives of another three two centuries before—a story that has a little bit to do with reincarnation—but a good lot more to do with fine, stirring entertainment.

Monroe Salisbury—the greatest lover of the screen—in a feature that will grip you from beginning to end.

Produced under the direction of Rupert Julian, the man who made "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin"—his greatest work since that epoch-creating feature.

Two stars in a single picture—Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford—an ideal team in an ideal story of love and sacrifice—how the lives of modern persons were strangely linked with olden pirate activities.

all over the park, from tree to tree and back to tree again. And while he is perched high on a certain branch he sees his chance to effect the rescue of Laura White, whose mount is running away. The rescue accomplished, it is love at first sight with Joe and he doesn't at all like the manner in which Karl Richter hangs around the girl.

Joe escorts Laura to what he believes to be her home, which is in reality the residence of Countess Briand, leader of a spy group of which Karl is a member. Of course Laura thinks the Countess is a perfectly nice lady. That night Joe invades the house and steals Laura's picture from Karl's desk. He is thereupon held up by the Countess, who insists that he secure papers that incriminate Laura and which are held by a blackmailer. In this way she secures valuable plans of an inventor's. It doesn't take Joe long to discover that he has been duped and straightway he sets himself against the spies, regains the papers, saves Laura from their clutches and finally rounds the whole gang up and turns them over to the police. After this Joe decides to lead an honest life—principally because of Laura.

SUGGESTIONS

There are a number of unusual ways in which you can exploit this feature. First the title lends itself unusually well to decorative advertising. If it suggests to your artist a picture of a man in the height of modern fashion with just the slightest suggestion either in clothing or appearance of the ancient and picturesque pirate, let him have full play and see what he can do in getting up such a figure. It would be a good one to use in newspaper advertisements or in special lobby displays, for it would carry out the idea of the story and at the same time arouse a good bit of curiosity.

Play Monroe Salisbury up as a great romantic actor, which he is. A line calling him the greatest lover on the screen would not be amiss. His performances are always distinguished and his work stands out as apart from that of any other leading man in pictures. Use Ruth Clifford's name prominently too, for she has appeared in a number of Bluebird pictures as a star in her own right. You have, then, two stars in one picture.

For the basis of an advertisement you might give as your argument a few lines on reincarnation. Ask your patrons whether they believe in it and then tell of the manner in which the lives of three modern people were guided by the acts of their ancestors in "The Millionaire Pirate."

AD TALK

Monroe Salisbury will be seen at the theatre on _____ of _____ week in his latest Bluebird photoplay entitled "The Millionaire Pirate." This is one of the most original pictures in which the impressive Mr. Salisbury has appeared. It starts with a prologue enacted on a pirate brig early in the eighteenth century. Jean Lafitte, the pirate chief, fights with a member of his crew for possession of a girl and Jean wins. As he approaches the prize, she begs that he spare the man who lost the fight—the man she really loves. But with a leer, Jean gives orders that he be forced to walk the plank. It is then that the woman fastens this curse on Jean and his descendants: "Never shall you or any one of your descendants know the true love of woman!"

The action then comes down to present times and presents a drama in which Joe, a pearl-diver, made suddenly rich through the discovery of an old pirate chest of gold, falls in love with Lily Demarest, a girl of New York. She is also loved by Paul Winthrop, an artist, but a man timid about asserting himself. How the story is worked out to a happy ending though, in large measure, guided by the moral of the prologue, forms the body of the action of the picture.

Mr. Salisbury appears to attractive advantage in both the roles—the pirate and the pearl diver while Ruth Clifford and Jack Mower are seen in his support. The picture was made under the direction of Rupert Julian, the man responsible for the first Kaiser picture, "The Beast of Berlin," and numerous highly successful Bluebird features.

Should Prove Entertaining to All; Clean Theme

THIS picture should provide a good evening's entertainment for any picture goer, because of the good story and the skillful way it has been handled.

The theme treated is a love affair. It is simple at the start, but, towards the end, becomes complicated; yet it remains clear.

The story is laid in Brooklyn, N. Y. It opens in Coney Island, where the heroine is a dancer for one of the side-attractions. The hero, who works in the same place, is in love with the heroine; but her mother, a fat elderly lady, is coveting the hero. She tries hard to capture him.

The heroine becomes acquainted with a fine looking young man who has an automobile. She thinks she is in love with him; and when she gets angry at her employer, quits and follows the newly made love. It develops, however, that he is only a chauffeur to a wealthy family. Towards the end of the picture, she is satisfied to marry the hero, who always loved her.

There is quite a little comedy throughout the picture, especially in the situations showing the fat mother making love to the hero.

The picture is clean and enjoyable.—Released Feb. 16.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

The fact that this is an adaptation of a Red Book Magazine story offers you a ready-made clientele that is valuable. Be sure to mention its source in all advertising that you do. The Red Book, during the past year, has increased its circulation amazingly. It doesn't take a keen eye to notice it under the arm of any number of people around its publication date of each month. It would be a good idea to procure several copies of the edition in which it appeared and use these as a special lobby display. Open one of them to the beginning of the story, another to the middle of it, at some exciting point preferably and use another closed. This will constitute a display that will attract attention.

Catch lines and advertising phrases may also be found in the original work. Use the name of the author, also, for he is one of the leading fiction writers of the day.

On top of this you have Margarita Fisher. She has done a number of comedies of late and people doubtless have begun to associate her with this sort of picture. Spread yourself on her and the style of production offered in "Molly of the Follies" and you ought to get good results.

AD TALK

Margarita Fisher will be the star at the theatre on _____ of _____ week in her latest American comedy entitled "Molly of the Follies." This picture is an adaptation of a story that appeared in the Red Book Magazine, by Peter Clark MacFarlane and has as its central character a girl in a Coney Island side-show. Molly's particular job is dancing as a ballyhoo for the show and if this parlance is foreign to the majority of our readers it may be explained that she is used to attract the crowd around the tent so that the barker can get them in with his talk regarding the wonders exhibited.

Molly is loved by the "human submarine" of the show but the trouble is that her mother also has her eye out for the young man and her attitude is more romantic than maternal. So mother and daughter are rivals in love and the poor "submarine" doesn't know which way to turn. Rather, he knows which way he wants to turn but is afraid to turn either way, owing to his popularity. How Molly wins out over her mother when another suitor enters upon the scene, forms a comedy full of the liveliest of situations.

Miss Fisher has a name for rapid, spirited comedy and her performance in "Molly of the Follies" is not the least of her many delightful character contributions to the screen. She is supported here by a cast including Jack Mower, Millard Webb and Lule Warrenton. The film was produced under the direction of Edward Sloman, one of the foremost artists at the American studios.

CATCH LINES

Margarita Fisher in another delightful comedy from the American studios—brim full of humorous situations and real human character—an admixture that is quite irresistible when done in the high class American style.

Do the freaks in the side-show know what romance is? Has the fortune teller got a heart? Does the dancer in the ballyhoo love? Can a "human submarine" do anything but sink? Probably you have thought of all these people as mere automatons, but truth to tell, they can love as well as any of us who are engaged in more ordinary occupations. See "Molly of the Follies" and find the answer to all these questions.

THE STORY

Molly is the ballyhoo for a Coney Island side-show and is loved by Joe Holmquist, a gentleman billed as the "human submarine." The trouble is that Molly's mother, Kate Malone, the fortune teller of the show, is also in love with Joe and insists on showing her affection for him at the most inopportune times. One day Joe and Kate are surprised to see Molly ride away with a strange young man in an automobile. Kate makes use of her fortune telling powers, takes down the license number of the car and finds out that the owner is Chauncey Ewing, of good family, wealthy, single, and living with his Aunt Henrietta in a country suburb of Brooklyn. Chauncey becomes a daily visitor to the side-show, and one day asks Molly to marry him. She will not give him a definite answer because she doesn't know just who she loves, Joe or Chauncey.

In a very adroit manner, Kate proposes marriage to Joe. When Molly enters her dressing room, she finds Joe and Mother in a very loving embrace. Molly really loves Joe and this scene causes her heart to ache. After receiving a note from Chauncey, appointing a rendezvous for that evening, Molly promptly decides to marry Chauncey. He is very much delighted, but explains that they cannot be married that evening, as they cannot obtain a license. Chauncey offers to take her to his aunt's for the night, saying they can be married on the following day. Molly agrees to this agreement. Joe sees them and follows.

Upon arriving at Aunt Henrietta's home, Chauncey confesses that everyone is away on a vacation. He offers Molly his own room and says he will sleep in the garage. Joe arrives, confronts Chauncey and Molly, and says he is going to take Molly back with him, but she refuses to go. Molly also takes a hand and poor Joe gets the worst of it. He is ordered out by Molly and leaves, downcast. When Molly climbs into bed that night, she realizes it is Joe she loves more than anything else in the world, and cries herself to sleep. During the night she hears a noise below. Apparently a burglar is in the house. She traps him in a closet.

Aunt Henrietta and the servants arrive home unexpectedly. She is horrified to discover a strange woman has taken possession of HER bed room, and becomes furious when she sees Molly taking a bath in HER private plunge. Molly explains and also tells of the burglar. Aunt Henrietta is amazed to find that the supposed burglar is her nephew, Chauncey, while the young fellow who brought Molly there is none other than Milton Wallace, Chauncey's socially gifted chauffeur. When Kate and Joe arrive, they are overjoyed to find that Molly has not wed Chauncey. Kate immediately surrenders Joe to her daughter. Joe announces it is civilized life for them from now on, with love, in a delicatessen shop.

Western Subject Full of Human Appeal and Action

IF your patrons like Western subjects, you should not overlook this attraction. Even if they don't care much about them, it should do you no harm to run this one, for it is full of human appeal. The average Western picture depends more or less on fast action to entertain: In "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U" heart interest goes hand in hand with rapid action.

The theme is a clean love affair, presented in a natural manner, the different situations having been handled by the director convincingly.

Mr. Bennison possesses a pleasing personality; the supporting cast is excellent; the mountain scenery used for the background in most of the situations is beautiful; and as, barring the first few feet, the picture is free from blood and thunder, it should not fail to give excellent satisfaction.—Released Feb. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. AD TALK

Louis Bennison will make his second appearance at the theatre on of week in "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U." Bennison is the new screen actor who scored a success almost instantaneous in his first Betzwood-Goldwyn production, "Oh Johnny!" Critics and public alike acclaimed him in this picture. He brought a new personality to the screen, a personality at once happy-go-lucky, pleasing and forceful. And however good the impression he made in the first picture it seems a certainty that this, his second, will overshadow it. For in "Sandy Burke" there is offered a western picture, somewhat out of the ordinary, actionful, with plenty of romance and thrills.

Sandy Burke drifts into the Silver Dollar Saloon and arrives there just in time to witness the tail end of a killing. The dead man is Morgan and his little seven-year-old daughter has just arrived in the town in search of him. The killer, Jim Diggs, attempts to escape, using the child as a shield against the bullets of the angered townsfolk, but Sandy proves the better of him and after a hard ride rescues the child from his clutches. This is only the beginning of the enmity between Sandy and Diggs. It continues on through Sandy's courtship and results in a number of highly exciting and thrilling situations.

"Sandy Burke" is a pleasant combination of dramatic action and comedy and Bennison's refreshing personality is as much a part of the picture as is the story itself. He is supported by a fine cast that includes Virginia Lee, Alphonse Ethier, Herbert Horton Pierce, Echlin P. Gayer, Lucy Beaumont, Wilson Bayley, Nadia Gary and Philip Sanford.

THE STORY

Sandy Burke incurs the enmity of Jim Diggs, a bad man, when he rescues Dolly Morgan, the seven-year-old daughter of one of his latest victims, from his clutches. Sandy places the child in charge of Widow Mackey and then rides off in search of employment, for the responsibility of the child means that Sandy must secure funds. On the road he is held up by Molly Kirby, who takes him for a desperado for whom a large reward has been offered. After proving his innocence Sandy returns with Molly to her father's ranch and there is given a job to see whether he can trace the men who are periodically robbing the ranch of its finest steers. Sandy suspects Diggs and his partner in crime, Lafe Hinton, and gradually gathers evidence to prove that they are the guilty parties.

Diggs covets Molly and makes off with her, but Sandy pursues and after a heated fight overcomes the bad man. He returns Molly to safety, but is rather sad, inasmuch as he believes her in love with an Englishman, a guest of her father's. Just before Sandy contemplates bringing about the arrest of the bad men on his accumulated evidence, Diggs again kidnaps Molly and when Sandy goes to the rescue he himself is overcome. The villains plan to brand him with a hot cattle iron, but before harm can come the sheriff's posse arrives and saves the day.

Thereupon Sandy sadly bids Molly goodbye, believing foolishly, that she desires to return and permit the Englishman to claim her heart and hand, but it only takes a little art on Molly's part to persuade Sandy that he has the wrong idea. And then his happiness is about as complete as mortal's can be.

CATCH LINES

Louis Bennison is a fast, breezy, exciting tale of the West—the old story of the girl, the man and the bad man, but done in a refreshing, original style—not a dull moment in the entire five reels.

You saw Louis Bennison in "Oh Johnny!"—he scores his second hit in "Sandy Burke"—a lively story of the western plains, with plenty of romance and villainy—but it's all made different by the fine personality of the star.

Louis Bennison came suddenly into popularity through his performance in "Oh Johnny!" If you liked him in his first picture you'll be tickled to death with the second, for it contains comedy and thrills aplenty and the star's personality is a thing of joy.

SUGGESTIONS

If the newspapers in your town commented upon the first Bennison picture favorably, use extracts from their reviews in heralding his return in "Sandy Burke." If not trade and daily paper comments printed in the recent Goldwyn announcement in this paper might be of use to you. At any rate providing that Bennison went well at your house, and judging from all reports received here, he went well in most places, refer to him as the new star who rose to prominence and success with one picture.

Then advertise this one as another western comedy-drama of the same fine order in which the star's personality is the unusual thing about it. Play up this personality of his. It is unusual and will make many favorites for him.

"COURAGE FOR TWO"

"Courage for Two" is a title that attracts also. Make sure that you give it proper prominence. It awakens the curiosity and if you follow it up with some good catch-lines you present an argument that your patrons can not resist. Make use of Harry Hoyt's name also. Those who have followed the business for any length of time need not be told that Mr. Hoyt is, in point of service, one of the oldest men in it. Moreover, on these Blackwell-Greeley pictures his name has recurred time and again. Capitalize his name also and you will have something in the way of a tri-star combination that you can make more popular with each succeeding release.

"HARD BOILED"—PARAMOUNT

Light Story, But Should Please All Your Patrons

YOU should have no trouble pleasing your patrons with this offering, as it is clean and thoroughly enjoyable. There are plenty of laughable situations distributed well throughout the picture, convincingly blended with tender pathos.

The story is rather light, but the fine acting of the stars supplies the entertaining values the story lacks. She is presented as the leading woman of a traveling company. The show manager gets the box-office receipts and skips, leaving the company stranded. Every one of them is broke except the heroine, but when she discovers that the baby of one of the women in the company is gravely sick, she turns all her money to her and tells her to go.

The balance of the story shows how the heroine is helped by a kindly old lady, and how she repays her for that kindness; also how her lover, with whom she is angry out of jealousy, proves that he really loves her. In the end they are happily united.—Released Feb. 2.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Dorothy Dalton in a spirited comedy-drama in which a prima donna of a musical show matches wits with a hypocritical money-lender and wins out.

She was a show girl and the villagers called her hard-boiled but they found she had a heart and a big one. See Dorothy Dalton in "Hard Boiled," a comedy-drama of unusual interest.

The star of "Quicksand," "Vive la France," "Green Eyes" and many other features in a comedy-drama of unusual excellence.

In which Miss Dalton discards the heavy emotional role and appears in a comedy-drama—there are many moments of humor and many of the most delightful heart-interest type. See "Hard Boiled," it will soften you.

AD TALK

Dorothy Dalton comes to the screen of the theatre on _____ of _____ week in a comedy-drama which is in the way of a departure for her. As a rule, she is seen in photoplays of a heavy emotional type but "Hard Boiled," her latest feature, awards her a theme in which moments of humor are delightfully mingled with a story of exceptional heart interest. Miss Dalton is seen as Corinne Melrose, the prima donna of a musical comedy who finds herself stranded in the hick town of Nilesburg. Aunt Tiny Colvin, a lovable old lady opens her doors to her and in gratitude Corinne seeks for some means by which she can repay the kindness.

It happens that Aunt Tiny is in the clutches of Deacon Simpson, a hypocrite and the money-lender of the town. He threatens to foreclose on the small notes Aunt Tiny owes him. Corinne comes to the rescue by laying a clever trap for the deacon. All unsuspecting, he puts his foot in it. He becomes enamoured of Corinne and she takes full advantage of his helplessness by threatening to tell his wife and publish a scandal broadcast unless he surrenders the notes to her.

How Corinne pilots her own romance to a successful close also constitutes much of the action of "Hard Boiled." In every respect it is a picture worthy to be ranked with the very best which Miss Dalton has done. C. W. Mason, Billy Courtwright, Gertrude Claire and Walter Hiers support her while the story bears the name of John Lynch as author.

THE STORY

Corinne Melrose, prima donna in a musical comedy, is stranded in the little town of Nilesburg. Her last money she gives to help another member of the troupe of her home town not far distant. She herself refuses financial assistance from Billy Penrose, the tenor of the show, because of a passing fit of jealousy. The only person Corinne knows in Nilesburg after all the rest of the troupe has left, is Deacon Simpson, a hypocrite who made advances toward her during the last performance of the show. At the station the agent advises her that she might find a home with Aunt Tiny Colvin, an old lady with a reputation for wholehearted charity.

To her Corinne goes, and finds that the reputation held by the old lady is borne out in fact. But she is in severe financial straits. Deacon Simpson, also a money-lender, has advanced Aunt Tiny several small sums, payment of which he now demands. Aunt Tiny appeals to Corinne for help. Penniless and unacquainted in the town, Corinne is hard put for it at first but at length she evolved a plan. She sets a trap for Deacon Simpson and employing all the wiles and arts of her profession soon has the old dufer enmeshed hopelessly—from his standpoint. When she demands Aunt Tiny's notes he readily hands them over rather than be the center of the scandal with which Corinne threatens him.

So Aunt Tiny is made happy. Then Billy returns, repentant and with money enough to start his own company. Corinne will have none of this, however. She prefers Nilesburg and when last seen she and Billy are running the leading hotel and laying plans to open a cabaret on the roof when the summer comes.

SUGGESTIONS

Bring out in your advertising that "Hard Boiled" is a comedy-drama, for as Dorothy Dalton has generally been seen in heavy-emotional roles this feature comes along as rather unusual. Tell portions of the plot, how the show girl sets a trap for the hypocritical deacon of a small town and saves a kindly old lady from his clutches. The picture has comedy and heart-interest and if you suggest a bit of the story in this fashion you will be creating a real interest in the mind of the spectator.

Feature Miss Dalton's name prominently. Look over the cast and all those connected with the production of the feature. They may have helped along on some previous success that you screened in your house and if this is the case use their names.

"OUT OF THE FOG"

SUGGESTIONS

You certainly get your money's worth in "Out of the Fog." In presenting it to your public, whether you do so at advanced prices or for the regular fee, drive home this fact to them, that "Out of the Fog" is a magnificently written, enacted and mounted picture. You can spread yourself to the limit on it and there is a guarantee, as sure as anything in the show business can be called a guarantee, that your patrons will consider that you acted wisely.

Metro has supplied some unusual advertising cuts for use in connection with the exploitation of the production, and the paper is of a high order. Use these profusely. Four your own advertising there are innumerable layouts that could be fixed up. To suggest them here would require too much space and would be rather a futile undertaking. The exhibitor should make a point of seeing "Out of the Fog" before he exploits it. Then he may know how to go about it, for there are any number of angles, and to see it might be to pick the one which would appeal directly to a special public.

A good design, however, would be the figure of a girl (Nazimova), standing scantily clad on the rocks, a lighthouse in the background. A fog, haze and the spray of the waves could be suggested so as to faintly blur the whole effect. This would be excellent for a special lobby painting with appropriate wording beneath, while it might also suffice as a newspaper advertisement.

"BREED OF MEN"—ARTCRAFT

Hart Registers Strongly in One That Should Please Everyone

IN "Breed of Men," W. S. Hart again registers. He is in his usual Western role, and it may be considered a happy thought now, and then to bring him back in his familiar role, the kind that made him popular with the public.

The star is introduced in the picture as a fearless man who is befriended by the boss of the town. To further his aims this boss appoints him sheriff. In time he defrauds the homesteaders, but when the hero learns the true character of the man, goes East after him, brings him back by kidnapping him, eventually compelling him to make good to those whom he wronged. The heroine, one of the homesteaders, who thinks the sheriff guilty, now realizes he is innocent, and they become united.

The suspense is strong and continuous, especially in the scenes showing the hero kidnapping his former boss from his home. The star's part is sympathetic.

This picture should give good satisfaction.—Released Feb. 2.—Length, 5 Reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

"Careless" Carmody, a Boss Rider

By J. G. Hawks.

THE STORY

Careless Carmody, boss cowpuncher, rides into the town of Chloride, Arizona, looking for a change from the routine of the ranch. Farley, proprietor of the gambling den, is given instructions to fleece Carmody by the boss of the town, Wesley Prentice. Prentice is a land shark from Chicago. By underhanded means he has obtained title to the land surrounding Chloride. The investors include Ruth Fellows, a young woman, and her little brother Bobby. She is quite unaware of the fact that she has placed her savings in land that might be taken from her any day, as indeed are all the rest of the settlers. Prentice's aim in breaking Carmody is shortly apparent. When Farley has done his job so thoroughly that Carmody hasn't a penny left Prentice offers him the position of sheriff of Chloride and thus he unwittingly becomes the tool of the land shark.

In fulfilling his duty Carmody meets Ruth and they are immediately attracted by one another. Prentice orders Carmody to dispossess Ruth and when he goes to serve the papers the girl shoots at him, wounding him in the shoulder. Instead of awakening Carmody's hatred this has the alternate effect of increasing his love and respect for her. Shortly afterwards Prentice leaves town and Carmody discovers the game he has played. He follows him to Chicago and there makes him captive, returning with him to Chloride. The vigilance committee has tried the two men in their absence and convicted them, but Carmody, of course, is exonerated and made the hero of the day while justice is meted out to the villain. And Carmody and Ruth find true love and happiness together.

AD TALK

William S. Hart, the premier interpreter of western characters, will be seen at the theatre on _____ of _____ week in his latest Artcraft photoplay entitled "Breed of Men." This picture shows Mr. Hart in an entirely new character. Of course he is the cowboy as of yore, picturesquely garbed in leathern chaps, broad sombrero and all the other accoutrements of the westerner, but "Careless Carmody" is a lover, not a bad man! How he is fleeced by a land shark and made sheriff under his direction, how he meets the only girl and soon afterwards in a series of dramatic situations discovers that he is the dupe of the villain, how he pursues him to Chicago and brings him back where justice is meted out to him in the crude fashion of the West, and how finally he wins the heart and hand of the girl, are events which go to make "The Breed of Men" one of the most enjoyable pictures in which Mr. Hart has appeared.

Mr. Hart is supported by Seena Owen, one of the most beautiful and appealing actresses on the screen, Bert Sprotte, a thoroughly despicable villain and Buster Irving, a youngster of undeniable talent. J. G. Hawks, one of the foremost screen writers of the day, who is possessed of years of dramatic training, furnished the story and prepared the scenario for "Breed of Men," while the direction was in charge of the star himself.

Other features on the bill of the _____ theatre for the same dates include _____.

CATCH LINES

William S. Hart in a new role—that of the romantic lover! A story with a broad western setting, situations that make the blood tingle and the star in a new character! See "Breed of Men." It's worth while.

"Careless" Carmody was fleeced of his fortune and then set up as the dummy sheriff of the town's crooked boss. But when Carmody discovered the deception, things began to move! And like lightning. See "Breed of Men," William S. Hart's latest Artcraft production.

If you want to see William S. Hart in a totally different role—come to the _____ theatre and see "Breed of Men." There's a pleasant surprise waiting for you!

There's no snatching the girl away from her family and riding off with her to the mountains in "Breed of Men." No, sir, William S. Hart discards cave-man tactics and becomes the gallant lover! See him in this new role.

PAPER:—Two one-sheets; two three-sheets; one six-sheet; one twenty-four-sheet; one rotogravure one-sheet. The six contains stirring hold-up western scene, one of the threes and one of the ones are love scenes, while rest of the paper contains good poses of star.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Eight 8x10 black and white scenes; eight 11x14 sepia scenes; one 22x28 sepia scene; 8x10 photographs of star.

CUTS AND MATS ON PRODUCTION:—Five one-column; three two-column; two three-column. Hart prominent in all of these, generally showing just his head. They are the sort of cuts that stand out from the page in striking fashion.

STOCK CUTS AND MATS OF STAR:—Five one-column; three two-column; two three-column.

ADVERTISING LAYOUTS:—One three-column; one two-column; one one-column. These all show a striking head of star and in this respect are something of a new departure for Paramount-Artcraft.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET are included in the list of accessories obtainable at all Paramount-Artcraft branches.

SUGGESTIONS

The point to feature in this picture is the fact that the star plays a new role—that of a lover. When it is considered that the type of role that Hart has played in most of his pictures has been the hard-fisted, cave-man type, you can readily see the strong contrast that the mere announcement of his role here will create in the mind of the reader. So play up this angle to the biggest extent possible. It's a chance to do some original advertising that the exhibitor should not overlook.

SILENT STRENGTH

CUTS:—One two-column (scene); one one-column (scene); one two-column (star); one one-column (star). Cuts are fashioned to be of use in advertisements, text columns of newspapers or for program announcements.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET also on hand at all Vitagraph branches.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the star's dual characterization in this picture as one of the strongest of its kind ever seen on the screen. Stress the element of self-sacrifice that predominates the action, relating how one man went to prison for another's crimes because of the love of a woman. Working on this basis you ought to be able to get up some powerful and striking advertisements.

The two-column scene cut provided by Vitagraph on this production shows the star in both his characters. This would be ideal to use in either advertising copy or news stories, as it is unusual in the first place and offers you further opportunity to build convincing arguments around the picture.

CATCH LINES

Would your love for a woman stand the acid test of going to prison for her husband's crime? See "Silent Strength," a powerful photoplay in which just such a situation develops.

Harry Morey in a wonderful dual role—a picture that will grip you from beginning to end.

A story of two men alike in face and figure, but totally different as regards character—one of the strongest of all dual role pictures in which Harry Morey appears, rendering a performance of twofold power.

Dan loved Ruth to such an extent that he willingly went to prison in her husband's stead—furthermore the authorities thought that he was her husband. See how this peculiar situation develops in "Silent Strength."

"THE OLD MAID'S BABY"—PATHE

Weak Story That Little Star Handles Well; Should Please

IF you have been in the habit of running the Baby Marie Osborn pictures; if your patrons are attracted and pleased by the winning smile of the little star, you may be able to get by with this offering without any serious kicks. The plot, however, is weak; a circus, and a love affair, and the Fourth Dimension have been tapped to furnish the heroine with situations which, in spite of the serious efforts, appear forced.

The story requires that the heroine be an orphan; in order that this be accomplished, her parents are taken up in a balloon, dropped in a parachute that fails to work, and killed. How much enjoyment your particular patrons can derive out of a sensational situation of this character, and from the Fourth Dimension theme which furnishes the main idea, you alone should be in a position to know.

The colored boy is not given very much to do in this picture; but he is supplanted by a clever little lame dog, whose tricks as well as the attachment he shows for the heroine are bound to capture sympathy from the spectators. In your exploitation campaign, it may help you if you bring out this point; and if you cater to a large number of children, it would be wise to let them know that a number of circus scenes are shown in the picture.—Released Feb. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

"The Old Maid's Baby"—yes, don't be at all shocked—this is the title of the Pathe feature that will be presented at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week. This somewhat self-contradictory title adorns the latest Baby Marie Osborne picture which Pathe is releasing and it tells as charming and as pretty a story as ever this clever little star was seen in. This time she is Tiny, the pet of all the performers of a circus. Her mother is a parachute artist while her father makes light the fleeting moments for the circus fans by clowning in the sawdust ring.

There is one big tragedy in Tiny's life and this occurs with the violent death of her father and mother. On the night that the little girl had urged her father to accompany her mother up in the balloon because she had appeared worried, something goes amiss and the parachute crashes to the earth, killing them both. Then it is that Tiny is adopted by her Aunt Sylvia. It was this lady who had caused the worried look on Tiny's mother's face the night of her final performance, for Sylvia had refused to see her—she did not admire her sister of the big top.

But even Sylvia can not resist Tiny and well for her that she does not. For she immediately makes her rather dull existence gladder and turns Cupid to help along her preparations for a matrimonial plunge. Baby Marie performs excellently in this picture, while the support, which includes Jack Richardson, Little Sambo, the colored boy, Marion Warner, Claire Du Bray, Jack Connolly, William Quinn and Georgia Woodthorpe is of a superior order.

THE STORY

Christine, known as Tiny, is the pet of all the members of the circus, with which her mother and father are performers. The mother's task it is, each performance, to ascend in a balloon and come down via the parachute route, while the father spends his time adding to the gayety of nations by clowning in the ring. But this story deals more with the life behind the scenes of the "big top" than the apparently happy existence which the professionals lead while cavorting in the sawdust. There comes a day when the circus reaches the town where once lived Christine's mother. She ran away from her home, despite the stern objections of her father, and married the clown and, despite all tradition to the contrary, they had led a happy life.

During the stay of the circus in this village the mother goes to visit her sister, Sylvia, a woman stamped as an old maid by the townsfolk, because of her devotion to figures. She will have nothing to do with her sister from the circus, however, preferring to abide by her dying father's words to shun her for life. So the mother is very blue that night. Christine notices this and pleads with her father to ascend with her in the balloon. Whatever premonition of evil the child had proves correct, for this time the parachute fails to open and husband and wife are dashed to the earth and killed.

Christine is adopted by Sylvia, and while she is a stranger at first, her childish instinct soon proves itself able to adapt her to her new surroundings. And it is Christine who plays the role of Cupid in Sylvia's life. She paves the way for the right suitor to win her aunt's hand over a dried up professor of figures and she herself is finally happy in her new life.

SUGGESTIONS

Children's matinees, of course, are in order for this release, as on all in which the little star appears. Her pictures are of a wholesome type and have been endorsed by mothers for their children. Circularize your regular women patrons and invite them to bring the children for some special matinee. Make it an occasion distinctly for children. Reserve your best seats for them. You could go farther and invite some child of particular talent to contribute to the performance in some way or another. These pictures have a big appeal to children, not only because of the little star, but because of her main supporting star, Sambo, the colored boy.

Any advertising you do in connection with such a performance should of course contain a direct appeal to mothers and children, although if you wish to go after the general patronage, look over the catch lines printed on this page. Perhaps one of them will suit your needs. Feature the circus stuff as atmosphere in all advertising, lobby decorations, etc. Any way in which you could dress an ad with pictures of Baby Marie and the colored boy would be appropriate.

CATCH LINES

Baby Marie Osborne in a charming story of circus life—how the pet of the "big top" brought happiness and romance into the life of a woman who had given herself up as an old maid.

More of Baby Marie Osborne's playful pranks, in which she is again aided and abetted by Little Sambo who, this time, masquerades under the name of George Washington Joffre Foch Pershing Johnson! He provides comedy as startling as his name.

Intimate views of circus life away from the glamour of the sawdust ring—the spectacular death plunge of two parachute performers—but better than all that—the manner in which a little orphan brought sunshine and gladness into the life of a woman who thought herself an old maid.

You can't win a husband by studying mathematics—see "The Old Maid's Baby" and you'll be able to figure out the answer.

Agnes Johnston, Mary Pickford's scenario writer, took time off to do this one for Baby Marie and concocted a story that will delight and amuse you—Sambo is again in support of the little star!

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to November 24, 1918.

 "How Could You, Jean?" (Arctcraft)—"Very satisfactory. Big business."
 "Sandy" (Paramount)—"Good picture. Average business."
 "Romance of Tarzan" (First National)—"Extra big one week."
 "Private Peat" (Paramount)—"A picture that should be relegated to the stock room. Poor business three days."
 "Come On In" (Paramount)—"Good comedy drama of training camps. Average business."
 "The Reason Why" (Select)—"Average business."
 "Two Gun Man" and "The Bargain" (Hart Re-issues)—"No more re-issue pictures for me."
 "Treat 'Em Rough" (Fox)—"Average Mix picture."
 "Doctor and the Woman" (Universal)—"Good picture. Average business."
 "Up the Road with Sally" (Select)—"Splendid picture. Average business."
 "Riders of the Purple Sage" (Fox)—"One of the best western pictures ever screened in my house. All patrons raved over it. Farnum at his best."
 "Out of a Clear Sky" (Paramount)—"Very good. Clark coming back."
 "The Law of the North" (Paramount)—"Chas. Ray did excellent work in this production, only he is somewhat out of place in type of pictures such as this."
 "To Hell with the Kaiser" (Metro)—"Repeat date. A No. 1 picture. People liked to tear the house down showing picture."
 "Grain of Dust" (State Rights)—"Good picture. Second time played. Big business."
 "The Spoilers" (State Rights)—"Big business; played here before."
 "Lust of the Ages" (State Rights)—"Fine drawing power. Good picture. Second time played here."
 "America's Answer" (World)—"Good picture. Film in fine condition. Second Government picture. My patrons did not take to it like the first one. My first show after being closed for three months."
 "Miss Jackie of the Army" (Mutual)—"Just a fair picture. A little punch in the last reel that helped out. Film came to me in poor condition. Some of my patrons liked it."
 "Bonnie Annie Laurie" (Fox)—"Good program picture to good business."
 "The Girl of Today" (Vitagraph)—"Good picture to good business. Good cast and settings."
 "Battling Jane" (Paramount)—"Average to poor business."
 "Over the Top" (Vitagraph)—"Repeat. Poor to average business."
 "The Rainbow Trail" (Fox)—"Broke all records. Took entire night police force to handle crowds."

Newest Productions Reviewed in Advance

"Ballahooing on the Anarika," a picture taken in British Guiana, South America, showing how the famous iron-wood trees of this region are cut and hauled to the point of transportation. We are taken up the Essiquibo River to Wismar, thence across the Potaro River past the river port of Tumatumari and Cobi-kitnerk Falls and into Anarika Creek—following the progress of the huge logs of iron-wood. The primitive methods of cutting and hauling these trees are also shown. This offering is most interesting as well as instructive.

The cameraman paid a visit to Camp Wohelo, on the shores of Lake Sebago, Maine, where under the auspices of the late Dr. Luther H. Gulick, whose wife founded the Camp Fire Girls of America, a large number of girls were placed under an intensive training in outdoor work and recreation. The picture shows the life at Camp Wohelo during the summer months. It is titled, "Maids, More Maids and Mermaids."

These subjects were produced by C. L. Chester in co-operation with Outing Magazine. Katherine Hilliker, who edited and titled the series, is deserving a lot of credit for the snappy titles, supplementing the photographic work. These subjects should be seen by all America.

"Shadows of Suspicion"

(Screen Classics—Six Reels)

"SHADOWS OF SUSPICION," featuring the late Harold Lockwood, is a spy story laid in an English country-side setting. The star is seen as a Britisher whom people suspect of being a slacker, but who is in reality working for the Government Secret Service. The picture opens up well and contains some fine romantic scenes which Lockwood knew how to do so delightfully and in which he is well aided by Naomi Childers. The settings of this opening portion of the film are beautiful and have been photographed with the same excellence that marked all the Lockwood pictures. During this early portion of the picture the star also introduces some fine comedy, while the director, Edwin Carewe, achieved a realistic and startling effect of an air raid through the employment of double exposures and the use of miniatures.

Indeed "Shadows of Suspicion" has as auspicious a beginning as any picture producer could hope for, but regrettably this merit of the first reels fails to extend throughout the duration of the six. The producers endeavored to conclude the picture without the services of the star. A double was employed and he is played with his back to the camera, which is unnatural and noticeably so. Furthermore, the producers have here run wild with the spy stuff. It takes on humorous proportions.

In other words the main trouble with "Shadows of Suspicion" is that it is two halves of a whole played in different keys. Any intelligent audience is going to notice and ponder over this and as a result the interest will falter.—Peter Milne.

"THE ECHO OF YOUTH"

(Abramson-Graphic—Three Star Players)

IVAN ABRAMSON seldom deviates from the shortest distance between two points in dealing with the sex problem on the screen. He is one of the few producers who has held tenaciously to the one general subject in depicting his idea of dramatic exposition and entertainment in pantomime.

In his latest work, "The Echo of Youth," written and directed by him for Graphic Film Corporation, he has ultimately righted all the indiscretions of his mental creations, but not before his characters have elicited suppressed giggles from the audience when deep feeling should have been in order. He has taken a judge of the Supreme Court as his central male character and as the sub-titles tell us, an adventurous woman as the central feminine character. Around these he has builded one indiscretion after another resulting in a son and daughter having the same father but different and distinct mothers. That is, this is the impression an audience gets until the climax creates as the central figure of interest, the comedian of the play, who in a most dramatic fashion, confesses that he is the father of the boy.

From the foregoing you will gain that the boy and girl fall in love before these facts are made known. They do, and Pearl Shepard, who portrays the role of the girl tries so hard to go crazy over the revelation that she inadvertently affords the best comedy situation of the play. Jack McLean, who has the role of the boy, is deserving of special mention at this time, for some of the best bits of juvenile acting he has ever done.

The first half hour of the picture's time on the screen brings to light some excellent drama, well conceived, well produced and well photographed. Throughout the production there is revealed excellent photographic work and the lighting could not have been better utilized. The final reels of the six that include this enactment, are the ones of doubtful merit as clean drama. But since at this time some of the biggest successes on the speaking stage on and near Broadway are turning 'em away nightly because they reveal just such situations as Ivan Abramson has incorporated in his "The Echo of Youth," it would be unjust presumption on the part of the writer, to prophesy anything but successful engagements for Mr. Abramson's latest photodramatic work.

Charles Richman, Leah Baird and Pearl Shepard are featured on the program. Mr. Richman is justly entitled to the position Marie Shotwell, who is seen in a society matron's part and as the wife of the judge, is entitled to one of the other two featured positions. Peggy Shanor, although not casted prominently, demonstrates that she merits prominence. William Bechtel is seen to fine advantage in a comedy-character role. The illustrations accompanying many of the sub-titles are clever.—Joseph L. Kelley.

Spanuth's Vod-a-vil Movies

(One-Reel Series)

FOR the past year throughout the Middle West, H. A. Spanuth has been releasing a series of one-reel pictures showing various vaudeville acts. These he is now offering to the market at large. These reels should prove a novelty in any house. In the smaller ones, where vaudeville is a rarity, they should find a ready audience, while in the larger ones where a fitting musical accompaniment is furnished, they will take on additional interest.

The first release contains the following acts: Alber's Polar Bears, Tetsuwari Japs (acrobats), La Zelle Sisters (dancers), animal circus, and dance by cabaret girls. The second shows trapeze performers, ice skaters, trick bicyclists, Egyptian dancer, trained seals and Indian club jugglers.

The acts are interesting, particularly those that bring out the physical dexterity of the performers.

Mr. Spanuth has a number of these reels already manufactured and ready for distribution here in the East.—Peter Milne.

Mutt and Jeff Comedies

(Fox—One Reel Each)

IF any exhibitor still needs to be convinced of the value of the Mutt and Jeff cartoon comedies, "The Lion Tamer" is the reel to turn the trick. Mutt goes to dress in a lion skin to play the part of the beast in a lion-taming act, while Jeff is to crack the whip and put him through the paces. Before Mutt returns a real lion comes up to Jeff and when the little fellow believes him his partner in comedy there is naturally a lot of ridiculous, funny complications and action as a result. The technique of these cartoons cannot be praised too highly, while the plots contrived by the artist are just the things.—Peter Milne.

Cropper Looks Forward to "Old Timers' Night"

R. C. CROPPER of the Bee Hive Exchange, Chicago, has spent so much time listening to exhibitors tell of the good-old-days, the good-old-time-comedies-that-Keystone-used-to-make, that filled the house, broke-the-records, shook-all-the-seats-loose, and where the-janitor-used-to-sweep-up-the-vest-buttons-and-sell-them (said buttons having jumped their jobs when shook with violent laughter), that he has secured the Keystone Liberty films for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

These films were the ones that made all of our present-day comedy stars. There was Mabel Normand, Roscoe Arbuckle, Mack Sennett, Mack Swain, Ford Sterling and a host of others. Half of the present-day wealthy exhibitors owe their fortunes to these comedies.

It was the Keystone Comedies that immortalized the Custard Pie and the Police Force, as well as the Encyclopedia of hokum-foolium-slamum and National funny-bone ticklers.

These films have all been re-edited from the original negatives and new prints made, entirely re-titled, revised and modernized, yet containing the breezy laughter provoking stuff that made them famous.

We may expect to see "Old Timers' Night" and listen to the "Good-old-days" chorus. Mr. Cropper is receiving bookings for Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin and reports advance bookings better and bigger than a Billy Sunday revival.

War Pictures Retain Popularity in Dubuque

PICTURES of the war and war pictures have not lost in popularity in Dubuque, Ia. "Vive La France," starring Dorothy Dalton, drew the biggest crowd to the Grand, Sunday, January 26, that ever turned out to see the noted star. The name of the play was the chief drawing power, for anything French takes in Dubuque, founded and named after a Frenchman. All afternoon and evening the managers of the theatre were kept busy trying to handle the crowds. The picture was greeted by the most enthusiastic audience since the showing of "Hearts of the World." They applauded and cheered almost continuously during the showing of the picture.

From a dramatic viewpoint the feature was a great success. The star, Miss Dalton, proved herself to be a finished screen actress; she portrayed all the moods with a sincerity that was most convincing. After this production Miss Dalton can be placed in the ranks of the foremost screen stars.

Star in Dubuque Reopens Under New Management

DUBUQUE'S well-known picture house, The Star, will shortly reopen under a new management, it is announced. For several months the Star had been closed as the former owner, L. J. Little, of Dyersville, had not the time to personally direct the theatre.

The Star will be under the management of E. H. Bower, of Detroit, Mich., who conducts four of that city's leading motion picture shows. He has purchased the complete holdings of Mr. Little, with the exception of the Bartola orchestra piano, as it is his intention to install an orchestra to take the place of the mechanical one. Two of the latest type of Simplex projection machines will be added to the present equipment and a continuous show given with no stops made or time lost for the changing of reels.

A color scheme of green and white will be carried out in the decorations of the lobby and two streamers of lights will be hung out to the great "star" sign outside. New lighting fixtures will be hung inside the entrance, so that the entire front will present a new appearance when the improvements are completed.

The inside of the theatre will also be redecorated. A screen, guaranteed to reflect clear, clean-cut pictures is being put in. There will be several changes made in the seating arrangement.

It is expected that the theatre will be opened during the first part of February. Only first-run pictures of the highest class will be shown. The location of the Star is ideal and under proper management, there is no doubt that it can be made a good paying proposition.

Booking Change Displeases Fond du Lac Exhibitors

AN announcement from the Paramount Company to the effect that Fond Du Lac service would be given out of Chicago instead of out of Minneapolis on and after February 1 has brought a storm of protest from Fond Du Lac picture house managers.

The service out of Minneapolis has been eminently satisfactory and they want it retained. The service out of Chicago they contend will be below the standard that has been established by reason of the Chicago censor board and also because of the harder film run in that city. Just how far the local managers will get with their protest is still a matter of speculation.

According to Manager Smith of the Bijou the change affects the entire Fox River Valley and he has yet to find a theatre manager that is pleased with it.

Milwaukee Schedules Ball for February 15

WHAT promises to be the biggest "movie" ball ever given in Milwaukee will be staged at the Auditorium, February 15, according to plans. Not only all of the exhibitors and those directly interested in the industry are back of it but all of the vaudeville and legitimate houses.

The main attraction of the ball will be the making of a one-reel photoplay in full view of those attending. Plans have been completed with the Rothaker studios, Chicago, to supply the entire feature. The Rothaker stage crew will arrive a few days in advance and build a set on the auditorium stage. The members of the cast will make up in full view of the spectators and will then act the piece.

Prominent film men from Wisconsin and Illinois are expected to attend as well as any stars of the screen who happen to be in Chicago.

Blanche Ring, who will be the headliner at the Majestic that week, and Laurette Taylor, who will bring "Happiness" to the Davidson, will be the guests of honor. A band of 40 will provide music.

The following are on the committee in charge of the affair: Henry Trinz, chairman; Fred C. Seegert, secretary; William C. Schnell, Earl Rice, Joseph Schwartz, Henry J. Stoerzer, Charles J. Fox, E. Langemack, George Fischer, and Louis M. Nahin.

Metro Picture Gets Praise from Springfield

ONE of the cleverest, classiest and best pictures that Metro has ever released was "The Gold Cure," shown at the Lyric in Springfield, Ill., on Tuesday and Wednesday, January 21 and 22. Viola Dana was never half so funny as in this picture. In fact, the star has never had many pictures where she could show her comedy vein. Usually her role is one of emotion, and it was with happiness that many film fans watched the "Gold Cure." It is to be hoped that Miss Dana will do more pictures as enjoyable as this one.

Manager Loper had a big bill on the days mentioned. In addition to a Lyons-Moran comedy and a War Weekly, an industrial film was also on the program.

Springfield Rejoices at Excellent Business

IF business continues as good as it has started out for 1919, this year will surely be the banner one for theatres in Springfield, Ill., it is predicted. Barring a bad day now and then, every theatre in this city has made money since January 1, and some of them have been going "great guns." Of course the extra fine weather has something to do with the heavy patronage, but folks are, generally speaking, in better humor for entertainment now than they were a year ago, since the war is over. And a year ago at this time the cold was terrible, there was lots of snow, and business was poor generally, so the outlook is far greater for a good year than it was in 1918, and that wasn't such a bad one, all things considered.

Hoo's Hoo in Hoosierdom

Seeing Indianapolis from an Exchange Window

IN ADDITION to its native fame as the city of parades, Indianapolis is wedging into the "rumor" class. Many and varied are the rumors, all smacking of juicy news, that are now buzzing the rounds. Consolidation seems to be the burden of gossip and involves two, or, mayhap, four of the leading theatres, with a change of personnel in one case at least. But like unto all rumors "the ticker tells the tale."

AT ITS LAST stated meeting the board of managers unanimously chose White, of World, as its chairman to fill the unexpired term of Schrader, who's done gone. In White's stead, who had been vice-chairman, Allison of Doll-Van was picked upon and although the vote was visibly unanimous there were several raucous and untimely remarks about the meeting being packed. Penrod, of Fox, wasn't looking his best, which isn't any too best anyhow; he being the kindly Santa Claus for the feed.

"MANNY" JACOBS, the go-get-'em from Hopoken, has just staggered in from a trip through the "butter and egg" towns. His kitty coat appears none the worse for the journey.

BINGHAM AND COHEN, the Colonial and Regent magnates, are spreading themselves with alarming aplomb in the papers these days. Neither seem to give a rap for the cost of ink, and Bingham openly admits that he doesn't care when nor how.

DOLL-VAN has grabbed off a tall winner in the shape of sixteen Tom Mix two-reel Westerns. Mix has been going great guns of late in the territory and short stuff seems to be the meat these jolly times. The Doll-Van folks are all primed for the scramble on release date. It looks as if they had also knocked down some big game in a two-reeler of Roosevelt with "Teddy" himself in the leading role.

DIVERS strange and unseemly salesmen are at once in our midst, having for havens the far away lands of Chi. and her half-sister, Cin. Bearing frankincense and myrrh and sample bags and business cards and what not. Clothed in four-dollar neckwear and gum shoes. Take heed then, oh brethren of the show-shop, beware the stranger bearing contracts, for in the still hours he plies, with sharpened pencil and dulcet words, the gentle art of the dotted line. Flee then, oh brethren, from this exotic charmer, heed not his honeyed words. For he means no good to your brethren of the local exchange, he means nothing in their young lives, no, indeed, nothing whatsoever.

Stage Women's Pictures Shown in Chicago

A GROUP of society women, newspaper people and theatre owners witnessed a private showing recently in Chicago of the first four photoplays of the Stage Women's Green Room series. The showing was given at the Universal Exhibition Room.

"A Star Overnight," featuring David Belasco; "Winning His Wife," featuring Cyril Maude and Violet Hemming; "The Mad Woman," starring Nance O'Neil; "An Adorable Cad," which is enacted by a distinguished cast including the late Shelley Hall, were the features displayed. These productions are two-reel comedies and dramas, and will be shown at some of the largest theatres in Chicago very soon.

Twelve productions—one for each month in the year—are included in this marvelous Stage Women's Green Room series. Five have been completed—the remaining seven are being produced as rapidly as circumstances will permit. And even now in the laboratories of the Universal Film Company, selected by the Stage Women's society to distribute its product all over the world, prints of the precious negatives are being made. Presently every Universal exchange in this country and abroad will be supplied with copies.

All the money raised through the distribution of these dozen photoplays is to be employed by the Stage Women's War Relief in erecting and maintaining a theatre in the Grand Central Palace Debarkation Hospital No. 5. This, of course, was explained to the players, and accordingly their services were placed at the disposal of the committee.

Elgin Exhibitors Rejoice at Defeat of Booze

ELGIN moving picture men watch the going of John Barley-corn and greet national prohibition prospects with a grin.

Because the picture theatre is the only place attractive to men where they can get the same hours' length of entertainment for the same amount of money—or less—that they pitch over the bar of an evening, the managers believe the dawn of an increased popularity of the picture is at hand.

Although Elgin has been dry for the past two years, opportunities to gather 'round the foaming bowl were not so few as one might believe. Trolley trips to adjoining towns made it the easiest thing in the world for the drink-disposed to spend a happy—and expensive—evening.

Happenings in Madison

IDEAL weather in and around Madison has played an important part in pushing the box receipts to a satisfying amount. This warm wave so unusual for this section is urging people into the theatres by hundreds. Most of the theatre enthusiasts have forgotten the "flu" and are more anxious than ever to "get out and go to a movie."

DURING the past week representatives were in Madison from Vitagraph, Metro, Pathe, American, Exhibitors Mutual, Bee Hive, Jewel, General, and among others the representative of the newest exchange in the territory the Mid-West Distributing Company, Ralph Wettstein's new venture. Wettstein's man was trying to place the Houdini serial in Madison. Announcement has not been made as yet of the booking of this serial by any of the local managements.

TO promote even more interest in stars, the Fuller, Grand, Strand and Majestic theatres ran a contest page in the Sunday edition of the Madison morning paper.

THE GRAND theatre this past week has given "Romance of Tarzan" a four day run with a good house at each performance. The opening day was fair and the following 25 per cent better.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S "Shoulder Arms" will be played back. The house could not accommodate the crowd at the initial performance and a big run is expected on the repeat show. This house announces an early showing of Anita Stewart's first release on the First National program, "Virtuous Wives."

THE New Strand could not begin to accommodate the crowd seeking admission to see "Sporting Life," which was shown for three days. The attraction held up a new record.

Heard in Detroit

STANDING orders on paper have all been cancelled by H. A. Ross, manager of the Paramount-Artcraft exchange in Detroit on the ground that the system has become so complicated that too many errors occur in making shipments. Hereafter exhibitors of Paramount-Artcraft pictures must send individual order for papers, slides, etc., and pay in advance for anything desired.

HAL SMITH, manager of the Ferry Field theatre, who resigned several days ago, was induced to remain by the board of directors and a year's contract was signed. The Ferry Field is, without question, the most profitable neighborhood playhouse in Detroit. The house seats 1,400 people, has a full orchestra and organ and plays all the big pictures for two days. Mr. Smith gets first run on some releases and second or third run on the others.

THE new Penniman Allen theatre, Plymouth, opened on February 1. The house seats 600 people and is one of the most artistic in the state. It will operate three nights a week and the best seats are 20 cents.

THE new Ferndale theatre in West Detroit has been leased by Tom Lancaster of the Grand theatre, Delray and Fred Williams of the Crescent theatre. The house seats 1,000 and will open early in March.

MICHIGAN film exchanges have decided to begin a statewide campaign against exhibitors who "bicycle" their pictures from house to house, getting a two-day run out of a print for the price of one, and particularly against state exhibitors who hold prints over the contract period and show them for additional days. It is planned to put such exhibitors out of business by having service refused to them by all the exchanges.

They Say in Chicago That—

THE artistic presentation of Sessue Hayakawa's picture, "Bonds of Honor," at the Riviera theatre, where it was booked for a week's run, kept the house packed. Balaban & Katz have again scored with their artistic foyer decorations, using over $4,000 worth of Japanese splendor, furnished by the Maeyama Bros. Importing company, in the shape of teakwood chairs, bronze lamps, vases, statues and incense burners, which fills the house with Oriental atmosphere. When last seen, Joe Koppel, manager, was explaining the intricacies of Japanese art to a number of the North Shore society people.

THE Mickey Film Corp., which controls the picture "Mickey" for the State of Illinois, featuring Mabel Normand, is now working five prints and expects to shortly use more to fill the demand.

THE Strand theatre, Warsaw, Ind., formerly called the "Grand," is now under the management of James Bouras.

J. A. HUMPHREY, covering Indiana out of the Vitagraph (Chicago) office, is finding it difficult to cover his territory by automobile and has asked his office to furnish him with an aeroplane. Mr. Humphrey now claims to have twenty-seven shows a week working in Fort Wayne, Ind., alone.

MR. AND MRS. SIDNEY DREW have been working overtime in Chicago, playing the regular performances of "Keep Her Smiling" at the Woods theatre and making pictures the rest of the time at the Essanay studios. Nothing to do but work.

LEE HERZ, head of the Silee Film company, Chicago, is back at his desk after a strenuous New York trip. Mr. Herz says he will have much to say to the exhibitors soon.

THEDA BARA, featured in Wm. Fox's production, "Salome," has been running at the Bandbox theatre, Chicago, at an admission price of 75 cents, to a phenomenal business, with hold-outs all day long.

IKE VAN RUNKEL, of the Goldwyn Chicago office, is looking forward to great things for Mabel Normand's new picture, "Sis Hopkins." "Shadows," featuring Geraldine Farrar, is going big.

JOE FRIEDMAN, of the Celebrated Players, is a happy man. Answer: The Houdini serial is breaking records. Many Chicago theatres are increasing the number of days for its run.

CRESS SMITH, of the Metro Chicago office, reports that the Screen Classics production, "The Great Romance," featuring Harold Lockwood, has been booked by the Rose, Riviera, Central Park and the Ascher Bros. circuit, and that Nazimova in her new production, "Out of the Fog," starts a two-weeks' run at the Rose theatre February 16.

H. C. HOLAH, city salesman of the Vitagraph Chicago office since his return to the film world, has been meeting with marked success in selling the Vitagraph offerings. He is looking forward for great things on the forthcoming production of the "Lion and the Mouse," the big six-reeler, featuring Alice Joyce.

VIROQUA, WIS., has had but ten nights of movies since October 8. The ban which was lifted from that date (January 1) has been put on again when the epidemic of influenza broke out worse than ever. The reports are that the situation looks uncertain but with a shade in favor of checking the "flu." Both of the Wiggenton brothers, Ray and Howard, who have been operators in that little city, were victims of the flu. Both of these young men were highly respected in their community, due to the interest they took in their business.

FRANK REDFIELD, personally known to every exhibitor and film man in the Central States, and who has been connected with the business since its infancy, has been transferred from the Chicago Vitagraph office to the management of their Pittsburgh office, where he is doing a big business. Good luck, old boy; keep it up. Your friends in Chicago won't forget you.

WHILE the police were staging a "fake" capture of whisky blockade runners near Hammond, Ind., at the State line, for the camera of a movie weekly, recently, an auto with a boy at the wheel shot out of Illinois into Indiana on Indianapolis Boulevard. After a long chase it was captured and fifty gallons of whisky found in the car—not fake—real stuff.

"THE BIRTH OF A RACE," now in the third month of its continuous run in Chicago, will close February 2 and seek new pastures. The picture, contrary to predictions made before its opening, has gone over in fine shape and, apparently, pleased vast numbers of Chicago fans. Originally scheduled for a short run at the Blackstone, it was found advisable when the time could not be extended at that theatre to move to the Playhouse, where it has continued to draw large and appreciative audiences.

JAMES KEOUGH, manager of the Pantheon theatre, Chicago, is a busy man nowadays. Since he installed Lieut. Biese's orchestra composed mostly of soloists, the business at that beautiful theatre has gone up and over the top with a bound. Congratulations, Jim.

CHAS. C. TACKAS, until recently manager of the Rialto theatre, Champagne, Ill., has bought the Drake theater, located on Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, from Dr. A. Zillingen, Jr., and reports splendid business.

THE ATLAS EDUCATIONAL FILM CO. has absorbed the Diamond Film Co., Chicago, and taken over their studios, located at 2624 Milwaukee avenue. A house-warming party was given Saturday evening, February first, at which time Mr. C. A. Rehm, secretary and general manager of the organization, entertained all their employees at a dinner at the plant enlivened by a number of Chicago's well-known entertainers.

ALEXANDER PARK is now traveling through Indiana out of the Metro Chicago office.

Interesting Items of Elgin

"GAME'S UP," with Ruth Clifford, was a much praised showing at the Temple the last week in January. Another that excited considerable favorable comment was Carmel Myers' "Who Will Marry Me?"

PICTURE showings of the week of February 2 at the Star included Dorothy Dalton in "The Price Mark," Douglas Fairbanks in return showing of "Reaching for the Moon," the Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider," and Virginia Pearson in "Buchanan's Wife."

RETURN showing of "Tarzan of the Apes," which had such tremendous patronage in first local showing January 19 and 20 at the Orpheum, featured the bill the first week in February. Other pictures of the week were: Montague Love in "The Grouch," Emmy Whelen in "Sylvia on a Spree," Edna Mayo in "Hearts of Love," Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "Hitting the Trail."

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN" is announced for showing at the Orpheum, March 5 and 6.

BESSIE BARRISCALE in "The Heart of Rachel" and Ses-sue Hayakawa in "Bonds of Honor" were the two leading features of the bill at the Temple the first week in February. Other pictures shown were "And a Still Small Voice" with Henry B. Walthall and Fritzie Brunette, the Strand comedy, "They Did and They Didn't," a Hans and Fritz comedy, "Heathens' Benefit," Eddie Polo in "Lure of the Circus," Syd Chaplin in "A Gay Lothario," a Wolfville story, "Tuscom Jennie," the latest edition of the News Weekly, "The Dead Shot," the "Screen Telegram," the comedy, "She Wasn't a Bit Hungry," Current Events, and "Peggy Mixes In."

"BRINGING THE BOYS BACK HOME," first of a series of pictures to be shown at the Star under direction of the local Y. M. C. A., a two-reel propaganda picture, will be shown at the Star February 3, 5 and 6. It was issued by the Educational Film Corporation who provide literature and posters to further its advertising.

RETURN showing of "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley" with Mary Pickford, is promised Star patrons for a near date. The picture was shown one day several months ago at the Grand to most appreciative audiences and Manager Crocker is anticipating big patronage. Erle Williams in "The Highest Trump" and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin (Mildred Harris) in "For Husbands Only" are booked for near dates also.

THAT Star fans, even the women, are temporarily satiated with the light comedy-dramas that the war has made so abundant, and sickened for the time being of society productions, is the belief of Manager Crocker who produces evidence to this effect in records of western drama showings. These pictures, he reports, are at the present time the most popular of the varieties he offers, and he anticipated good patronage of Tom Mix in "Treat 'Em Rough" on February 2 and 3.

Seeing Shows Around Dubuque

THE DREAMLAND, the liveliest and most progressive theatre at Galena, Ill., had a fine lineup of stars and productions for the program during the week of January 26. On Monday William S. Hart scored in "Riddle Gawne"; Tuesday's feature was "The Kingdom of Youth," with fair Madge Kennedy; on Wednesday Constance Talmadge played in "A Pair of Silk Stockings"; Norma Talmadge was starred in "The Forbidden City" on Thursday; "The Death Dance," with Alice Brady, was the Friday feature, and on Saturday "The Great Love," with Lillian Gish and Robert Harron, was presented.

"FLIRTING WITH FATE," with Douglas Fairbanks, played at the Cozy theatre at Dyersville, Ia., Friday, January 24, to crowded houses. This picture was voted to be one of the best the famous comedian has done in the past year.

"THE PRIDE OF NEW YORK," with George Walsh, drew full houses at the Cozy theatre at Dyersville on Sunday, January 26, at advanced prices. The Cozy has a new feature, that of singing before the picture is shown. On this day Messrs. Bernard Luehrman and Gilbert Walter opened each performance with the singing of "The Navy Took Them Over and The Navy Will Take Them Back." They were accompanied by the pianist, Miss Leonella Steger.

BOTH the Dreamland and Grand theatres at Galena, Ill., had "America's Answer" for the Saturday, January 25, program.

"THE STUDIO GIRL," with Constance Talmadge, was shown Thursday, January 23, at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia. Good business was reported. On Friday and Saturday there was an extra special program, "The Turn of the Wheel," with Geraldine Farrar, and "The Cook," with Fatty Arbuckle. Both pictures were very well liked.

THE COZY THEATRE at Dyersville, Ia., had average to big business with "The Bondman," one of the William Farnum successes. The usual week-day prices were charged.

THE three most popular features shown at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., during the week of January 26, were "The Pursuit of Polly," with Billie Burke; "The Claws of the Hun," with Charles Ray; and "Manhattan Madness," with Douglas Fairbanks.

THE BELKNAP THEATRE at Hopkinton, Ia., has scheduled "The Lightning Raider," with Pearl White, for its next serial. The first episode will be shown on Thursday, February 13.

"THE QUEEN OF HEARTS," with Virginia Pearson, drew a record house at the Liberty theatre, Sunday, January 26. Both the picture and the acting of the star received much favorable mention.

NORMA TALMADGE again laid siege to the patrons of the Family theatre when she appeared there on Tuesday, January 28, in "By Right of Purchase," and came out victorious in her usual manner. Miss Talmadge is one of the few stars who can be booked by a manager without the fear of poor business, for in all her long career with Selznick her pictures have never failed to attract big houses.

CHARLES RAY played at the Grand, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 28 and 29, in "The Law of the North," one of his best photoplays.

In and Around Milwaukee

THE AVENUE THEATRE, Howell avenue, has been sold by H. Trinz to C. Godarski.

I. GETTLESON, former Milwaukee Jewel representative, has been put in charge of north side sales in Chicago.

EDWARD TRINZ has been appointed assistant manager of the Universal office.

H. W. PETERS, of the Unity Company, Chicago, was in Milwaukee recently closing a contract with the club for "The Accidental Honeymoon" and "The Struggle Everlasting."

JOSEPH RODERICK, manager of Universal, has been given exclusive control over Wisconsin.

THE UNIVERSAL offices have booked "Vanity Pool" and "Wildcat of Paris" for the Toy theatre.

THE Hearst News weekly and the Screen Magazine have been placed in 35 Milwaukee houses.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in "Cheating Cheaters" proved a big drawing card at the Butterfly theatre where it packed them in January 26 to 29.

THE Houdini serial has been booked by the Mid-West Distributing Company, Toy Building, for the Empress theatre. According to Manager Ralph Wettstein of the Mid-West, this is the first time a Milwaukee burlesque house has used a serial in connection with its regular attractions. Wettstein has also booked "Woman" for the Toy theatre.

THEDA BARA in Salome opened an indefinite run at the Strand, Milwaukee, with a record crowd. The film has had considerable advance publicity and is expected to pack them in.

HARRY TERRY, formerly with K-E-S-E, is in charge of the Milwaukee Vitagraph offices.

"WHO is going to pay for my broken display frames smashed by the crowds trying to see Nazimova in 'An Eye for an Eye,'" writes Charles Pacini, Kenosha exhibitor, to Jack Grauman, head of the Metro offices. Managers all over Wisconsin have asked that their Nazimova bookings be extended, Madison and Kenosha holding the picture over for three days.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

THE CAPITOL does well with Goldwyn pictures, one being shown on every Monday. Madge Kennedy in "The Danger Game" was the last one here and drew big business for Manager Maisel. First-run Triangles are now used at the Capitol also.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS," Fox-Kellermann feature, was the attraction at the Amuse-U on Wednesday, January 29.

"LIFE'S GREATEST PROBLEM," with Mitchell Lewis and Ruby De Remer, will soon play a three days' run at the Gaiety.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD" finished its run here last week, making a record of thirty-two performances of the Griffith spectacle in this city. The management of the Chatterton was very much pleased with the business done on the return engagement. The success of the run was augmented in no small measure by the special advertising campaign run in the daily newspapers here, a campaign said to have been originated by D. W. himself. The advertising is entirely original, and has not been duplicated by any theatrical attraction.

ONE of the biggest surprises that Manager Watts of the Vaudeville ever received in his long life as a showman was the business done by Lila Lee in "The Secret Garden." When Miss Lee played here in October in "Such a Little Pirate" the receipts were low. Her four days in "The Secret Garden" were very good, and everyone was well pleased with the picture.

OSWALD BUHRE, once pianist at the Vaudeville, came to this city with a crackerjack vaudeville act, and made his old friends sit up.

MANAGER ED MAISEL, of the Capitol, didn't do a thing but clean up with Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms." Business was capacity from opening to closing time. The Capitol was the fourth theatre in the city to show the comedian in his war burlesque.

WARREN HARRISON, former treasurer of the Majestic theatre, has been discharged from the army and will probably resume his work at the playhouse following a short visit to Decatur and Chicago.

GUS KERASOTES has booked the Houdini serial for the Royal theatre.

CAPTAIN HARRIS HICKOX, former owner of the Vogue theatre, has been discharged from the army and has taken up his abode in this city once more.

THE EMPRESS, Southside neighborhood theatre, is doing finely under the new management. Mrs. Duer, a St. Louis woman, is now running the cosy playhouse. Business continues exceptionally fine at 10c. and 15c. admission. Fox, Vitagraph and other program features are used, with specials from time to time.

BILLY MASON, brother of J. M. Mason, of the Illinois State Journal, is leading man for Dorothy Dalton in "Hard Boiled." The Masons are from Litchfield, a city near here.

NEWS of the increased tax admission defeat brought joy to the management of the Majestic and Chatterton theatres, the two playhouses to be hit hardest had the new law gone through. Manager Riordan, of the Majestic, was all smiles when he learned of the bill's defeat.

THE CAPITOL has booked the Exhibitors' Mutual series, repeating on the Princess. "Why Germany Must Pay," a Screen Classics production, has also been booked by the Washington street theatre.

THE GAIETY THEATRE, of Springfield, showed D. W. Griffith's latest Artcraft picture, "A Romance of Happy Valley." It did well here for four days, and is without doubt one of the best things that Griffith has ever done. "Cupid's Day Off," a Sennett comedy with Ben Turpin and Charlie Lynn, was on the same bill, and it was a good one.

ONE might say the Barrymores had a reunion in Springfield with Lionel playing at the Chatterton in "The Copperhead," Ethel at the Lyric in "The Divorcee," and John at the Vaudeville in "Here Comes the Bride."

RECENT attractions at the Princess include Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams," which was presented here January 29 and 30; Mae Murray came on January 31 and February 1 in "Danger, Go Slow," and Harold Lockwood followed for three days in "The Great Romance."

"THE RED GLOVE," new Universal serial with Marie Walcamp, has been booked by Louis Kerasotes for the Savoy.

THE GAIETY has contracted for the new Mary Pickford productions to be released by First National Exhibitors. This includes "Come Out of the Kitchen," "Daddy Long-Legs" and "Pollyanna." Harry Weiss closed the deal.

MANAGER RIORDAN, of the Majestic, told Motion Picture News' correspondent that the week of January 19-25 was the biggest in the history of the theatre, breaking all previous records for attendance and amount of money paid at the box office. This, of course, excepts State Fair Week, which always means capacity at every performance.

"SPORTING LIFE" came to the Gaiety for a run, starting Sunday, February 2. It was followed by Geraldine Farrar in "Shadows," which will in turn be succeeded by William Faversham in "The Silver King."

THE PRINCESS had a fine week, January 19-25, according to a statement by Adolph Kunz, one of the owners. The first three days went to Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton in "The Prodigal Wife," a special production; Wednesday and Thursday brought Marguerite Marsh in "Conquered Hearts," and on Friday and Saturday, Bessie Barriscale was seen in "All of a Sudden Norma," her first Mutual Exhibitors' booking. Priscilla Dean and Herbert Rawlinson followed in the Bluebird feature, "Kiss or Kill," and the theatre turned them away on the opening day, Sunday, January 26.

"THE GIRL WITH NO REGRETS," Fox picture with Peggy Hyland, Ethel Barrymore in "The Divorcee" and "Woman! Woman!" with Evelyn Nesbit were the attractions at the Lyric for the week of February 2-8.

IF someone can tell Ben Rovin of the Amuse-U how he can make his theatre larger, or in some way help him accommodate the large crowds that he is forced to turn away, Ben will be delighted. For the past six months the Amuse-U has been making and breaking attendance records with great regularity. Ben attributes his success to giving the public what it wants, and in this case the Fox program, together with Hart, Fairbanks and specials, seems to be doing the trick. William Farnum, Theda Bara, George Walsh and Tom Mix are sure-fire hits at the Amuse-U and when the lobby display shows any of these stars coming—it is a clean-up day for jovial Ben.

OVER 11,000 paid admissions were recorded by the Chatterton during the repeat engagement of "Hearts of the World."

LOUIS KERASOTES has a big day every day at the Savoy, and the biggest trouble he has in the world is trying to figure out how he is going to take care of all his patrons who want to see his show every Sunday. If Louie had a place as big as the Hippodrome maybe he could, but as the Savoy is only an ordinary-sized picture show, there is no chance.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

"DOUG" FAIRBANKS in "Bound in Morocco" made a genuine hit with Bijou patrons Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 27, 28 and 29. It was practically a capacity business all the way through. In this connection it may be stated that the last week in January showed more satisfactory box office receipts at this theatre. The "flu" scare has been dissipated by the lifting of the ban on public dances and the motion picture fans are again coming into their own.

CHARLES RAY in "Playing the Game" was the feature at the Bijou, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, January 30, 31, and February 1. This thrilling story went well at the opening performance and gained in popularity through the entire engagement.

THE war pictures are down and out in Fond du Lac. The last theatre to let go of them is the Idea. "The public simply doesn't want any more war subjects," declared Manager Volpert. "The war is over and motion picture fans are interested in more pleasant subjects." The Idea has introduced a series of variety pictures that has proven popular.

"HITTING THE HIGH SPOTS," a new adventure story featuring Bert Lytell, proved a winner at the Idea, Monday and Tuesday, January 27 and 28.

WILLIAM FARNUM in "The Plunderer," a thrilling romance made new friends for that film star at the Idea on Wednesday and Thursday, January 29 and 30. The week at the Idea was rounded out by Wm. S. Hart in his masterpiece, "The Cold Deck," appearing Friday, January 31 and Saturday, February 1.

THE BIJOU THEATRE became a temporary annex of Plymouth Congregational Church, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, February 3, 4 and 5, when the Priscilla Society of that church sponsored the offering, Elsie Ferguson in Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House."

"Tarzan of the Apes" Does Well in Elgin

"TARZAN OF THE APES," which had its first showing in Elgin, Ill., Wednesday and Thursday, January 22 and 23, turned away hundreds.

They were the hundreds unable to get into the jam at the Orpheum and see the picture.

Swarms of film fans, regular and casual, thronged the theatre for matinee and evening shows on those two days, making record box office receipts for the Orpheum, praising the pictures and demanding return showing of the first "Tarzan" picture and showing soon of its sequel, "The Romance of Tarzan."

To accommodate the disappointed folks, Manager Henry P. Rorig will bring back "Tarzan" at the first possible date he can book it. He has promised "The Romance of Tarzan" that soon also.

The popularity of the picture was inspired considerably, Manager Rorig believes, by the display with which he advertised the picture in a vacant store window next his theatre.

He converted it into a miniature jungle. He used quantities of oak boughs with brown leaves still on them, artificial palms, straw carpet, stuffed animals and birds and a cage of two live monkeys, borrowed from a local park menagerie. Crowds of enthralled youngsters were to be found fascinated before the window all day long, and older folks stopped as they passed—or made special trip over on Du Page street—to watch and laugh at the monks' manoeuvres.

The hit scored by "Tarzan" was a duplication of that scored the previous week by "Shoulder Arms" at the Star, a fact that encourages Elgin managers to believe that the town will support such features at near intervals.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

THREE days of splendid business was the result of the showing of "Johanna Enlists," with Mary Pickford, which was presented at the Grand in Dubuque, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, January 22, 23 and 24. Of all the pictures in which Miss Pickford has played this one was liked the best by Dubuquers. There was nothing exciting or thrilling about the play—it was just a human little story, with laughs galore and a tear or two. One of the reasons that it drew so well was because Manager McClay advertised it as a military photoplay and they always draw exceptionally well.

"MONEY MAD," with Mae Marsh, was the attraction at the Princess theatre in Dubuque, Wednesday and Thursday, January 22 and 23. The picture played to big and average houses the first and second nights respectively.

CARLYLE BLACKWELL was the featured player at the Dreamland theatre, January 22 and 23, in "Hitting the Trail." Mr. Blackwell did some of his best work in this picture. Another noteworthy thing about the feature was the acting of Evelyn Greeley, who played the leading feminine role. The photoplay was well liked and attracted a goodly number to the theatre during its engagement.

"PETTICOATS AND POLITICS," with Anita King, was liked so well by the patrons of the Liberty theatre, where it was shown Wednesday, January 22, that they persuaded Manager Wilbur to hold it over the next day. On both days he did a rushing business.

THOMAS MEIGHAN is becoming almost as popular in Dubuque as the stars he supports. When "Arms and the Girl," starring Billie Burke, was shown at the Family theatre on Wednesday, January 22, Manager Yount advertised Thomas Meighan as a co-star, and the way it increased business was surprising. Not only the theatre's regular patrons were there in numbers, but many people from the other end of town attended. The picture was very well directed, the acting of the stars up to their usual standard and the plot most entertaining. Pictures on this order increase the patronage of a theatre.

"THE WIDOW'S MIGHT," starring Julien Eltinge, came to the Princess theatre Friday and Saturday, January 24 and 25. As a woman impersonator, Mr. Eltinge has no equal. He is well liked and his followers number not only hundreds of women, but also a great many men.

"HEADIN' SOUTH," with Douglas Fairbanks, brought Manager Yount, of the Family theatre, excellent business on Thursday, January 23. It was a good thing that the weather was not intensely cold, as there were great crowds standing out on the sidewalk during the evening.

THE DREAMLAND had Emmy Wehlen in "Sylvia on a Spree" for the Friday and Saturday, January 24 and 25, program. The star is quite well known in this locality, so the picture drew good houses.

"THE BEAST OF BERLIN" played at the Family theatre for two days, January 24 and 25. The noted Jewel production proved to be a big business getter, notwithstanding that it had a highly successful week's engagement at the Majestic several months before. The Friday attendance at the Family was very good, while that of Saturday was even better.

WEATHER in Dubuque continues to be ideal for the motion picture business. Every theatre is very well attended; the houses are always full. The Grand and the Princess are being patronized more than ever, as are the other theatres. The Grand has gone in for extensive advertising, and the other theatres are also beginning to realize the advantages of good ads. The Grand has added a press agent to their staff and has made an arrangement to increase their ads to an extent that they are entitled to a fair amount of reading matter, not in the form of a reader, but like a general news story. It appears to be working out finely as there is a very noticeable gain in attendance.

"FAN FAN," the William Fox extravaganza which was the program at the Dreamland theatre Sunday and Monday, January 26 and 27, played to only fair houses both days. This was all the more surprising for the Dreamland is noted for its usual Sunday capacity houses.

THE FAMILY THEATRE had Dorothy Dalton in "Flare Up Sal" for the Sunday, January 26, program. The afternoon houses were about average, but the evening crowds more than made up for the afternoon. Miss Dalton has steadily been rising in popularity at the Family theatre ever since her famous "Love Letters." Her next production is being eagerly awaited.

Interesting Items of Elgin

HOUDINI in "The Master Mystery" series shown first at the Temple on Thursday, January 28, brought considerable agreeable praise to the ears of Manager William M. Fay. The first showing of the serial made a great hit and its popularity promises to increase with successive showings. Manager Fay considers the picture an exceptional feature and is more than satisfied with his booking of it and his first attempt to step into "big city" pace.

PRISCILLA DEAN in "The Wildcat of Paris" is one of the super-productions booked for the Temple for February 11. For Tuesday and Wednesday, February 4 and 5, Manager Fay secured the Bessie Barriscale late release, "The Heart of Rachel." On February 7 the picture in which Sessue Hayakawa plays a dual role, "Bonds of Honor," was shown at the Temple. Bessie Barriscale came again February 9 in "All of a Sudden Norma." The trio of stars are immensely popular with Elgin audiences and the Temple is expecting big houses with all of these events.

WITH "finals" week of examinations in the public schools in the late week of January 12 and early week of January 19, the patronage of young people and school children noticeably swelled the attendance at Elgin theatres.

NORMA TALMADGE in "The Forbidden City" was tremendously complimented by the many who saw the picture at the Grand on Friday and Saturday, January 17 and 18. They were enthusiastic over both her acting and the beautiful settings of the picture, rating it one of the most appealing and enjoyable showings booked there in the past several weeks.

"MRS. LEFFINGWELL'S BOOTS" drew out two days' houses that rollicked with laughter over the pretty clothes and perplexities in screen life of Constance Talmadge. It was shown at the Grand on Monday and Tuesday, January 20 and 21, to big houses. Elgin is growing more and more fond of Constance Talmadge, but are inclined to be critical of the man who has been playing opposite her in her late pictures.

Detroit Exhibitors Stage Shows Under Difficulties

DETROIT exhibitors have been up in arms over new and drastic rules just promulgated by J. C. McCabe, commissioner of buildings, who has recently taken office. Mr. McCabe sent notice to every theatre that no furniture could be placed in the foyers unless it was securely fastened to the floor, that after all seats in the house have been sold no one is to be permitted to stand either in the theatre or in the lobby and that all signs displayed in front must be at least 12 feet above the pavement. Some of the exhibitors have obeyed the instructions, but a great number have not. Those who have obeyed have held their patrons out on the street, with the result that thousands have been turned away because they would not wait outside in the cold.

San Francisco Opposes Film Tax of Five Per Cent

THE Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco, at a recent meeting, took action in opposition to the proposed Government tax of 5 per cent on film rentals. Later the United Motion Picture Industries of Northern California composed of exchanges and theatremen took up the campaign. It has long been asserted that the motion picture industry has been taxed to the limit. Now there is no further plan of raising the tax on admission to legitimate theatres but the effort is being made to place a new 5-cent tax on pictures. San Francisco owners of picture houses say that the added tax would compel them to raise their prices and would put some of them out of business. It is also alleged that the proposed tax would be a discrimination against the theatres. At the meeting of the film men on the 27th inst it was decided to put four-minute men in all the theatres for the purpose of speaking against the proposed tax and to circulate petitions. Harry Lee Knappen of Select Corporation was put in charge of the four-minute men and he had speakers in all the houses last night. As a result several thousand signatures were secured and mailed at once to Congress. It is the intention to keep up this work, mailing the names each night, until the cause is won or the passage of the bill makes further effort useless.

Exchanges Lose Case to Keep Theatres Open in Northern California

THE fight the exchange men of Northern California made to test the power of the authorities to close the theatres during an alleged epidemic was decided in favor of the authorities in the Stockton case.

Superior Judge Nicol, who had the case under consideration at Stockton, decided that the theatre closing ordinance enacted by the city council as an influenza measure is legal. The decision followed arguments for a permanent injunction by attorneys representing the theatre men and the Christian scientists, who objected to closing the theatres. The San Francisco exchanges were represented in the case, but their assistance was of no avail.

Portland Theatres' Still Operate Under Restrictions

PORTLAND motion picture theatres are still operating under the self-imposed but authority-suggested regime of limiting attendance strictly to seating capacity. However, the "flu" situation is much improved, new cases dropping from 400 daily to fewer than 100, and it is expected that within a few weeks things will be back to normal.

Theatre business dropped to the "how can we pay expenses?" level immediately after the people awoke to the gravity of the situation, but during the past week it has gradually crept back towards the capacity mark and the last week in January proved a moneymaker for practically every house.

Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life" started off like a world beater at the Liberty, against business at that big house with unusually good attractions that was so small for two weeks as to force programme changes for the final two days of the week.

The question of mask-wearing was agitated, privately, publicly and officially in Portland, with the film men lined up with the "pros" as the way to protect themselves against possible drastic action while the street cars and department stores conducted business along the same old lines of crowd congestion. They felt that the enforced wearing of masks would instill confidence into the public and increase attendance at theatres.

The churches "resolved" in favor of a 30-day closing of schools, churches, theatres, etc., and even a business man's organization advocated the same. But Dr. A. E. Sommers, commander in chief of the drive against the influenza, halted them with statistics and the assertion that if he closed the town he would close it tightly, which would mean the elimination of street car traffic and the closing of all stores except those selling foodstuffs. This threat of no discrimination temporarily stopped the agitation of those who had absolutely nothing at stake financially.

The theatremen gained much prestige by their actions throughout the crisis, Dr. Sommers publicly commending their public spiritedness through the columns of "The Oregonian," while E. B. Piper, editor of that daily, came to their aid in another instance by attacking the proposed discriminatory tax on the industry, the poor man's amusement, in an editorial.

Heard in Los Angeles Town

THE Dixon theatre at Ventura has changed hands and has been renamed. It is now the American theatre and is being conducted under the management of C. B. Corcoran. Mr. Corcoran was a visitor to Los Angeles this week and booked a number of attractions for the theatre, mainly Universal pictures, it is understood.

THE Omar theatre, on Main street, which has been closed for some time, has been reopened under the management of Payne & Harrison. It has booked Universal service.

"THE WILDCAT OF PARIS," with Priscilla Dean, was held over at the Superba theatre for a two-weeks' run, and it broke the attendance record for the house for a second-weeks' run of any previous subject, according to announcement by Assistant Branch Manager Quinn, of the Universal exchange. The picture will have its second-run showing in Los Angeles at the Palace theatre, on West Seventh street.

"BORROWED CLOTHES," in which Mildred Harris is the star, has been booked by the Garrick theatre for second-run showing, starting February 22. The picture originally had a two-weeks' run at the Superba theatre. It is a Universal subject.

DAVID BERSHON, branch manager of the Universal exchange, who has been ill two weeks with influenza, was much improved this week and was able to visit the office for a few minutes last Saturday. He expects to be back at his desk for February 1, it is announced.

THE offices of the World Film exchange in Los Angeles are to be enlarged, when in the next few weeks the United offices will be moved into the World Film headquarters, according to announcement by President Ricord Gladwell, of the World Film corporation, who is in Los Angeles on an indefinite visit. The contract for enlarging the offices has been let and it is expected that the United forces will be in their new quarters within the next thirty days. The business of the exchange has increased to such an extent within the past few months, President Gladwell announced, that R. W. McKinney, salesman for the World exchange, has been made assistant branch manager. T. E. Hancock is branch manager, and he announces that a progressive policy for the exchange is being outlined for the new year.

THREE theatres in Los Angeles—possibly Clune's Auditorium, the California and the Kinema theatres—will exhibit World film kinograms, or natural color pictures, it semi-officially announced this week. Branch Manager Hancock stated that kinograms are in great demand and that they would be shown in possibly three first-run houses.

TWO Mutual releases were shown last week in downtown houses in Los Angeles. They were Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," at Grauman's theatre, and "Bonds of Honor," at Clune's Broadway. Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" has been booked for second run at the Palace theatre.

HARVEY GAUSMAN, salesman for First National, has returned from a trip to Santa Paula, where he found the principal theatre in the town, the Elektra, closed for one week. Its proprietor, H. L. Baumgartner, is ill with influenza. He also reports that he booked all First National releases at Barne's theatre, at Fillmore, Cal.

San Diego News Condensed

THE HILLCREST theatre, which was closed at the time the "flu" ban was put on all places of amusement last October, is still dark and no announcement has been made as to when it will reopen.

AT the beginning of the war Miss Margarita Fisher, the popular film star, offered a solid gold medal to the first airman trained at Rockwell Field, this city, to down a Hun plane. Lieut. Frank Luke, whose home was in Phoenix, Ariz., has been officially declared the winner of the medal, but as he met death in action September 29 the medal is to be presented to his parents through the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce. Lieutenant Luke had to his credit 15 enemy airplanes and 25 balloons.

M. A. WALSH, formerly in the motion picture producing field at Los Angeles, has assumed the management of the Pickwick theatre in this city, having resigned as branch manager of the Fox Film Corporation. At one time he looked after the Fox interests in Omaha, Neb., and prior to that was a theatrical manager in New York City. Incident to his coming here, it is announced, that the Pickwick will be redecorated throughout.

THE BROADWAY has been making a hit with a two-star bill, showing Constance Talmadge in "A Lady's Name" and Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life." Will Rogers in "Laughing Bill Hyde" has been a good drawing card at the Superba. At the Cabrillo Manager Hicks has been showing to good houses "The One Woman." The Harold Lockwood feature, "Pals First," has held the boards at the Plaza. "For Freedom," featuring William Farnum, had its initial presentation in San Diego at the Pickwick January 27th.

Carl H. Pierce, service manager of Famous Players-Lasky, and Private Peat were recent visitors at the Lasky studio in Hollywood, Cal.

In Portland Film Circles

THE first thing that Gus A. Metzger, former Northwest Universal manager, more recently Jewel manager for New York City, and now Western chief of the Big U, did when he arrived in Portland, was to appoint Frank Talbert, popular auditor of the Portland Universal Exchange for four years, to the position of traveling auditor for Metzger's territory. This territory includes the Denver, Salt Lake, Butte, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles exchanges. Talbert went to San Francisco to commence his new duties.

J. J. PARKER, owner of the Majestic; John A. Jennings, owner of the Sunset, and C. S. Jensen, of Jensen and Von Herberg, who own the Liberty and Columbia theatres, are three Portland exhibitors who have just returned home from a long trip to California. They spent considerable time at the studios in Los Angeles.

ONE of the biggest Portland trade showings of a year was that given the Jewel production, "Heart of Humanity," at the Liberty Theater. G. A. Metzger superintended the showing, which attracted a large crowd of enthusiastic ones. H. B. Murtagh, of the Liberty theatre, rendered a special musical program, Metzger bringing a special score with him from New York.

WALTER ARMSTRONG put over another big show in the face of adverse conditions caused by the "flu" when he showed Universal's special, "The Wildcat of Paris." He advertised it well, used that striking head stand freely in the lobby, and could have played to several hundred dollars more business had he ignored the "no-seat-no-admittance" order.

LEW F. CULLINS, who operates the Casino theatre at The Dalles, Ore., and has done so for twelve years, is just about the oldest exhibitor, in point of continuous service, in the Northwest. His only break was caused by the "flu," which shut him down for a few weeks and then, after several weeks of open-house, enforced another shut-down. He spent most of the last enforced rest period in Portland. Cullins has been in the show game since the early eighties. He was a contortionist, acrobat, circus performer and owner before he tired of the limelight and turned to theatre operation.

DEAN COLLINS, who is editor of Universal's "Reel Stuff," calls Charley Schram "the sad but successful bird who operates the Grand at Oregon City."

THE "flu" lid seems to be off again at Klamath Falls, Ore., while there's a strict ban on at Salem, the capital, and a voluntary closing at Albany.

J. B. SPARKS, of Heppner and Condon, Ore., was in Portland the other day on a vacation. A "flu" quarantine closed his theatres.

JAMES CHENAUR, of the Dream Theatre, Port Angeles, Wash., has sold the house to M. J. Davis and C. F. Jones.

MRS. O. C. LEITER has sold her interest in the Arcade theatre, La Grande, Ore., to Ed Ford. Mrs. Leiter was one of the most successful woman exhibitors in the country.

LATE reports had 38 Oregon towns closed because of Spanish Influenza.

J. C. UGLOW has changed the name of his Orpheum theatre, Dallas, Ore., to the Majestic.

MANAGER BROWER will reopen the St. Helens, Ore., film house under the name Sunset.

BEVERLY GRIFFITH, Universal special representative before he went into the army, will soon be back in film harness. He's been in Portland several times of late.

AFTER six months of darkness W. E. Johnson opened his Madras, Ore., theatre with the Monroe Salisbury picture, "The Red, Red Heart." "Went over great" was the message Sol Baum, Universal boss in Portland, received from Johnson.

NICK PIERONG, manager of the Hippodrome theatre, Tacoma, Wash., was in Portland recently. He made a special visit to Sol Baum, Universal manager, who was "Bluebird Sol" in the days when Nick introduced 'em to Portland at the Strand theatre.

J. H. ARMSTRONG, of the Strand theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., was another Portland visitor not long ago. He fell hard for "The Wildcat of Paris," which mopped up at the Strand, Portland, and wanted to carry it away with him.

PAUL E. ("NO-BULL") NOBLE, advertising expert for Jensen and Von Herberg at the Liberty and Columbia theatres, is back on the job after an attack of Spanish Influenza. He contracted it foregathering with film men and city officials anent the prospects of closing Portland theatres again. Noble violently attacked the scheme as unnecessary and then promptly hied himself home to bed and under quarantine.

Erb Sells Plaza in Denver to Brown and Megeahan

ANOTHER important theatre deal was consummated in Denver last week when Messrs. L. B. Brown and Manager Megeahan of the Strand, members of the Theatre Operating company, took over control of the Plaza, one of Denver's largest and oldest nickel admission motion picture houses. L. F. Erb, who has conducted the Plaza for a considerable period, has relinquished his unexpired lease of the theatre and its equipment in favor of the new managers, who took possession February 1, and will continue the business with the same admission rate. Mr. Erb has as yet made no plans for the future.

The Plaza is located in the same block and a few doors from the new Rivoli, formerly the Paris, recently acquired by the Theatre Operating company. Its seating capacity is 1,200, and the building was erected in 1904 by the Up the Divide Theatre company, which has received a monthly rental of $500 for the theatre since that time. It has always been well patronized.

Denver Keeps Eye on Proposed Censor Bill

PROPOSED legislation providing for a state board of censors is being watched by Denver exchange managers and exhibitors. The bill, which was introduced several days ago by Representative Furrow in the lower house of the legislature would impose unnecessary restrictions upon every exhibitor in the state, and its passage will be vigorously opposed by local representatives of the industry.

The measure provides for a state board to consist of five resident citizens of Colorado, "well qualified by education and experience to be censors," who shall be appointed by the governor, state superintendent of public instruction and chairman of the state board of control, in joint session, for a term of two years.

Ample provision is made for the reward of party fealty under the proposed law, the chairman to receive an annual salary of $2,200 and each of the other four members of the board $1,800. The board is empowered to appoint such number of employees as may be necessary and fix their compensation.

All films must be submitted to the state board for their approval, and it will be the duty of the board to say whether such films are "moral and proper," and when they are "sacreligious, obscene, indecent or immoral, or tend to debase or corrupt morals."

Any person violating the orders of the censors shall be subjected to a fine of from $5 to $500 or by imprisonment for a term of thirty days. It is further provided that any person exhibiting a misbranded film shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of $50 or thirty days in jail.

The local exchange board of trade at their last meeting took steps to prevent the enactment of the bill.

In and Around Denver

H. B. HURST has sold the Deadwood theatre in Deadwood, S. D., to M. C. Kellogg, owner of the Homestead opera house at Lead, S. D., who will continue the business. Mr. Hurst, who is well known in this territory and who is one of the leading members of the Black Hills Exhibitors' League, states that he has made no definite plans for the future, but announces that he is looking for a new location.

BEN COHEN, vice-president and general manager of the Foursquare Pictures Corporation of Colorado, was prevented on account of important local business matters from leaving for New York this week, as he had intended. He plans now to leave Denver about February 5 and will spend ten days in New York in selecting the new pictures he intends to purchase. He will make his headquarters at the States Rights office in the Longnecker building.

MANAGER H. E. LOTZ, of Select, is visiting exhibitors in Salt Lake and Ogden.

MANAGER H. D. CASSIDY, of Exhibitors-Mutual, visited Colorado Springs and Pueblo this week and gave a trade screening of "Cannibals of the South Seas" and "The Eleventh Commandment."

BUSINESS is booming again, according to G. A. Parfet, the newest addition to the sales force of Pathe. He has returned from a trip covering part of Wyoming and the Black Hills district, visited twenty-one towns and sold twenty. He also claims to have discovered a new town with a thriving little theatre on this trip. It is called Kooi, a coal camp, near Sheridan, Wyo. The theatre takes its name from the town and is conducted by A. M. Waymeck, who booked several Pathe productions.

LOUIS GOLDSTEIN, former manager of Supreme headquarters, has returned from Camp Cody and Camp Humphrey and is now connected with the National Film company, which is being reorganized.

THEDA BARA went over big in "Salome" this week at the Rivoli, where the new Symphony orchestra is almost as big a drawing card as the high class pictures shown at that theatre.

THE following well known out-of-town exhibitors were recent visitors at local exchanges: W. A. Root, owner of the Princess at Olney Springs, Colo.; Tom Tompkins, owner of the Liberty, Colorado Springs; C. C. Lyons, manager of the Crest Amusement company, De Beque, Colo.; C. C. Lyons, Monarch theatre, Grant, Neb., and C. H. Anderson, owner of the Opera House theatre at Rawlins, Wyo.

What They Say in Seattle

WHEN Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink was in Seattle, resting up for her concerts which she was to give, she desired to see some of the pictures that were being played at the houses at that time. Consequently she was taken to "The Silver King," an Artcraft, in which William Faversham was starring at the Liberty, and to the Coliseum, where Bryant Washburn made a hit in "The Venus of the East." Both of these houses are under the direction of Jensen and von Herberg. Madame Schumann-Heink was very much pleased with the pictures as well as the theatre settings, orchestras and organs.

"MICKEY," starring Mabel Normand, made a hit with Seattle crowds when run off at James Q. Clemmer's "Clemmer." The theatre was overflowing with enthusiasm and crowds for the whole week. There were rows on both sides of the box-office each of the seven days. Part of this popularity was due to the picture, which is a wonder, and part to Mr. Clemmer's mode of progressive advertising. The week before the "Mickey" production Clemmer not only advertised it on the screen and used big space in all the papers, but he employed a good tenor to sing the new song, "Mickey," at each performance. After each production Chas. Fisher played "The Charmer," by Boos, on the Xylophone, accompanied by Guterson's entire Russian orchestra.

THE Universal's new sketch featuring Tom Mix in "Treat 'Em Rough" recently did a big business at "The Colonial." Manager Mead, of the Seattle office of the Universal, announces that many inquiries are coming in regarding the Victory Service, and that great business is being done with it.

With Los Angeles Theatres and Exchanges

A SCREEN review of "Unto the End," the new picture in which Crane Wilbur returns to the screen after an absence of more than one year, was given this week by the Triangle exchange, through which organization the picture will be released. It will be recalled that Wilbur has been playing in stock at the Liberty theatre at Oakland, Cal., for nearly a year. The picture was made by David Horsley. Before going into stock Wilbur was starred by Pathe, and he also appeared in some serials.

GROUND for the new Pantages theatre, to be constructed at the corner of Seventh and Hill streets in Los Angeles, was broken at 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, January 25. Arrangements to make motion pictures of the event were made by W. H. Hepburn, branch manager of the Vitagraph exchange. "The Man of Might," the new Vitagraph serial, starring William Duncan, has been booked at the Pantages theatre on Broadway, Manager Hepburn announces, and Mr. Duncan played an important part at the ground-breaking celebration.

PAT STEVENSON, salesman for Vitagraph, returned this week from a visit to Arizona, where he booked "The Common Law," J. Stuart Blackton's superproduction, at Brandon Brothers' Elks' theatre in Phoenix. The run will begin January 31. It is the first time the picture has been booked in this territory. Bookings in Los Angeles are pending, Mr. Hepburn says, and he expects to close some contracts for the subject within the next few days.

ROBERT AMADOR, who is also a salesman for Vitagraph, has returned from a trip to Bakersfield and Taft, Cal., where he reports excellent business, especially in Bakersfield.

THE ten, twenty and thirty policy of the Film Clearing House will be inaugurated in Los Angeles at Ray's Garden theatre on February 2, according to announcement this week by Branch Manager Roberts. The first picture under the new plan to be shown in Los Angeles will be "Her Mistake," with Evelyn Nesbit. The second release will be "Life's Greatest Problem," starring Mitchell Lewis. Incidentally, it is claimed by Branch Manager Roberts that "Life's Greatest Problem" is the best picture in which Mr. Lewis has ever appeared.

THE Film Clearing House series of pictures under the ten, twenty and thirty plan has been booked at a San Diego house, the name of which Manager Roberts says he will announce next week.

ED. K. LAMSON, who recently became affiliated with the Film Clearing House exchange as salesman, this week returned from a trip to Imperial Valley and San Diego, where he reports fair business. In Imperial Valley business is good, he says, and an improvement is noted at San Diego. He will leave next week for Arizona, where he will call on the principal exhibitors of that territory.

W. S. RAND, division manager for General Film, together with A. B. Lamb, Metro branch manager; Ben Fish, of Goldwyn, and Clyde Elliott, of Select, returned last week from their visit to Phoenix, where they were the guests of Rickards & Nace, showmen of that city. Mr. Rand says that the Arizona exhibitors' convention, which was to have been held, did not materialize, inasmuch as only a few exhibitors were in attendance. In the meantime, however, the film men from Los Angeles were entertained quite lavishly and when it was all over the exhibitors discreetly requested that rentals on films be lowered. The offices in Los Angeles now have the request under advisement.

THE Film Clearing House exchange has launched a special campaign in Southern California in exploiting "Wanted for Murder," one of the premier releases of this concern. Louis Thompson, special representative of the exchange, went to San Diego this week to blaze the trail for the booking of the subject in that city.

R. C. VISNER, salesman for the Fox exchange, has returned from Arizona, where he spent two weeks writing contracts for Fox subjects.

PAUL MOONEY, district manager for Fox exchanges, left Los Angeles last Saturday for a trip through the Northwest. He will be absent about two weeks and during this time will visit in San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Denver and Salt Lake City.

CLAUDE S. JENSEN, of Portland, one of the prominent exhibitors of the northern city, after several weeks' visit in Los Angeles has returned to Portland.

DIVISION MANAGER AARONSON, of the Goldwyn Distributing corporation, has arrived in Los Angeles for an indefinite stay. He is a guest at the Hotel Alexandria.

STEPHEN BLACHLY, formerly salesman for General Film, has been engaged by Goldwyn, according to announcement this week by Branch Manager Ben Fish. His territory will be the city of Los Angeles and California. He succeeds Harvey Gausman, who recently was engaged by the First National.

JOHN HAMRICK, manager of the Rex theatre at Seattle, is visiting in Los Angeles. He says that business in Seattle is getting back to normal.

KITTY GORDON, now producing for the United Program through the medium of her own company, will make a personal appearance at the Alhambra theatre on February 3, when her initial release, "Adele," has its first showing in Los Angeles at that house. "Adele" is a war story, the locale being in France, and Miss Gordon plays the role of a Red Cross nurse. The song, "Rose of No Man's Land," will be sung during the presentation of the play, it is announced.

News of the Week in San Francisco

THE San Francisco Film Board of Trade has now been completely organized and all its committees appointed. The most important committee and the one which will have charge of the work for which the Board is primarily organized is the Grievance Committee. This is made up of M. L. Markowitz, of the Universal Film Exchange; G. L. Parsons, of the Goldwyn; and Louis Reichert, of the Metro. The duties of the committee are "to investigate and settle any grievance among the members or between one or more members and any other person or persons."

J. A. BEATTY, the owner of the Liberty theatres of San Jose and Fresno, was in San Francisco. He says that he found business in Fresno on a recent visit there in a remarkably satisfactory condition. As he expressed it he felt "as if a 30-pound weight has been taken from my feet." Speaking of changes in policy, Mr. Beatty is going to put on two changes a week instead of three as formerly, while the Kinema theatre of the same city is planning to go from an exclusive first-run house with two or three weekly changes to repeats of Fairbanks, Pickford and other prominent stars and daily changes.

PENNY AND WILSON have purchased the World theatre at Gilroy and after completely redecorating and renaming it the Orpheum they have signed up with Universal. For music the new owners have installed a new fotoplayer.

J. W. BARLOW, of the Maze theatre, Stockton, recently ran the "Lure of the Circus" in his house and was so pleased with the results of the picture that he insisted on paying the Universal $5 extra for rental. It is believed that the case is unique.

W. E. MATHEWS, sales representative of the General Film Company at Los Angeles has been transferred to the San Francisco office to succeed C. I. Luntz.

J. E. SAMUELS, special representative of the General Film of New York, after visiting San Francisco, has gone to the northwest where he will visit the branches of the company in Seattle and Portland.

SOL LESSER is back from Los Angeles with a contract for the distribution of the "Fall of Babylon" in his pocket. He says that is the only important thing he came in contact with in the Southern metropolis.

FRANK OLSEN, formerly shipping clerk for the local office of the Pathe, was recently honorably discharged from service in the army and he is now back on his old job again with the Pathe.

CHARLES E. BRAY, manager of the Orpheum at Los Angeles, ran up to San Francisco recently, accompanied by his wife. E. O. Child of Pathe entertained them at dinner while they were here.

THE HIPPODROME THEATRE of this city is going back to vaudeville and the pictures. For some time it has been running a musical comedy, but it has shipped this company to its newly acquired house in Los Angeles and returned to its old manner of entertainment. The Pathe picture "Dolly's Vacation," with Baby Marie Osborne, will be its first picture.

THE class in scenario writing of the University of California recently met in Photoplay hall for a pre-view of the photoplay written by Professor Snell, the head of the department.

WITH Uda Waldrop as organist and Miss Blanch Fox as soloist the Oakland T & D theatre orchestra gave its first symphony concert on Sunday, January 26. The sixty-five musical artists were under the baton of Signor Ulderico Marcelli, former Panama-Pacific Exposition musical director.

FRANK LLOYD, of the Fox Film Company, Hollywood, and an aggregation of motion picture people are registered at hotels in San Francisco. It is stated that the Fox people are going to film a photoplay here. Whether this is preliminary to moving the studio to San Francisco is unknown.

California Legislature Takes Fling at Pictures

THERE have been several bills introduced in the State legislature at Sacramento, Cal., which the motion picture industries intend to fight. The most dangerous of these bills are, 1st: To close the theatres on Sundays; 2d: To censor all pictures before they are exhibited, and 3d: To prevent the selling of tickets for which there is no seat vacant at the time of sale. A meeting was held at the Palace Hotel on January 27 to combat these bills.

The meeting appointed a delegate to go to Sacramento to get all available data on the bills, and after he reports back a vigorous campaign will be inaugurated against the proposed laws. It is believed by some that the bills have a portion at least of the same backing as recently voted California into the "dry" column after the votes of the State had voted by a large majority against a "dry" State. As this element is in power at Sacramento at present the theatres will have a hard time to overcome the bills, providing they have anywhere near the united Prohibition support.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

TO surpass all records made at the Rialto theatre prior to his assuming the management, three times within a period of three weeks is the remarkable report on business made this week by Manager Ralph Ruffner, of that well-known Butte house. This showing reflects the general prosperity now felt in local theatre circles as well as the managerial ability of Mr. Ruffner.

"THE SILVER KING" started off big January 26 at the Rialto and pleased immensely.

ALTHOUGH at one time the Orpheum was the leading theatre in Butte, the box-office receipts resulting from the showing last week of "The Fall of the Barbary Coast" put all previous records in the shade, according to Manager E. Marshal Taylor.

THE final episode of "Hands Up" was shown at the American theatre the past week. The serial had a big following. "The Lightning Raider," with Pearl White starring, will now be on the boards at this house.

A. W. EDEN, formerly with the Fox exchange in Seattle, is now district manager for Select with the exchange in the Washington metropolis. He spent several days in Butte last week. "The future of the picture business never looked brighter," he said to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative. "In Washington things at present are not up to normal, a number of the middle-sized cities, such as Olympia, still being closed on account of the influenza. But indications are that the entire State will be open within ten days."

Exhibitors Get License Money Back

LOS ANGELES theatre men, through their organization Motion Picture Theatre Owner's of Southern California, recently petitioned the city council for refund of license for the period of eight weeks that the theatres were closed because of influenza. The petition was endorsed by the council, and all theatre owners who have made application for the return of license money, have received checks.

Spokane News and Views

THE actress who "doubled" for Kathlyn Williams in the wild animal scenes of "The Adventures of Kathlyn" entertained Spokane audiences in person last week. She is Mlle. Olga Celeste, and has been an animal trainer at the Selig studios since 1907. She has appeared in a number of the big animal acts put out in the last twelve years, and is under contract to start work on a new picture when she reaches Los Angeles on her present trip.

THE CECIL DE MILLE production, "We Can't Have Everything," and Marguerite Clark in "Little Miss Hoover" were the alternate programs at the Clemmer.

AN ELINOR GLYN story, "The Reason Why," with Clara Kimball Young, was the Liberty offering.

"TREAT 'EM ROUGH," the Fox production starring Tom Mix, shown at the Casino, has all the elements of an exciting western romance and drew big audiences during its engagement.

J. WARREN KERRIGAN drew feminine admirers in large numbers to the Class A all week. He was featured in "A Burglar for a Night."

Exchangemen Visit Phoenix Convention

A. B. LAMB of Metro, Ben Fish of Goldwyn, Clyde Elliott of Select, and Walter Rand, special representative of General, all Los Angeles exchange managers, spent several days of the past week at Phoenix, Ariz., going there primarily to attend a convention of Arizona exhibitors, which had been called but which was not held, as the emergency—the closing of theatres because of influenza by the State board—for which the meeting was called, was taken care of before the date for the theatre men to get together.

Swanson-Nolan Incorporate in Denver

LOCAL MANAGER J. J. MORGAN announces a change in the name of the theatre supply business at 1514-18 Welton street, Denver, Col., until recently known as The Theatre Supply Company. It was desired to incorporate under a more distinctive name, therefore the name has been changed to The Swanson-Nolan Theatre Equipment Company. The company has opened at a new location in Salt Lake City, at 132 East Second south, in charge of Earl D. Smith, and temporary headquarters have been established at 423 South Fifteenth street in Omaha, in charge of O. B. Olson.

All this martial atmosphere was caused by the return of Luther Reed to the Metro fold. The salute is June Mathis' conception of a proper greeting, while Bert Lytell stands at attention

Denver Exhibitor Captures Hold-up Man

DE WITT C. WEBBER, owner of the Webber theatre, one of Denver's finest suburban picture houses, probably saved his own life a few nights ago, when he answered the command of a young bandit to hold up his hands by firing two shots from his revolver, one of which wounded the robber to the extent that he himself surrendered. Incidentally, the wounded bandit is one of a pair of holdups wanted for several robberies and a recent murder. Webber's victim is now in the hospital.

Movie Emporium Grows Rapi

THE Movie Emporium, conducted by M. and H. Calmy, is being equipped with necessary machinery to do all kinds of repair work on theatre projecting equipment. This firm, although one of the youngest on Los Angeles Film Row, has in a very short time grown from a very small institution to one of particular importance. The stock of projecting equipment and theatre supplies has been rapidly increased and the firm is doing a very good business.

¶ The West Coast Edition of Motion Picture News costs us a lot of money. It costs just as much as would a separate publication published locally in Los Angeles or San Francisco. But it's worth it to us—Because it enables us to say that NO OTHER FILM PUBLICATION covers the West Coast as thoroughly, and with such intimate news and gossip as does Motion Picture News.

¶ We have often thought though—What a wonderful West Coast Edition we could get out, how much more money we could spend, how much more Service we could give—If every theatre manager in the West Coast territory sat down one night and wrote a twenty word note to his exchanges and the New York offices telling what the West Coast Edition meant to him because of its crisp, human, local items. Has it ever occurred to you? Why we could break speed limits in Service!

¶ Will you do it? Will you let us know about it? And then watch our smoke!

"There it is"— * * an imperfection has just shown on the studio screen. The projectionist douses his light and turns off the motor switch, and what a moment before was a softly purring, live, projector, smoothly running at the highest possible speed is instantly brought to a halt.

* * * * *

* * the photographic imperfections on the film are noted and with another snap of the switch the mechanism again becomes a thing of glistening, pulsating life through which miles of newly developed film pass during the day, stopping and starting, stopping and starting with never a scratch inflicted upon the valuable prints and only demanding lubrication and minimum care from the projectionist.

* * * * *

* * this is what daily takes place in the finest studio projection rooms throughout the country.

* * * * *

* * what absolute confidence the director must have in the workmanship of this projector to entrust his priceless prints to its mechanism.

* * * * *

* * what wonderful trust must the projectionist repose in the endurance of this projector that uncomplainingly does its work for years.

* * * * *

* * the peerless SIMPLEX has earned this confidence and trust by performing similar duties in fully 88% of our American film studios. One of the largest producing companies in New York employs nine Simplex Projectors to run off these new prints as a final checking-up of detail before they are assembled.

* * * * *

* * the strain imposed through this constant stop and start—the quality of material that is needed to withstand the sudden impulse that sends a loaded mechanism from a dead stop to high-speed without the use of a speed control, speaks volumes for the ever-growing demand for Simplex for studio use.

Motion Picture News says:

"Vitagraph has shown itself as capable a serial-producing company as there is in the field today, and 'The Man of Might' gives promise of being its greatest effort in this line. 'The Man of Might' is a rousing, fighting, thrilling serial. The thrill which terminates the second episode is a thing to make the hair stand on end on a bald man's head."

Exhibitor's Trade Review says:

"If 'The Man of Might' doesn't score a bigger hit than previous serials made by William Duncan and released by Vitagraph we miss our guess. It's about the best thing in serials we've ever seen. The way that man Duncan can put over a fight scene is a caution, and the stunts he performs make the so-called dare-devils look like four-flushers."

The Billboard says:

William Duncan and Edith Johnson work strenuously for gratifying results. The marvel of it all is that human ingenuity can accomplish such feats:"

MABEL NORMAND in Sis Hopkins

From Rose Melville's Year's-Long Stage Success

Directed by Clarence G. Badger

Released Everywhere ~ Feb. 16

Plays may come and plays may go, but "Sis Hopkins" has lived for a generation. One star alone could not escape this successful role for thirteen continuous years. As a stage comedy it made more than a million dollars for its owner.

All comedies that outlive their competitive plays by getting a hold upon public affection owe their success to a wonderful blending of heart interest and laughter.

Smiles and tears make a magic ingredient in the screen and stage lands of make-believe. "Sis Hopkins" is wistful and laughable; pathetic and filled with the joy of life. Hence, her tremendous popularity.

When "Sis Hopkins" cries to her jealous sweetheart: "It ain't your heart you're cutting, Ridy; its mine!" you get a clutch in your throat and a mist in your eyes. You and all your patrons have hearts exactly like "Sis" and "Ridy."

When "Sis" voices the philosophy of her shiftless parent: "Paw sez: Never do nothin' for nobody that don't do nothin' for you" laughter creeps into your heart to stay.

This is an extraordinarily fine Goldwyn picture that has resulted from putting the screen's greatest comedienne in one of the most famous stage hits and bestowing upon both Goldwyn's customary care in production.

FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

The Place in the Program Exhibitors Assign to the FORD EDUCATIONAL WEEKLY

WE suggest to several thousand exhibitors in whose theatres we wish to book The Ford Educational Weekly that they give attention to the reasons why other exhibitors have booked it. This weekly release has a definite place in a house program; a place made doubly valuable by its exclusiveness.

Here you are listening to the logic of the box-office; the logic of experience:

BERNARD DEPKIN Jr.: Parkway, Baltimore—"No one can announce in competition with it any feature that matches it for exclusiveness of topic. It finds the drama and human interest in the overlooked things of American life."

FRANK BUHLER: Stanley Co., Philadelphia—"It pictures the big, solid things and people always being talked about in the great daily newspapers of the country."

AARON J. JONES: Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago—"The Ford Weekly is the great teacher of the screen and audiences never realize that they are being taught by it.... It is playing in 200 theatres in Chicago."

SID. GRAUMAN: Grauman's Theatre, Los Angeles—"Our audiences watch it as closely as they watch a tense play, which proves its human interest."

In other words: Every exhibitor has a reason of his own for running The Ford Educational Weekly in his theatre. This accounts for the fact that it has the greatest circulation any screen product has ever received. Goldwyn is its exclusive distributor. We advise you to sign it up promptly.

PHILA. PRESS: Rich, breezy, handsome, dare-devil Louis Bennison, famous from Coast to Coast, is a conquering hero in "Sandy Burke Of the U-Bar-U" at the Arcadia. The picture wins high favor.

PHILA. INQUIRER: They should call Louis Bennison "the smiling star." His newest picture, "Sandy Burke," is a reputation-maker for him.

THE NORTH AMERICAN: Louis Bennison is setting the fashion for a different kind of star; he is a welcome change from the general run of so-called favorites.

PHILA. RECORD: All the lively interest of the true West is found in "Sandy Burke." Louis Bennison more than fulfills all the predictions that were made for him.

PHILA. LEDGER: Louis Bennison is going to be, by all odds, the most popular of the younger stars portraying virile American roles.

THE BULLETIN: Louis Bennison who scored a hit in "Oh, Johnny!" adds to his popularity with "Sandy Burke." He has an always-on-top sort of breeziness.

Exhibitor Comment:

"Wonderful picture. Extra Big Business." "A picture that every theatre should play."—M. P. News.

Consensus:

"Powerful production with extra big drawing powers."
—M. P. News.

This Great Victory Picture of America and the Allies gives the exhibitors in the smaller towns a remarkable opportunity for box-office profits.

The Government rental price is fixed on a scale that allows a margin not obtainable with any other attraction.

The picture was a sensation with the war - picture - surfeited screen patrons of the larger cities. It was a tremendous box-office success.

Patrons of the smaller towns are not surfeited with war facts. Like the city people, they want to see how the war was won—but their desire is even more keen.

Exhibitors can give their patrons what they want. The rental is figured on a basis that permits high profit at regular admission prices.

NEGATIVE STOLEN

On Friday afternoon, January 17, 1919, a Sunshine Comedy negative, measuring 1800 feet, was stolen either from the Fox Studio, 1401 North Western Avenue, Los Angeles, California, or while in transit care American Railways Express Company.

Shipment of negative was made from Fox Studio in a sealed wooden case. When the case was opened the cans were found to contain gravel and dirt.

The negative was entitled A LADY BELL-HOP'S SECRET, valued at $50,000.

Notice is given to all branches of the trade that if this negative, or positive prints thereof, be offered for sale, hire or lease, immediate telegraphic notice should be given to the undersigned.

The robbery is now under investigation by Criminal Authorities. The title of this Sunshine Comedy may be changed by those responsible for the theft. Briefly, the story is that of a girl who works as a bell-hop in a hotel. Her sweetheart has knowledge of the location of six million dollars in gold hidden in a sand pit. The gold is recovered by the villain, who escapes in an aeroplane and drops from the parachute into an open cage of lions, etc., etc.

Information with reference to the theft or location of negative may be given to either the nearest Police Authorities, the Sheriff, or direct to

You Must Have An Impartial Buying Agent In New York!

A VERY SPECIAL TALK to Foreign Buyers by

President

In a day of limited shipping space, foreign buyers discovered the value of dealing with an American exporting firm that had no producer interests. The buyers who "tied to Inter-Ocean" got THE FILMS THEY WANTED in the face of all restrictions. Where only a little film could be shipped to a foreign purchaser of American films, that little was "preference" material—of THE PURCHASER'S preference.

Inter-Ocean had no favorites to play, no product in which it was financially interested, except as a straight matter of price based on THE MARKET VALUE TO YOU, THE FOREIGN BUYER.

Peace is here, restrictions are gradually reducing, but the war time lesson still has weight with the careful foreign picture purchaser.

It is safest and sanest to take your American films from a house that is not financially interested in any American producing firm!

Your New York buying agents, to give you 100% service, must be clear of the entangling alliances of the producing field, must appraise the whole field ONLY IN THE LIGHT OF YOUR NEEDS.

Inter-Ocean has no interests whatsoever in any American producing company, and is therefore superbly qualified to act as your New York buying agent.

You need a tested buying agent like Inter-Ocean in New York, because the American producing field to-day is offering a long list of subjects that surpass in quality and drawing power the films made in any other land.

And don't wait to write—CABLE!

Can immediately furnish a regular supply of World, Paralta, Plaza, and other famous American brands, featuring such stars as Louise Huff, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Carlyle Blackwell, Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, Kitty Gordon, Lewis S. Stone, J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Henry B. Walthall, Rhea Mitchell, Howard Hickman, Anita King, Kathleen Clifford and Jackie Saunders. Or those big Inter-Ocean special features like "Wives of Men" with Florence Reed, "Hearts Across the Sea" with Arnold Daly, and "The Transgressor," a successor to and of the same type as the mighty successful "Victim." Or those funny Inter-Ocean comedies by the Whartons and other great producers, and Adventure films like Frederick Burlingham's. Or accessories like Speer Carbons, the "Fulco" line of 300 time and money-saving appliances and the Globe Steel Reel, which permits the quick replacement of broken springs.

INTER-OCEAN SECURES GRAPHICS!

When a motion picture can be sold state rights in the United States, it MUST be SPECIAL. It must have EXTRA APPEAL. For the state rights market can only absorb the unusual in films. When a motion picture is big enough to "go state rights" in America, it is big enough for any theatre program anywhere, unless its theme makes it unsuitable. The theme of Ivan Abramson's Graphic features makes them 100 per cent suitable abroad. Graphic's reputation as a "special" is built on the fact that she didn't acquire it with ONE PICTURE. ALL of her releases to date—three—have been strong enough to "go state rights." Not one, mind you—THREE. And it is these that Inter-Ocean now offers, for the first time, to foreign buyers.

WHEN MEN BETRAY, featuring Gail Kane with an all star cast including Robert Elliot, Stuart Holmes, Jack McLean, Sally Crute, Reed Hamilton, Dora Mills Adams, Gertrude Braun, Tallulah Bankhead, Hazel Washburn and Juliet Moore.

ASHES OF LOVE featuring James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon, Mable Juliene Scott and an all star cast including Paula Shay, Ruby de Remer, Dora Mills Adams, Hugh Thompson, William Davidson, William Bechtel and Thea Talbot.

THE ECHO OF YOUTH featuring Charles Richman, Leah Baird, Pearl Shepard, supported by Marie Shotwell, Jack McLean, Peggy Shanor and William Bechtel.

Public Opinion

Unanimous Criticisms of "OUT of the FOG" proclaim

Moving Picture World

"The luminous and forceful acting of Nazimova in the screen version of "CEPTION SHOALS" accentuates her enviable position as leading tragic star of the silent drama"" It is a big theme which rises up from "Out of the Fog," the birth of a woman's soul. The range of human emotions Nazimova encompasses is remarkable for its breadth and for its depth."

Motion Picture News

"A great performance, one that leaves no room for doubt regarding her rank in the files of screen actresses"" an oasis in the desert of less artistic productions"" easily ranks as one of the triumphs of pictorial art."

Wid's

"Impressive picture, finely produced and superbly acted"" One of the finest screen performances she has ever given in a role of strong, sympathetic and dramatic quality"" By all means get this."

Exhibitors Trade Review

"Highly dramatic and shows Nazimova to her best advantage. No opportunity has been missed to make the picture stand for what is best in motion pictures."

Morning Telegraph

"Out of the Fog" will probably be remembered as one of the best pictures of the year. It is poetic, beautiful, sympathetic, imaginative and romantic."

N.Y. Tribune

"Nazimova's work in the new picture is really remarkable"

N.Y. Sun

"Nazimova has found a medium for the unrestricted display of her emotional powers."

N.Y. World "Intensely dramatic"

Evening Telegram

"Unforgettable is the acting of Mme Nazimova in 'Eye for Eye', a Metro picture, in which this stage and screen star appeared at the Rivoli Theatre Christmas week. So it is not going to be an easy task for this fine actress to better her superb work in that drama. Yet it must be admitted the Russian actress has balanced this performance by the one she is giving in Metro's 'Out of the Fog' at the Rivoli this week."

HOW S. A. SHACKMAN PUT OVER "OUR TEDDY"

At the 81st St. Theatre, 81st St. and Broadway, New York

He advertised an unusual picture in an unusual way and it brought results. His campaign is worth the attention of every exhibitor. It is a model method of realizing the full possibilities in an attraction that is different.

Above is pictured a part of the crowd of school children and Boy Scouts that packed the 81st

St. Theatre as the result of 10,000 of these blotters distributed in the schools.

THE FAMOUS ROOSEVELT MOTION PICTURE

"OUR TEDDY"

R. M. Brinkerhoff, Famous N.Y. World Cartoonist, says. "It certainly is a thrilling Movie."

These are the things Mr. Shackman at the 81st. St. Theatre, high-class uptown New York neighborhood

The lobby displays reproduced here appeal to the regular patrons by the use of the cartoons which suggest the drama and comedy situations. The use of newspaper pages and magazine articles brought scores of new visitors into the lobby.

These special hand lettered cards were just enough different from the regular material on other pictures to produce unusual results. The quartette of wounded men was made a special feature of the program and their singing created atmosphere for the production.

used to put "OUR TEDDY" over house; capacity 2400 seats; admission prices 30 cents to 85 cents

Every exhibitor can use the same general style of copy and appeal that made Mr. Shackman's season with "OUR TEDDY" a success.

He circularized the schools with blotters; he obtained the aid of the BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA and New York Council turned out 700 strong with a 35-piece band. He used larger newspaper space and carried in it the same style of copy he wrote for the lobby cards. He used flag drapes for 3-sheet cutouts of Mr. Roosevelt's head. His orchestra played old familiar classic songs. He used advance slides, including the special set illustrated with cartoon sketches; he advertised it in his house program as a motion picture drama. He used advertising materials available to you at any First National Exchange, and—

CIRCULATION!

*First of the Four Points That Should Decide For You the Spending of Every Advertising Dollar.
The Four Are: Circulation, Reader Interest, Service to the Reader, Service to the Manufacturer.*

Dear Advertiser:

We had a rather unusual opportunity of proving our circulation recently.

You will be interested in the method and results.

We took the list of customers of Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms," representing, presumably, the cream of the theatres of this country and Canada.

We checked off our subscribers; added some more through an intensive circulation campaign; found the list 6% faulty (that is recently closed houses); result, we were reaching 72% of the list.

But—

When we consulted our list of chain theatres—where one man or one company owns all or most of the theatres in one or more towns and one copy of the NEWS in the manager's hands does the work—we found we were reaching practically 100% of these Chaplin customers.

You can cover this field today with one paper—MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

CONCENTRATE!

The Question of Product

IT seems to us that in all the present turmoil the question of product stands out with increasing vehemence. By product we mean the entertainment value of the picture.

There seem to be two distinct viewpoints, two rival camps as it were, in the picture business to-day.

Here in New York we have been all riled up over distribution—for the past year or more.

We have had all kinds of cooperative booking schemes. They have promised direct booking to the exhibitor, the elimination of the middleman and the consequent saving of distributing expense.

We have had much talk of mergers of distributing systems. We have actually had absorption of exchanges by other exchange systems.

There has been much publicity, and it has undoubtedly interested the exhibitor.

What the Patron Pays For

BUT the exhibitor, after digesting and even welcoming the scheme has in each instance, and naturally, asked: "What pictures, what kind of pictures will you send us? Your method is satisfactory, but where and what is your product?"

We have been looking out at the exhibitor. Now, let's see how the exhibitor looks in at us.

The exhibitor is engaged in the renting and selling of pictures to the public.

Of course he is mightily interested in the rental prices. We might remark, in passing that in the case of some local circuits he is so interested in rental prices that he can't see very much else; he can't see for instance that the producer has got to have his legitimate return in order to exist and maintain an adequate supply of good pictures.

But the exhibitor is primarily interested in pictures—their drawing power.

That's what he sells; that's where his breadandbutter lies. That—plus advertising—is the force that fills his seats. That is his point of contact with his public, which in turn indicates to him day in and day out that it shops for its entertainment in a most exacting fashion.

He wants good pictures; and equally, fifty-fifty, he wants good advertising material and opportunities.

Filmland's Gold Dust Twins

GOOD pictures and good advertising—these are the first considerations of his box-office success. And looking in on you from his point, he rates you—program producer, independent producer, distributor, exchange—on these two prime considerations:

Good pictures and good advertising service.

These make your trademark value with him—because these make your trademark value with his public.

We are speaking now, of course, of the main centres when entertainment competition is severe, where there are many seats to fill, and where advertising opportunities are greater.

The small town house gets good pictures—it has many to choose from—and its advertising opportunities are limited; so rental prices are its chief problem, perhaps. And it is apparent that in the supplying of advertising service and in the fixing of rental prices the small town houses should be put in a sharply distinct class and treated separately with fundamentally different policies.

But the main centre theatres need emphasis here because they are the strategic points; their bookings and their advertising greatly effect the smaller surrounding theatres; and their viewpoint means much to New York. And this viewpoint, to reiterate, this valuation of the firms in New York rests on pictures and advertising. That's where you; the producer—stand with the exhibitor.

Distribution the Wood Pile Man

WE don't want to underestimate distribution.

Indeed, distribution—the importance of it—needs no brief from any source.

It is apparent to-day that distribution is the nigger in the woodpile of production.

Distribution has much to do with the making of pictures. It is distribution—the wrong kind of distribution—that is constantly calling for more pictures to support its overhead, thereby making for the production of machine pictures. It is distribution—the right kind—that is needed to take care of fewer and better pictures and return an encouraging profit on them to producer, exhibitor and exchange.

There is a veritable tug of war on to-day between production and distribution. These cross purposes are a passing era in the business—an economic tangle. Out of it is bound to emerge—fewer and better pictures and a selling and advertising system able to take care of them.

Editorially Speaking:

Going Direct to the Market

THE Bioscope of London says that British pictures might find a market in America "if only the British producer with pictures to sell elsewhere made as full use of the American trade press as his competitor does of the trade press on this side of the Atlantic."

And the further sensible suggestion is made that capital will have to be added by the British producer to cover this advertising requirement.

We agree fully with the Bioscope—in fact, the need of competitive advertising is obvious. But the suggestion, we believe, does not go far enough.

British pictures must be well advertised to the American exhibitor through the American trade press; but they must also, as the American producer is finding true of his own product, be advertised to the American public.

In fact, we believe that herein lies the answer to the question of British pictures in the American market.

In other words, we believe that the American public want to see meritorious British pictures, just as they like good British plays. "The Better 'Ole" is showing in the United States today with five road companies.

But these British pictures will have to be brought to the attention of the American public.

This does not mean that a large national advertising appropriation will have to be added to the trade advertising expense. The margin of profit would in no way admit of it.

But it does mean that the trade advertising of British pictures should—like the service advertising MOTION PICTURE NEWS is now doing for the American producer—concern itself with the material and the ways and means through which the American exhibitor can intelligently exploit the British picture to his public.

This seems to give to British pictures the true and practical opening to the American market. This market is the American public, not merely the American exhibitor.

Buying With Their Eyes Open

JUST a word more on the subject of the small town theatre, a reconsideration of which is prompted by the receipt in a morning's mail of three letters dwelling definitely upon the small town house's requirements and success.

We have just stated that these theatres have many pictures to pick from.

Very true; but they—the successful ones—pick, just the same, and carefully.

These three letters, in fact, state that success has come from picking pictures—from the ability to shop for the public, which in turn shops for itself. This shopping ability, it is also stated, is gained by a careful study of the trade paper, its advertising pages, its unbiased comments, its service suggestions, its news of bookings by the earlier run houses.

In some quarters in New York the idea prevails that the small town house takes what it gets—is dependent upon a program supplied by an exchange. This may be true of some theatres, but they are becoming more and more a minority. The successful small town house is picking from the market, and this year more than ever before this shopping for attractions will increase.

One of these theatres sends in a calendar showing its bookings for February. Selections have evidently been made from as many as eleven different distributors.

* * * * *

"Jes' Folks Are Certainly Popular"

THE instant success of DeMille's "Don't Change Your Husband" is striking proof of the broad basis of what the public eagerly wants in pictures.

That broad basis is summed up by the exhibitor's comment in our last issue: pictures about "human beings doing human things."

"Don't Change Your Husband" is delightfully human. It goes home. That's all—but that's enough.

There are many adaptations of this human note. And the public is eager for all these adaptations, whatever they are, in all their range from light comedy to heavy melodrama.

Pictures that are not human may go over, but they don't go home. And there's just the difference between mediocrity and positive success.

* * * * *

A Million to One

IF there were no Wilbur F. Crafts at Washington, there would be no Federal Censorship bill.

And if there were no Mr. and Mrs. Reformer here and there, there would be no State Censorship bills.

So we contend that the Legislative representatives of the hundred million people of the United States should use some reasoning, if merely mathematical in scope, in judging the wants of at least one million folk as against a single professional reformer.

* * * * *

Business is Booming

WITH the dropping of building restrictions large and beautiful picture theatres are going up all over the United States. The ruling cost seems to be around a quarter of a million dollars.

Never before has the industry seen such a theatre-building regime.

And never before have gross theatre admissions approached the total of the past several weeks.

And never before, we might add, has the general output of pictures upheld as good a standard as that of the present releases.

It looks like a good and big year in motion pictures.

* * * * *

Coming to Life

MEN who are interested in the independent field tell us that the state rights market is opening up again. That there are plenty of interested exchanges now, but not enough open market pictures.

Just one more proof of the prosperity that is here for all the industry; one more indication that "This is the Optimist's Year."

Dealing in Personalities

"Out of 5,000,000 People He's the Happiest"

WE herewith present the man who can come close to claiming at this minute to be "the happiest man in New York."

There may be a happier man—but we didn't meet him this week.

And we did meet Fred Quimby, sales manager for Pathe.

And you should hear him tell of the trip he just made around the country; of the record-breaking bookings he secured on "Common Clay;" and of "Common Clay" itself.

We can understand now why Pathe grabbed Fred Quimby. And why the West Coast liked him so well.

Get him on any of the subjects mentioned above just now and he's a walking dynamo of salesmanship—seething and exuding enthusiasm.

Just think of increasing the gross income of the motion picture business by one-seventh! Something close to that will happen if all the Sunday opening fights now on result successfully. Think of what the increased prosperity would mean to you and to me. All the more reason why you should keep in touch with Sunday opening events. This week's news story is on page 1144.

Herbert Lubin must have turned jealous when "Personalities" told him last week how thoroughly A. H. Sawyer was enjoying his Florida vacation. Now Herbert is also on his way to Miami.

Pete Milne, our Bill Keefe sleuth, fell down on the job, succumbing to an attack of tonsillitis which kept him away from The Complete Plan Book on Monday and Tuesday.

Substitute Sleuth Grant Carpenter found Keefe for us on Monday at the Astor. The Griffith production manager had stopped off in Washington on his way East. All is explained.

E. Kendall Gillett, of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, is spending two weeks in Washington. Nope!—he isn't filling in for Woodrow.

Prosperity is in the air. We hear it from every film executive, sales manager and salesman around New York. And if we don't believe it then we have only to read the news story on page 1147, telling of the new theatre boom that is booming some boom-booms! Gosh, all the vacant plots in the country must be sprouting new theatres. Read that news—it will tickle your heart with thoughts of the new business.

H. C. Horator, manager of the Toledo Alhambra, was a MOTION PICTURE NEWS visitor two days of last week. There's the live-wire, peppery type of showman that you wish you could have around the office a couple of hours every day.

Watterson Laboratory Rothacker is expected in town about the time these lines see the light of day.

Must be trailing his fellow-Chicagoan Charles Bartola Pyle, who dropped in to say "hello" early in the week.

The National Association hasn't given up hope yet in its fight on the five per cent rental tax. That you'll learn in a story on page 1148, together with other items regarding the Association's activities. And speaking of picture organizations—where, oh where, is the M. P. E. L.? Haven't heard a sound for so long that we're beginning to fear Pete Schaeffer has buried the body.

Sidney Lust, Washington exchange man, was reported on the White Way during the past week.

Exhibitor Mercy, of the Mercy Amusement Corporation, dropped into the office during the week to tell us of the Sunday fight he has on his hands out in Yakima, Washington. And also some cheery words regarding the way prohibition boomed the theatre business in Washington.

Harry Rosson, the prominent English film man, expects to sail for home about the time this issue reaches the newsstands.

Charles F. Schwerin, well known in the state rights field, and now Cleveland manager for the Independent Sales Corp., dropped into New York last week to hear "Hello, Daddy!" from the lips of a baby boy born February 4. Both Mrs. Schwerin and Master Schwerin are progressing nicely and expect to be able to leave New York soon for their Cleveland home.

Just after we slipped you the tip that Vitagraph had a winner in "The Lion and the Mouse," the Rialto confirmed our advice by booking it for next week. Watch this page for the real tips. You can't go wrong playing this paddock dope. Here's one due to start soon—"Common Clay," a peppery filly, but there with the speed. The touts are reporting to us on Goldwyn's "The Eternal Magdalen" and Nazimova's "The Red Lantern." As soon as we time them ourselves we'll give you the word.

Denial is made that the new S. L. Rothapfel Complete Programs are going to include usher service.

Our private Secret Service reports that Frederick McClure Collins is the lucky boy who has signed Captain Edward Rickenbacker, America's Ace of Aces, for the screen.

Jerome Beatty has returned to his Paramount desk after an absence due to a nervous breakdown from overwork.

Our old friend Charlie Streimer is handling Harry Raver's new Maciste serial in the New York territory from his offices at 729 Seventh avenue.

Joseph A. Golden left New York this week for Florida with a Western photoplay company to produce scenes for the new serial, "The Great Gamble."

From Henry Gsell comes word that he will hereafter be known as Henry G. Sell—owing to difficulty previously found in spelling and pronouncing his name.

A news story on page 1180 chronicles quietly one of the most interesting news stories of the day. President Albert E. Smith, of Vitagraph, has completed a deal absorbing the negatives, story and play rights, and laboratory of the Kalem Company. The plays include such winners as "Shenandoah," the negatives of the perennial money-maker, "From the Manger to the Cross," and the laboratory the most modern automatic equipment in the East. And the story marks the passing of Kalem—the K-L-M of Kleine, Long and Marion.

HART OUT OF STAR COMBINE!

LOS ANGELES (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—Definite announcement has been made that William S. Hart is out of the "Big Five" combine. Statements attributed to Hart are to the effect that he may retire, but the rumor is also current here that unnamed parties have offered the rough-riding star a million dollars for two pictures.

Poor William S. McAdoo is besieged by every distributing executive scenario writer, director, player and what not within twenty miles—not to mention those within telegraph reach. He is issuing no statements.

Sunday Battle is Raging Over Country

Call Issued for New York State Exhibitors' Convention to Discuss Topic—Introduce Sunday Opening Bill in Pennsylvania—Other Fights

FROM the front line trenches come reports of Sunday opening battles being waged in almost every part of the country. New York's exhibitors are drawing up their lines for the struggle to secure a local option bill in that state; Pennsylvania's legislature has been given a bill that will bring about Sunday shows. In Cincinnati agitation is on for an enforcement of the blue laws, while numerous smaller cities report the battle on in earnest.

The bill introduced in Pennsylvania's legislature does not specifically mention motion pictures, but is, instead, a law for the repeal of the old "blue laws." It is admitted that its main purpose is the legalizing throughout the state of Sunday shows.

Call for New York Convention

President Sydney S. Cohen, of the New York State Exhibitors' League, has issued a call for a state-wide convention of motion picture exhibitors to be held February 26 at the Onondaga Hotel, Syracuse. Plans for a state-wide campaign will be formed there, while many prominent speakers will address the exhibitors.

Senator Thompson, of Niagara, who made a strenuous fight for the Sunday opening bill at the last session of the legislature, and Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Health Commissioner of New York City, are among those already on the list of speakers.

Speaking of the prospects for a well-attended convention President Cohen declared to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative:

"There is hardly a corner of the State that is not represented in the organization now. The best and most representative theatre men are with us heart and soul, and the smaller theaters are in the cause just as enthusiastically. The response to our appeal for a more representative and a stronger state organization has been wonderful."

Following is the text of the official proclamation calling the convention:

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

Fellow Exhibitors:—

The people of the state of New York want motion picture entertainment on Sunday. Their overwhelming patronage of Sunday pictures proves this beyond the shadow of a doubt.

The Courts of this state have rendered conflicting decisions on the legality of showing motion pictures on Sunday. We must, therefore, seek help in the legislature.

Ever since the state-wide conference, held at Albany last September, the officers of the state league have left no stone unturned to prepare the way for a successful campaign to that end. It is our duty to give voice to the wishes of our patrons.

Threatened taxation and other vital problems call for your careful action. This is the supreme moment for making a united and impressive demonstration if not for ourselves, then, on behalf of our patrons. We earnestly desire your counsel and support whether the owner of a large house or a small one.

Therefore, you are urged to come to the City of Syracuse on the 26th day of February, 1919, to attend a state-wide convention of exhibitors to be held at the Onondaga Hotel at 11 A. M. on the day above mentioned.

Your voice and your vote will be the deciding factors as to the methods and, no doubt, the success of passing this legislation at this session.

Opportunity is knocking at our door. Men of affairs in all walks of life familiar with political conditions say that this is the year. The people are with us; are we with the people? There is no power like the power of our screens. Now is our time to use them.

POSITIVELY no so-called co-operative booking or film selling scheme of any kind, under

SUNDAY SHOWS

And a Tip to the Wise Manager

ONE great way of fighting agitation to ban Sunday shows is to be careful of the pictures you show Sundays. And the only sure way to be careful of your pictures is to follow authoritative reviews.

George F. Mosher, of Girard College, Philadelphia, Pa., writes to P. S. Harrison: "Allow me to express my appreciation of your complete, accurate and unbiased criticisms. It is my business to review and select motion pictures for private institutions, making sure that we show nothing but good, clean pictures at all times.

"Many times after reviewing a picture and looking up your review on it I find that I can rely upon them absolutely, which is, I think, unusual."

whatever guise or by whomsoever proposed will be considered or discussed at this convention.

We put none but exhibitors on guard.

SIDNEY S. COHEN, President.
S. I. BERMAN, Secretary.

Stiff Battle Expected in Penn.

HARRISBURGH, PA. (Special to Motion Picture News).—Assemblyman William F. Rorke, of Philadelphia, has introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature an amendment to the "blue laws" of 1794—the latter prohibiting every sort of Sunday activity except the bare essentials.

Although the bill does not specifically mention motion pictures it is admittedly designed to legalize the Sunday show. Following the provisions wiping out the ridiculous old "blue laws" it reads:

"And provided always, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to prohibit the giving of lectures, orchestral concerts and other entertainments of an educational character in which, if a stage or platform be used, there shall be no raising or lowering of a curtain, no appearance of any person in costume and no moving or changing of scenery or furniture upon such stage or platform, on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, after the hour of seven of the clock in the afternoon of the same day."

It seems evident, moreover, that if the motion picture interests want to see Sunday pictures win they must be fully alive to the keen opposition which already has appeared and which bids fair to increase in strength so long as the measure is before the Legislature.

As an instance of how fully awake the church interests already are as to the aims of the measure the Rev. Dr. W. A. Hanson, pastor of the Messiah Lutheran Church, of this city, preached a vigorous sermon against the bill in his church yesterday morning. He referred specifically to the bill's effect on motion pictures and declared it "struck at the vital principles of American ideals."

Question Hot in Ohio

CINCINNATI (Special to Motion Picture News).—Representative Hinchey, of Seneca County, has just introduced a bill in the Ohio Legislature in which it is proposed to cancel the present law forbidding picture shows on Sundays. The purpose of the Hinchey bill is to legalize Sunday shows, so that the Sunday closing bugaboo will be removed forever from the minds of motion picture show managers and patrons. A clever scheme to shunt the bill over to a committee composed of men who favor the Sunday closing of all amusements was nipped in the bud, and the chances look good for the Hinchey bill to go through before the Ohio Legislature adjourns in April.

Cincinnati is faced with the Sunday closing of motion picture shows, as Mayor Galvin has been asked to enforce the almost forgotten Sunday closing law that has been on the Ohio statute books for almost half a century. The agitation has resulted from an attempt to close the retail meat markets and small groceries that have been open on Sunday mornings for the convenience of customers. The butchers and grocers have served an ultimatum that if they are compelled to remain closed on Sundays, the motion picture theatres must also close. They propose to put Cincinnati in the throes of the famous "blue laws" that were enforced by the Pilgrim Fathers.

In addition, Councilman George Schlichte has taken up cudgels for motion picture operators, insisting that they are entitled to one day's rest each week.

Flint Meets a Crank

FLINT, MICH. (Special to Motion Picture News).—Movement for the closing of theatres and other places of amusement on Sundays and to prevent the sale of Sunday newspapers through the presentation of petitions to the common council has been started by some of the church people of the city.

The petitions were circulated by Dave Daniel, an ex-boxer and wrestler, who was converted about a year ago and who joined a church which frowns on all sorts of "worldly" amusements. There were about 300 signatures on the petitions.

Alderman Homer Vette, one of the signers of the petitions, presented them to the common council and made a motion which adopted to have the matter referred to the city attorney who was instructed to draft a resolution providing for a submission of the question of Sunday closing to a vote of the people. As Flint is essentially a "workingman's" town with about 20,000 men employed in automobile plants and many of them unable to attend the theatres except on Sundays, it is believed that the proposition of Sunday closing will be voted down if ever submitted.

Sunday Battle Raging Over Whole Country

Encouragement was lent to the theatre men who naturally want the Sunday business when statements were issued this week by Rev. O. B. Stroh, president, and Rev. E. E. Sayles, secretary, of the Flint Ministerial Association to the effect that the organization nor none of the churches affiliated with it were behind the movement. The association includes most of the Protestant churches in the city.

Indiana Pushing Sunday Bill

INDIANAPOLIS (Special to Motion Picture News).—Indiana exhibitors are still working hard on the pushing of the bill recently framed to permit the opening of picture theatres on Sunday.

In a recent Committee Report emphasis was laid on the fact that it is up to the Indiana exhibitors to support their own battle. No aid has been given by the National Association, and but three film companies have responded to the call for help. Famous Players-Lasky has donated the services of Miss Rose Tapley; Exhibitors' Mutual has given a check for five hundred and the services of Attorney Charles C. Pettijohn, who fought the Sunday battle two years ago; and the First National franchise holder for Indiana has contributed liberally through Robert Lieber, of the Circle.

The following exhibitor committees are handling the fight: Central Committee, Charles M. Olson, chairman, Robert Lieber, H. M. White, V. U. Young, L. H. O'Donnell; Advisory Committee, W. C. Quimby, T. Guy Perfect, Ray Andrews, Frank J. Pembusch, F. G. Heller.

One Mayor Cooperates

From the National Board of Review comes the following statement: "The Mayor of Indianapolis, Ind., has decided upon a solution for the Sunday motion picture problem in the theatres of Indianapolis. He has turned over to the Indiana Board of Endorsers of Photoplays the selections of pictures which will be entirely satisfactory for afternoon and evening performances. This group has requested regularly the assistance of the National Board of Review in information regarding the best pictures drawn from the productions of all companies."

Roy White, of Omaha, Dies

Roy L. White, Omaha manager for Pathe, has passed away following an operation for acute appendicitis. He is survived by his wife, mother and two children.

Mr. White had been head of the Pathe branch since July. Previous to that he had been with Pathe's Minneapolis organization for eight years.

Harry Graham, formerly with Pathe in Minneapolis, is handling the Omaha office.

Hart Pays Tribute to Industry

IN connection with a statement that the affairs of the Division of Films would be wound up at the earliest possible moment with no new pictures to be presented, Charles S. Hart last week issued a sincere tribute to the motion picture industry. "Splendid co-operation, worthy of the highest appreciation of the people and the Nation," is the term given by Mr. Hart to the industry's efforts to work with the Government and the Committee on Public Information during the war.

Mr. Hart added that his recent trip abroad had not been for the purpose of securing new features, but to wind up the work of the Committee's foreign offices. He praised the work done by the foreign bureau under the direction of Herbert S. Hoagland in driving German propaganda film from neutral countries and presenting American subjects.

Charles Van Arsdale, assistant to Mr. Hoagland, Frank J. Marion, who was in Spain, Guy C. Smith, in Scandinavia, Llewellyn R. Thomas in Holland, and Mrs. Norman Whitehouse, in Switzerland, came in for words of praise.

"As quickly as the financial department of the Division can get in the receipts," concluded Mr. Hart, "complete the audit of the receipts, and make a report to Congress, the offices of the Division of Films will be closed. I think the work will be completed within two months at the most."

Mr. Hart's tribute to the industry follows:

"With the closing of the Division of Films it is desired to express the great appreciation of the Committee on Public Information for the splendid cooperation which was given at all times by the Motion Picture Industry, on the part of both the producers and exhibitors. I can safely say that it is pointed out and referred to on a number of occasions in the European Trade Press as an example that was worthy of emulation. The Government recognized the invaluable parallel assistance rendered by the Motion Picture industry of the United States. There was not a time when any executive or official of the industry was called upon for advice or assistance that he did not give more than was asked for. From my own observation and to my own knowledge the Motion Picture Industry of the United rendered a patriotic service worthy of the highest appreciation of the people and of the Nation.

Charles S. Hart."

Cohen Won't Serve on N. A. Committee

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, has declined to accept membership on the advisory committee of the National Association which is planning a nationwide fight on censorship.

Mr. Cohen's letter declares, "The organized exhibitors of the State of New York asked me not to accept this appointment and I am notifying you to this effect. As to any proposed legislation affecting the motion picture exhibitors of this state, kindly be advised that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State will take care of same to the best of their ability and are in close touch with the situation."

Operators' Union Hold Annual Reception

The sixth annual convention and ball of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 306, was held Wednesday night at the New Amsterdam opera house, and the occasion was one of the most successful social events of the union's existence. The big ballroom of the opera house was the scene of a get-together spirit that marked the event a most successful affair. More than a thousand members of the union and their friends were present.

The guests of honor were Marguerite Marsh, a sister of Mae Marsh and now playing the principal feminine role in Oliver Films, Inc., Craig Kennedy serial; Herbert Rawlinson, popular leading man; Harry Grossman, general manager of

"Quo Vadis" for Woodrow on Return Trip

When the U. S. S. George Washington sailed on January 25 to bring President Wilson back to America the New York office of George Kleine received a specific request for a print of the film "Quo Vadis" to be used upon the return trip. The George Kleine representative gladly supplied a print of the re-issue, which is practically the original film, changed merely to bring in up-to-date subtitles and add certain footage in the original negative but not used when the film was first published in 1913.

Round-up of Film Thieves On Phil Ryan Writes from Fields of France

New York, Philadelphia and Cleveland Cleaning House in Effort to Stop Wholesale Thefts

STRENUOUS campaigns against film thieves are being waged simultaneously in three cities with results that promise to go far in putting an end to the heavy losses of exchanges through wholesale thefts of prints. New York, Philadelphia and Cleveland are the scenes of the round-up.

In New York the F. I. L. M. Club is handling the campaign, with President I. E. Chadwick, the strenuous man behind the gun. Several weeks ago the Universal feature, "The Fires of Youth" was stolen from one of the wagons of the Reel Delivery Company. As a result of the club's efforts in this case William Burns has been held for the Grand Jury by Magistrate Corrigan. Frank Dolan is being held for the Grand Jury in connection with the loss of a Paramount-Wallace Reid feature.

The F. I. L. M. Club's campaign then led to Philadelphia where a raid on the place of business of a select councilman of that city resulted in the latter, G. W. Brandenburg, being brought to trial this week.

Great credit is being given President Chadwick for his initiative in the campaign.

Efforts of exchange managers in Cleveland resulted in the arrest last week of William B. Clark, an operator, whose trial will take place within the next two weeks. This is in connection with the disappearance last August of "His Wedding Night," a Sennett-Paramount. The film was mysteriously returned to the Cleveland Famous Players office last week but Manager Erdman says that the case will be prosecuted just the same.

Louis Reedy, sixteen years old, has been placed under the supervision of the probation officer as a result of the discovery of films belonging to the Standard Film Service, of Cleveland, in the basement of a house on Columbus Road, Cleveland. It is said that investigation showed that Reedy, who had been employed in the shipping department of Standard Film, and another young chap were giving moving picture performances to the youngsters of the neighborhood at a charge of three cents admission plus a cent war tax.

Exchanges in Rochester, New York, have instituted a campaign against the practice of "bicycling" which it is alleged some theatres in the outskirts of that city have revived on a flourishing scale. They are being aided by Erwin J. W. Huber, managing editor of the Picture Play News, of that city.

Discovery of the practice is said to have resulted from the refusal of certain of the theatres to advertise in the theatre directory of the Picture Play News, an investigation showing that some of the managers had no desire to list their attractions in print.

Ohio Movement for Returning Soldiers

A state-wide movement has been started in Ohio to create positions with the various film exchanges and theatres in that territory for returned soldiers.

The campaign is headed by W. E. Lusk, general manager of the First National Exhibitors' Company of Ohio, with offices in Cleveland and Cincinnati.

As an evidence of what exchange managers and exhibitors can do to help eliminate the possibility of protracted periods of idleness by the men who gave up positions to enter the service, Mr. Lusk has employed six former National Army men in his two offices. Paul Tessier, Martin Blum, Jacob Fried, E. J. Bryor and A. Witner have been employed in the Cleveland office and P. A. Smith has been given a position in the First National exchange at Cincinnati.

Lubin, Off for Florida, Has Big Plans

Herbert Lubin left New York on Monday of this week for Miami, Fla. He will join Arthur H. Sawyer at the southern beach resort for the double purpose of holding a series of conferences relative to their forthcoming S-L Production, "Virtuous Men," and to recuperate from a recent siege of illness.

Both executives of the S-L Production organization have undergone the strain of a severe illness during the past two months.

During their stay at the Florida health resort they will complete the final details of the original exploitation and selling campaign which will mark the initial presentation of the E. K. Lincoln starring vehicle. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin will also consummate arrangements for the organization of two new production companies to operate under the new, firmly established S-L banner.

While in Miami Mr. Sawyer has been at work for several weeks on the adaptation of the famous stage success which has been recently purchased as the second "Ralph Ince Film Attraction" in which E. K. Lincoln is to star.

Plan Frolic and Motion Picture Ball

An outstanding social event of the motion picture season is promised in the Movie Frolic of 1919, scheduled for the Hotel Winton in Cleveland on February 20. The ball is being planned and organized by the active motion picture spirits of the city, who promise it will be as elaborate as anything of the kind ever given in the country.

It is announced that invitations will go forward to all the prominent stars to be present. An unusual program has been arranged, and this is being looked after by Lloyd W. Young, 1900 Euclid avenue. The attendance is to be limited, it is said, to 1,000 persons.

From "Somewhere in France" we hear from Phil L. Ryan, the well-known middle western film man who, before enlisting for overseas duty last summer was general manager of the Standard Film Corporation, with headquarters at Kansas City. Mr. Ryan, now a sergeant in a signal corps battalion, expresses himself as agreeing completely in the sentiment expressed by Joyce Kilmer—"nice war, nice people, nice everything."

"I've been having a wonderful vacation," writes Mr. Ryan, "and also, in common with a few million other doughboys, a wonderful education. I shall be glad, of course, to get back to my work—but while I'm here I'm mighty well satisfied with myself."

"One of the odd things that I've come into contact with is the surprising lack of knowledge that the ordinary American citizen and moviegoer—as represented by the American doughboy—has of the machinery that supplies his favorite 'back home' theatre with the pictures that beguile his leisure. The average American citizen doesn't know what a film exchange is! He has a dim idea that there is some business force other than the producing companies which has its finger on his amusement pulse—but he's darned if he knows what it is. I've had eager bunches 'gang around' when I'd start to explain what I had done in civil life; we've all gotten into the habit of explaining what we were in civil life on any and all occasions. It's a pleasure to think of the days when the pants we wore were loose at the bottoms."

"The Yanks have a bigger movie appetite than ever—I've heard many a fellow express his yearning determination to spend all of his first week at home, 'a-sitting in every picture show I can find!' But the millions of Yanks over here in France are going home more than a little changed. One and all the new and vivid impressions that they have received has just given them a keenness, a power of discrimination and judgment, that motion picture producers and exchange executives will do well to consider carefully. For the Yanks are going to set up a big howl when the pictures they see at home aren't carefully produced, with good stories, and above all things, TRUE TO LIFE. For in this man's army millions of movie-fans of the most chronic sort, have been finding out what life is."

"The Yankee soldier returning from France is a pretty well-broadened citizen, and I mean this in more than the physical sense. And he's going to have an immediate effect on his folks at home. He has met his fellow-citizen from Idaho, and New Jersey and from Minnesota, and he has had his nature recast—on a bigger scale—in the new melting pot, the Army and the Navy. His life in the army hasn't toughened Mr. Yank—not mentally, at least. It has made him a very much sharpened individual, and a very much sharpened mass when you consider him as the movie-going public, for example. And, I repeat, movie-men (that's what Mr. Yank calls us), will do well to bear the fact in mind, and to act upon it. I offer the tip for what it's worth, and it's worth a good deal to an industry which, in the final analysis, has an economic problem to deal with."

Card on Coast to Coast Trip

Lyman S. Card, general sales manager of the Independent Sales Corporation, is speeding west on a coast to coast trip to look over the offices of that corporation. Mr. Card will visit eighteen cities where units of the Independent Sales Corporation and Film Clearing House are maintained.

The principal object of Mr. Card's trip is to acquaint the managers with the details of the several important deals recently consummated by Independent, particularly the plans for the new Rothapfel Pictures Corporation productions.

Reports received at the Independent office indicate widespread interest in Mr. Rothapfel's plan to provide a unit program, including everything necessary for a motion picture entertainment. Six of these programs will be offered in the next year.

Building Booms With the War Ban Off

Grossman's New $300,000 House for Cleveland Among Week's Announcements—Trenton to Have 3,000 Seat House—Rush of New Construction Work

Optimism among film men over the prospect for a prosperous Spring season has given new impetus in the past few weeks by the flood of reports of new theatre construction reaching New York from every section of the country. Many millions of dollars was represented in the realty and construction transactions reported last week alone.

The list is topped by the announcement of a new $300,000 house for Cleveland by Joseph Grossman, manager of the Standard theatre in that city. Following that the Hildinger Enterprises, of Trenton, announced the completion of negotiations for the erection of a three thousand seat theatre in the New Jersey capital.

In addition to the rush of new construction work totalling many hundred theatres, road men for all the exchanges report a country-wide "cleaning up" process on the part of exhibitors, embracing redecorating and the installation of more ambitious lighting and music effects.

Grossman's to Seat 2500

CLEVELAND, O., (Special to Motion Picture News)—Joseph Grossman, manager of the Standard Theatre, Prospect avenue and East 8th street, Cleveland, is going to put up a new $300,000 motion picture house on Euclid avenue, just east of East 105th street. Mr. Grossman has signed a twenty year lease, with an option on a twenty-five year extension, for the property owned by C. and I. N. Stone of Cleveland, at an annual rental, it is reported, of $25,000.

The building which stands on the site at the present time is to be torn down immediately, and work on the new structure to commence soon as the weather conditions are favorable. Mr. Grossman says he will have the house all ready no later than the first of October. It is to be the biggest investment in that neighborhood. The house will seat 2500 people, comfortably, and will be equipped with all the latest and most approved appliances. It will have a Euclid avenue frontage of seventy-five feet, and a depth of 196 feet. The front is to be attractive with white terra cotta tile. A thirty-five foot entrance lobby is being planned. Rest rooms for women, the most approved ventilating system and lighting effects are to be introduced, and special parking facilities for automobiles are to be provided for the comfort of the patrons.

The Standard Theatre to which Mr. and Mrs. Grossman have given their undivided attention for the past six years, will be continued just the same as formerly. Talking over their plans, it was said that Mr. Grossman will probably give his time to the new house, and turn over the Standard Theatre altogether to the management of Mrs. Grossman. Plans for the new house are all completed. They were made by Richardson and Yost, Cleveland architects, who have made a specialty of building theatres.

Hildingers Add to Large Holdings

TRENTON, N. J., (Special to Motion Picture News)—Construction of one of the largest theatres in the country is planned by the Hildinger Enterprises, Inc., of 135 East Hanover street, this city, on property at 228-236 East State street, purchased February 9th.

REEL SCENES REAL

Rothacker Cameraman Gets "Shots" of Booze Capture

FRANK KIRCHNER, cameraman on the staff of Watterson R. Rothacker, Chicago, "was in luck" recently when he went to stage some fake scenes, in company with the city authorities, at Hammond, Ind., of whiskey-blockade running.

Through the staging of the fake scene, at the state-line, several people were arrested after being held up and searched by the authorities for smuggled booze, and the Rothacker cameraman secured enough real scenes to stock a film library for years after July 1. Incidentally, the Rothacker plant and name grabbed front page space with scare headlines in the Hammond paper—and everyone was happy but the people who were held up, searched and later fined.

Two or three chases were caught by the camera as a result of autoists trying to get away before the police could look into their mysterious actions.

Present plans call for the erection of a five-story brick building with a basement that can be utilized for some commercial purpose. The theatre itself will have a seating capacity of 3,000, with 2,000 seats on the first floor and 1,000 on the second floor. The policy of the house will be super-feature photo-plays in conjunction with high-class musical programs to be played by a large symphony orchestra and a specially constructed pipe organ similar in design to that used at the Auditorium, Ocean Grove. The house will be conducted along exclusive lines similar to the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand theatres, of New York.

George D. Bishop and Russell H. Lamont, secretary and treasurer, respectively of the Hildinger Enterprises, of which Charles C. Hildinger is president, are in the movement to build the new playhouse. Isaac Levy is also associated with them.

The lobby will be of marble and terra cotta trimmings, with tapestry panels. One of the exceptional features will be the lighting effects; indirect light will be used while the pictures are being presented, these fading into various colors with the musical numbers. Every modern facility will be incorporated for safety and comfort, the building to be of fireproof construction.

The Hildinger Enterprises have control of a chain of moving picture theatres. In Trenton the firm owns the Bijou, Strand, Princess, Rialto, Majestic and Crescent, and also controls houses at Lambertville, Doylestown and Belmar and Army theatre, Wrightstown.

Fight Still on Against Five Per Cent Tax

Even though the revenue bill has been reported out by the conference committee of the Senate and House with the expectation of an early vote in its favor, the National Association is still fighting hopefully for a repeal of the five per cent tax on rentals.

It is the intention to follow the plan of campaign of the Newspaper Publishers' Association and the retail merchants in fighting the postal zone tax and luxury taxes, and urge the introduction of resolutions repealing the five per cent tax when the bill reaches the floor of the Senate and House.

The Association's campaign is being carried on under the active direction of WALTER W. IRWIN, and exchanges in every section of the country are co-operating together with exhibitors.

Henry Scully Joins Metro in Boston

(Special Correspondence to Motion Picture News.)

Henry Scully, for the past seven years New Haven branch manager for Paramount, has tendered his resignation to that corporation to join the Metro organization in Boston. Report in New Haven has it that his brother, Frank Scully, will succeed him in the Paramount post.

Antonio Geronimo has sold his interests in the Alhambra Theatre, Stamford, Conn., to the Weiss Bros., well-known exhibitors of New York and Brooklyn. The theatre seats 1100 and plays high-class vaudeville and pictures.

Peter Murphy, manager of Poli's Garden Theatre, Waterbury, has been laid up with the "flu." It is said he is now recovering.

The Colonial Theatre, New Canaan, Conn., was sold last week by Chick & Jones to A. Schumann, formerly advertising man at Regent Theatre, Norwalk.

It is rumored as coming from very good authority that the B. F. Keith interests have purchased a piece of land next to the Davenport Hotel in Stamford where they will build a high-class vaudeville and picture theatre.

Walter Griffith has been transferred from Poli's Theatre, Meriden, Conn., to take charge of the Bijou, New Haven, a larger Poli house. Mr. Vanni succeeds him at Meriden.

S. Z. Poli enterprises have already laid plans for the erection of a new picture and vaudeville theatre in Waterbury. It will, perhaps, be the finest on the circuit.

Many Changes in Kansas City

(Special Correspondence to Motion Picture News.)

P. C. Wreath has taken over the handling of the Hodkinson Service in Kansas City. He also has the Oklahoma City branch under his jurisdiction. Mr. Wreath succeeds J. C. Shannon, who has been transferred to Dallas.

Another change of management has taken place in Kansas City, W. E. Truog leaving the World desk to go to Texas and take personal charge of his oil interests. W. G. Carter is the new World manager. Leo Doty, formerly booker for the "U," is head of a newly created efficiency department, while Don Woods has succeeded him as booker.

With Universal's General Managers Berman and local manager Feld both on the job, "The Heart of Humanity" was given a special midnight show last week for prominent local people. It is booked for the Shubert Theater at top prices, week of March 16.

After a few weeks in Florida, Mr. Flynn, of Richards & Flynn, has returned to town. William Sievers, holder of the First National franchise for Missouri, was a recent Kansas City visitor.

Felix F. Feist, Goldwyn vice-president, was a recent visitor.

Rothacker Film Directors Elect Officers

The annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, was held January 28, at which meeting the following officers were elected: Watterson R. Rothacker, president; David Beaton, Jr., vice-president; H. J. Aldous, secretary and treasurer, and J. G. Mammoser, assistant treasurer.

New Film Paper Appears in Cleveland

(Special Correspondence to Motion Picture News.)

The Ohio Motion Picture Review made its appearance in Cleveland this week. It is a weekly trade paper with reviews of films released by the local exchanges, and news of the exchanges. John De Koven Hill, formerly photoplay editor of the Cleveland Leader-News, and George Cole, also of that paper, are associated in the project.

George Stockton, erstwhile distributor of Ivan films in Ohio, has sold his interest in those rights and acquired the Ohio rights to "Belgium, Kingdom of Grief." In addition, he is handling "The Finger of Justice in Ohio."

"Fit to Win," the U. S. Health Service film, is being distributed with success by the Standard Film Service of Cleveland. The Gaiety played it two weeks, with special matinees for women.

The Norma Talmadge and Frank Keenan reissues are breaking into such houses as the Alhambra, Toledo; Waldorf, Akron; Strand, East Liverpool; Imperial, Zanesville, and the Lyceum, Columbus.

Bert Barnett has opened offices in the Sloan Building as the Star Feature Film Company to handle the Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery." He is planning the opening of a Cincinnati office soon.

"The Heart of Humanity" broke a number of records at the Stillman. For one thing Manager Jack Kuhn had to establish the first Cleveland midnight performance. It is booked for second run showing at the Strand and Lyceum, both downtown houses close to the Stillman.

Among the Ohio theatres signed up for the United Theatres productions are Metropolitan, Monarch, Homestead, Dennison Square, Eclair, Amphion, Jennings, Stork, Crown, Home, Doan and Crawford, all of Cleveland; Dreamland, Empress, Winter's Majestic, Bank Knickerbocker, Alhambra and Ideal of Akron; Schade's Theatre, Sandusky; Dome Theatre, Youngstown; Strand, Canton; Opera House, Warren; Liberty, Zanesville; Temple, Lorain, and John Prkras' houses in Elyria. Clifford Reid is head of the Ohio organization selling United Picture Theatre contracts. Sydney Rosenthal and Joe Lefkowitz are working with him with unquestionable success.

J. W. Beck, assistant manager of the Vitagraph exchange in Cleveland, has returned to the city after an absence of over a year, during which his address was Camp Gordon, Georgia.

William D. Shapiro, of the foreign department of the Fox Film Corporation, is in temporary charge of the Cleveland branch until a permanent manager is appointed to succeed M. E. Maxwell.

Frank Greenwald, of the Exclusive Film Service, together with Thomas Lees, has purchased the Troy, a motion picture theatre located at 3344 Fulton Road.

News of the Week in Canadian Circles

Live news in motion picture circles within the boundaries of Canada has been plentiful the past week, ranging all the way from producing to presentation and the building of new theatres.

The Board of Trade of Calgary, Alberta, has endorsed a proposition laid before it for the establishment of headquarters in Calgary of the Curwood-Shipman Film Company for the production of outdoor pictures in which Nell Shipman is to be starred.

The next Loew theatre in Canada will be placed at London, Ontario, according to an official announcement made by Lawrence Solman of Toronto, who is associated with the Loew theatre interests at Toronto. The new London theatre will be built on a site at Dundas and Wellington streets and will have a seating capacity of 2,500 according to architectural plans. The London houses will split weeks with the Loew theatre at Hamilton, Ontario, which is also quite young in years.

A. W. Appleton, a veteran exhibitor of Toronto, Ontario, and formerly owner of the Maple Leaf theatre, one of the few remaining store shows in the downtown section of the city, has acquired control of the Victoria theatre, 653 Yonge street, Toronto.

Hess Addresses Advertisers

GABRIEL HESS, of the Goldwyn Corporation, was the principal speaker at last week's meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc. Mr. Hess made a strong plea for the co-operation of the Motion Picture Advertising men in the campaign against censorship soon to be instituted by the National Association.

PRESIDENT P. A. PARSONS appointed JOHN C. FLINN chairman of a committee of his own choosing to devise ways and means of assisting Mr. Hess's committee of the National Association.

HUGO REISENFELD, of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, was another speaker. GEORGE LANDY, of Select, was elected to membership. As chairman of the committee, HARRY REICHENBACH reported that all is in readiness for the beefsteak dinner to be held Saturday, February 15.

Richmond Papers Fast Asleep

Only One of Them Seems to Have Even Dreamed There
Is Such a Thing as the Motion Picture

ALTHOUGH Richmond, Va., had a census population in 1910 of 134,917 and is larger than some of the cities that have really live photoplay departments, it will have to be regarded as one of the cities distinctly in the average class.

One of the greatest troubles with the newspapers of the country is not the fact that they will not cooperate, but simply that they have not awakened to the interest of the public in the photoplay. Papers of this class merely look upon the space that they are called upon to give motion pictures as simply wasted—and so they ignore the possibilities of making it worth while and the result is that the conclusion of the papers is right—the space is wasted.

Richmond is a live city. You may now know that it was the first city in the country to have trolley cars, that twenty years ago it built one of the finest hotels in the United States and that it is now the center of one of the richest districts south of the Potomac. It is nothing that Richmond of itself has in its blood that keeps it average. It is simply the spirit of the average middle-sized city newspaper proprietor who doesn't care. He may be willing to spend a lot of money on care on other departments of the newspaper, but he simply cannot see any reason why he should become interested in a subject in which more of his readers are interested than any other.

There is a remarkable situation in Richmond, and it presents so far as we know the smallest number of theatres on record in comparison with the size of the city. There are only eight motion picture theatres for white patronage, and two for the negroes. There is one neighborhood house—in South Richmond. One would conclude that these theatres could afford to be the most liberal, of advertisers, because of the appeal they make, and they do show a liberal desire in that direction, though it is possible that the advertising situation is affected by the fact that the Jake Wells syndicate owns the majority of motion picture as well as legitimate houses.

Wells has the Bijou, seating 2,000; the Colonial with 1,500; the Isis, 900; the Victor, 700, and the Odeon, 500. The other houses are the Victor, 700; Bluebird, 850; Rex, 400, and the Theato, 400. Now it would appear that if the theatres running in opposition to Mr. Wells were on the job they would advertise strongly to get the patronage, but this they do not do, and from the copies of the Richmond papers that we have inspected they seem to be willing to trail along in second place. True, they haven't the capacities of some of the Wells houses, but we have so often told stories here of how the smallest of houses have made big business by advertising that it is not necessary to repeat.

And there are not a large number of newspapers there that the exhibitor would have to use—only three, and but one of them has a Sunday edition. Here are the statistics from the Lord & Thomas directory:

Journal, Afternoon (20,609).

News-Leader, Afternoon (39,977).

Times-Dispatch, Morning (24,340) and Sunday (42,660).

Now when you take a look at the page opposite you will note that in the Sunday edition of the Times-Dispatch the Wells theatres absolutely dominate the situation. With the exception of the two-inch card of the Rex the others are Wells houses. Turning back to the Saturday edition of the Journal we find the Isis and the Victor the only Wells houses that advertise, while the Bluebird, Rex and Theato are represented by an inch each.

Only the Isis and Victor of the Wells houses appears in the Saturday News-Leader, while here the Victor is the most liberal, using the same space as the Isis on its current attraction and five inches across five columns on the picture to open Monday. (Sunday exhibitions are not permitted in Richmond.)

Turning to the daily issues we find that the five Wells theatres carry their advertising together in the Times-Dispatch, while in the Tuesday issue that we have reproduced the Bluebird uses large space and the Rex is represented by two inches.

Turning to the daily issues we find that the five Wells theatres carry their advertising together in the Times-Dispatch, while in the Tuesday issue that we have reproduced the Bluebird uses large space and the Rex is represented by a couple of inches.

The Journal of the same day carries the same Bluebird display, four inches from the Victor, the same amount from the Isis, two inches from the Rex and an inch from the Theato.

The News-Leader carried the same advertising of the Wells houses as the Times-Dispatch, an inch from the Theato and six inches from the Rex.

The Wells theatres seem to depend entirely upon the material that comes from the producers and there are no special designs used, but most of the advertising is above the average and shows a desire to make the best of the circumstances. The other theatres show the poorest sort of "card" advertising.

Now when we come to what the newspapers are doing for the theatres, we may answer that it is the purest sort of "reading matter" stuff. When we come to what the newspapers are doing for their readers, we can answer in one word—NOTHING.

In the Sunday issue the Times-Dispatch uses a bunch of stock cuts, grouped together, many of them bearing the lettering of the producers. But it gives a separate page to the photoplay and gathers the motion picture matter and the advertising together.

The Journal gives the photoplay no cut representation and the matter is evidently usually junked in with the legitimate drama. We say "usually," for on the page that we have reproduced there is not ONE LINE of motion picture matter. The illustrations consist of a picture of a couple of burlesque queens and some clown saxophonists.

Likewise we fail to find a line of motion picture matter in the Saturday News-Leader.

Richmond is a city of a very high class. The majority of its white inhabitants are cultured. They are interested in motion pictures, but it is no credit to the newspapers. These papers could not be worse if they tried, with the possible exception of the Sunday paper, which seems to fail to realize that the public expects something more than the pure reading matter.

The attitude of the newspaper is: "If we want this advertising we have to give the advertiser something. Let's get out of it the easiest way possible."

We believe that Richmond is a live city, but we would never reach that conclusion from the manner in which its newspapers treat the motion picture.

And what a chance is there. None of the papers is doing anything to encourage the theatres to advertise, there is nothing being done to increase the volume of interest in the photoplay, nothing to make the newspapers more attractive to their readers. We are sure that the first paper that starts a real motion picture department will get the full support of a live exhibitor like Jake Wells. And if the paper knows its business it would so conduct that department as to develop the other theatres into intelligent advertisers.

We would like to see the theatres get busy and stir their patrons up to demanding that the newspapers do something—that they print real fan news, that they give a least a page each Saturday or Sunday to the news of the industry—that the newspapers give them, the readers, the sort of matter that they wanted to read.

It looks to us very much like the Richmond newspapers are where they were twenty years ago. There were no motion pictures then and therefore nothing to print about them. The papers

Real Music Cues Urged by Franklin

By Harold B. Franklin

Manager, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

HAS musical synchronization kept pace with the rapid strides of motion picture production? Were it not for the efforts of the principal exhibitors throughout the country and a limited few producer-exhibitors, one is apt to feel that little progress has been made. The past few years witnessed a marked deterioration in the quality of the music cue sheets furnished by most producers and distributors.

Excepting where screenings of a picture can be obtained in advance of play date, most exhibitors have to depend solely on the music cue sheets furnished by the exchange. The great majority of these musical suggestions are carelessly prepared and appear to have been inspired by some music publishing house, which leaves one to believe that the number of musicians who have devoted themselves to the serious study of musical synchronization is comparatively small.

The producer and distributor ought to feel that his production is worthy of the finest presentation possible, and as music is probably the most important essential next to the picture itself, the producer and distributor should exert himself by furnishing with each release a carefully studied out musical setting, compiled by a musician of ability and authority.

It is an undisputed fact that a good picture can be enhanced by good, appropriate music, but it also can be marred if not entirely spoiled by bad selections of music.

Many will point out that it is the function of the exhibitor to furnish a suitable musical program, but unfortunately not all exhibitors are able to secure advance screenings of pictures, nor have they the facilities to do this work. It entails considerable time and money to be able to do this work properly. At Shea's Hippodrome, each feature is screened carefully two or three times by our musical conductor and myself. A special room with full equipment besides the services of an operator is used. After the screenings, suitable selections are picked out from the library. Then follows a rehearsal with the entire orchestra. It can be readily seen that not every exhibitor can afford to go

"At the Close of Day," famous painting used as stage setting at Shea's Hippodrome through this process. With all this effort, a certain sameness is observable even in the best first-run theatres—a similarity in treatment, in mental mood, and in the class of music. It is quite natural that this would exist because the selections express the taste of one or two men. There comes a time when the best thing in the world becomes a little tiresome.

There would be a distinct advantage by having the producer contribute his ability and personality in the preparation of a music cue sheet that could be taken seriously by the exhibitor. It would do away with the invariable touch of the same hand that picks the music for every program. The smaller exhibitor could follow such a music sheet with confidence while it would serve as an excellent guide for the larger theatres who wish to instill originality in their performances.

These music cue sheets could be prepared by a staff of musicians of proficiency under the personal supervision of the director, who naturally has a more intimate understanding of his production than anyone else. Each production would have a musical setting individually its own, and the result will be a more competitive effort which would result in greater creative thought. This plan would eliminate the crudities of stereotyped music cue sheets and give us a new conception of musical synchronization through the co-operation of men of ability.

When Triangle began doing business a few years ago some excellent musical scores were furnished, and it is unfortunate that other producers did not follow up the idea. It is not necessary, however, to furnish a score with each picture. Besides that, it is not always a practical plan because the size of the different theatre orchestras vary. Of course, where a complete score is available there naturally is a more perfect synchronization.

Your Idea and Ours

STRAND THEATRE, Montgomery, Ala., has followed out suggestions of using a signature cut or name plate in all of its advertising and from now on will use distinctive borders. It is only after you have tried this plan that you come to know how much more effective your advertising can be made.

A Girl who sought shelter in a House of Glass stood wide-eyed as its walls shattered about her, unable to withstand the stone flung by a ruthless hand. Stranded in the path she took, was well-nigh crushed—then from the ruins of her House of Glass, rose one of solid grandeur.

Mrs. Charlie Chaplin
(MILDRED HARRIS)
IN LOUI WEBER'S
"BORROWED CLOTHES"

has a play that shows her to be a charming girl, an attractive woman, an accomplished actress, a play that is typical of the art of Louis Weber. It is the play of which Joan Johnston, in "Photo-play," wrote: "No limited review can do justice to the fine shading, the subtle character development, the razor keen revelations of life in this magnificent human photoplay."

TODAY & FRIDAY—
THEATRE

This nine-inch three-column display on "Borrowed Clothes" is an excellent one because it has a combination of cuts; display lines and then the selling talk in smaller type that will be read. The theatre did the right thing in using the name of Mrs. Chaplin in large type and then playing up the attention grabbing title of the picture to the limit. The name of the star is the first thing that hits the eye, and then after we get a glimpse of the title the attention is immediately transferred to the cut at the top, thence to the line "A girl who sought shelter in a house of glass"—just enough of a line to arouse the curiosity for then one is led into the selling talk in the smaller type. That is getting about a hundred per cent results.

Advertising is the yeast that makes the theatre dough rise.

LOEW'S Stillman theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, used half-page space in some of the newspapers in advertising "The Heart of Humanity." The reduction here is too great to show the attractive quality of the display in its original form.

LOEW'S STILLMAN
THEATRE
Cleveland, Ohio

"Heart of Humanity"
A Great Super Production

Dorothy Phillips

THE PICTURE THAT WILL LIVE FOREVER

The main feature of the display came from the picture of Dorothy Phillips in the heart arrangement, and then a series of stills from the picture. We rather believe that too many of these get the fullest attention, but the Stillman has used sufficient space to put them over if anything can.

The reading matter is divided between a selling argument on the picture and some excerpts from the criticisms of New York papers. There is a mighty good line that was used by all of the advertising of the Broadway in "The picture that will live forever." All in all, it is a mighty good example of appealing to the heart in motion picture advertising.

A bargain is not one simply because it is so labeled.

THIS quarter page display of the Colonial theatre, Toledo, O., certainly ought to get every fan who likes action pictures into the theatre. We like the manner in which the name of Tom Mix has been strongly displayed and the line that is used with the name, "The boy who never fakes." Then the title is played up strong, and in smaller type some of the reasons why people will want to see the picture put into crisp recitals of things that the star does in the course of the production.

We believe that the Colonial can get better effects out of its halftones if it will have the stereotyper "underlay" its cuts. A cut such as this should be very clear, because in such a case as this it has been made subsidiary to the type matter. We would also have omitted the diamond shaped cut of Mix and the two guns at the left and then have played the sentence, "Let the greatest cowboy actor in the world take you through two hours of thrills" up stronger.

The line of type carrying "Other Attractions" should have been much lighter, and the display as a whole would have been improved by leaving more space between the type and the border.

THE GREAT NAZIMOVA
"EYE FOR EYE"

IF YOUR EYES SEE REALITIES OF LIFE WHICH YOU HAVE NEVER DREAMED OF WOULD YOU GIVE YOURSELF UP TO THE SPELL AND LET YOUR IMAGINATION ALSO BE UNTHAWED TO EXPERIENCE WONDERFUL ADVENTURE LOVE AND INTRIGUE SEE THE SUPERB WOOD OF NAZIMOVA IN "EYE FOR EYE"

IMPORTANT STATEMENT

Out of ten pictures submitted to us for screen examination we selected Nazimova in "Eye for Eye."

In every city where this production has been shown, it has broken all records.

T. D. Soriero, Mgr. Park Theatre, Boston, says: "We cannot take care of the people. It is the best picture of the season."

E. C. Rootwick, Mgr. the Merrill, Milwaukee, says: "Nazimova is certainly the biggest star in pictures today, and the production is beyond all reports."

MAJESTIC

WONDERFUL appearance of Nazimova and the striking photographs of her that have been supplied exhibitors by Metro have resulted in mighty striking advertising of her most recent productions.

Here is one from the Majestic theatre, Columbus, O., that could have been improved somewhat had the black and the half-tone not been run together as they have been. The display would have stood out much stronger with a white line around the body of Nazimova. We have pointed out that the theatre has to get unusually good printing to make this combination work stand out and it is much better not to take any chances with the stereotyper and the engraver. The band of white space would have solved this problem.

There is a striking quotation from the press book beginning with "If your eyes see," and then the rest of the display is devoted to the statement that this picture was picked by the theatre out of ten available and then the managers of two big houses in other cities are quoted. It is good advertising once in a while when you are certain that you have the goods to back up your statements.

Drive away the ghosts of the past with the limelight of advertising.

HERE is a splendid tie-up with a serial campaign, a page advertisement in the Washington Herald with nineteen theatres cooperating in the announcement. This serial has been sold on the state rights basis and it is a mighty good thing to see that purchasers of such rights realize that the best way to get the fullest amount of money is to turn to the newspapers.

So Sidney B. Lust, who owns the rights in the Washington territory, paid for a considerable portion of this space and then the newspaper proceeded to do the rest in soliciting the theatres that will show "The Silent Mystery."

It is unfortunate that most exhibitors do not believe in advertising serials. They are delighted when the distributor advertises them, but they cannot see why they should do their part. Advertising is just as essential with the serial as with anything else and certainly there is no case where a tie-up with the original announcement counts for more.

What Live Wires are Doing

[illegible]

Anyone can turn over a "new leaf," but a whole lot depends on what is on it.

WE are printing this one for two reasons: First, it shows good unique advertising. But greater than that it shows the value of cooperation between a live photoplay editor and a theatre manager who is on the job.

Omaha Bee was carrying the story of "Virtuous Wives" serially at the time that the picture was being shown at the Rialto theatre, and in this connection there was an announcement carried on the front page of the Bee. The photoplay editor wrote his comment and sent the clipping to H. M. Thomas, with the result that advertising space was used for the reproduction of the advertisement and the comment just as it is shown here. Of course, there may have been "collusion" in this little piece of exploitation, but certainly it resulted in attracting the attention of everyone who was reading the story and a lot more, too.

There's a whole lot in the newspaper and the theatre keeping in close touch. There are lots of things to be taken advantage of if both sides of the game are on the lookout for them.

Let the other fellow do the worrying about your theatre and his.

HERE is one of the very best black and white effects that we have seen. It is a thirteen inch four column display of the People's theatre, Portland, Ore., and stands out like the legendary "house afire."

There are three things to be featured prominently in advertising this picture—the title of the picture, the name of the author and the star. This has been attractively done all the way through. You might say that the only decorations are the few stars used in the left-hand corner and the cut of Dustin Farnum. In this connection note the effect that has been obtained by outlining the hat. ing argument of the picture is left out.

It is essential to get the eye, but there must be something after this. Now this display of the Holman theatre, Montreal, is unquestionably a striking piece of work. It really dominates the page and it is the first thing that you look at. But what does the figure of Miss Dean on the back of the wild cat mean? Absolutely nothing. On the other hand, it is misleading in representing the type of a story that it distinctly is not. After her several big recent successes the name of the star should have been played stronger and then there should have been some selling argument. That line we have suggested several time: "She purr, she scratch, etc.," would have helped. It has the effect of describing the sort of a character she plays; the drawing here does not.

He who finishes a nose ahead doesn't worry about the dust.

HERE is one of the invisible ink stunts that has been adapted to motion picture exploitation for the first time. Octago Films which is distributing the Houdini serial is responsible for this one. It has issued a herald for distribution by the exhibitors which bears only two lines of text matter. At the top of the herald is the question: "Can you solve this mystery?" and at the bottom there are smaller lines advising the recipient to hold the sheet over a fire. When this is done the invisible ink does the self-liberation act and brings forth a picture of Houdini doing the same thing. Then there follow the lines: "How does he escaue? See Houdini in B. A. Rolfe's super serial, 'The Master Mystery.'" Space is left for the printing of the name of the theatre and date of showing.

How New York Stages the Show

WITH the exception of the Rialto, dramatic features hold sway at all of the New York houses this week. "Out of the Fog" is the feature at the Rivoli, and this picture, made from "Ception Shoals," is tense from the start. Equally so is the new Geraldine Farrar offering, "Shadows," at the Strand. There is a ray of comedy in "The Wicked Darling," at the Broadway, but its story is also gripping. At the Rialto there is a lot of comedy in "Maggie Pepper."

For the first time since we have been reviewing these pictures there appears at two of the theatres the same comedy. This is "Rip and Stitch, Tailors," which is being shown at both the Rialto and Strand.

Broadway theatre makes its first appearance in these columns this week, and it will be reviewed on each change of bill.

Attention is called to the fact that that field of short subjects is mighty well covered in the course of all of these reviews.

The Broadway

BROADWAY theatre is offering its first new bill in two months this week, following the conclusion of the run of "The Heart of Humanity" at that house. This week the feature attraction is Priscilla Dean in "The Wicked Darling," with a setting of interesting short subjects and pleasing musical numbers.

Broadway is the only one of the principal New York motion picture houses that regularly gives attention to lobby displays. In fact, it is the idea of Maurice A. Kashin, the managing director, that the spirit of the presentation should be carried through from the sidewalk to the screen. This has been done this week and there is not one in the audience who fails to appreciate the fact.

Soderman's "Joan of Arc" is the overture and there is a novel lighting effect achieved by flooding the orchestra in three separate sections with red, white and blue lights. The effect is that of the musicians being draped with the tri-color. Immediately following this comes the Broadway Topical Digest, and to fully carry out the spirit of the overture this opens with Screen Telegram pictures of French girls coming to this country as brides of American soldiers. Here the opening bars of Courquin's "Mariette" is used, maintaining the French spirit. Universal Current Events supplies picture of the French paying honors to the "Devil Dogs" while "Semper Fidelis" is played.

From the same source come pictures of the woman candidate for mayor of Chicago to the accompaniment of "Beneath the Balcony," followed by some interesting animal pictures under the caption saying that they want a league of nations. There are a lot of laughs here while "Rainy Day Blues" is used. Then come pictures showing the latest in fashions for kiddies and first we have "Dance of the Debutantes" and then when we have the mock marriage there are a few bars from the bridal chorus of "Lohengrin," changing to "You're a Grand Old Flag" when the picture of the kiddie with the American colors is flashed on the screen. After this come pictures of a motorcycle using an aqueduct pipe for a roadway, to the tune of "On the Level, You're a Little Devil" and then pictures of wounded soldiers of O'Ryan's "Roughnecks" at drill in the hospital while "March Patriotic," by Rosey, helps get the patriotic spirit over. All of these subjects are taken from Universal Current Events.

Then come Screen Telegram pictures of President Wilson in conference with the British premier and then comes a Hy Mayer cartoon of "A Hero's Reward" which puts a punch in the finish of the weekly. "Pomp and Circumstance" is used for both of these closing pictures.

Then we have an organ solo, "Beceuse," from "Jocelin," and this is followed by a comedy, "The Kaiser That Was." The fox trot from "Floriana" is used for the opening, "Rintinin," "The Dancing Lesson," "Chianti," "Minnie, Shimmie for Me" and "Oh, What a Time for the Girlies." Then comes "Topics of the Day" which are discussed under the Strand heading, and for this organ music is used.

Now we get some remarkable aeroplane pictures, released by Educational, "Twenty Thousand Leagues in the Air." These pictures show a series of flights over Washington with views of the city from the swerving machines and record numerous thrilling stunts. The house is completely dark for these pictures, adding much to the effect. The prelude from Massenet's "Sapho" and then is followed by Mendelssohn's "Scherzo," from "A Midsummer Night's Dream." These are used in the quieter scenes and then for the daring flight pictures we have "Orie of the Spirits" accompanied by the aeroplane effects.

Mlle. Aubert then sings "Polacca" from "Mignon" before a setting which represents a harbor with a city in the background. There is a spotlight on the vocalist. Just one little criticism here. The singer was dressed in yellow, which to us is a distinctly displeasing color when one figures how it jars with any of the light effects.

Then comes the feature. We have referred to this at some length and have given the complete score in a Special Service Section in this issue. Just let us say one thing here: Keep your eye on the music at the Broadway. J. C. Bradford, the director, is doing some big things and his tips will be well worth watching.

Rivoli Theatre

THIS being the week that New York has devoted to honoring the memory of Theodore Roosevelt a tribute is paid to him at both the Rialto and the Rivoli with special musical numbers. And here is more proof of the power of music for these numbers leave a far greater effect upon those who hear it than would all of the oratory in the world.

For the first time since we have been visiting either of these houses the Rivoli Pictorial is put at the end of the program this week. The unexpected is always liked, because one gets mighty tired of seeing things done the same way all the time. You should have seen the people turning to their programs when the Pictorial came in just as it did; about half of the people seemed to think that they had slept over something. But into the end of the Pictorial there is brought in a "Happy Hooligan" comedy which has the desired result of "sending them away laughing."

Suppe's "Light Cavalry" is the overture, the first part of it being carried largely on the brass with the various trumpet calls sounded now and then. It is now blatant, now dimming into the rest of the instruments, then the bugle calls again and finally it comes back to the full orchestra and organ for the final crash. The lighting of the house is in gold.

Then comes a particular good one of the Robert C. Bruce scenes, "The Restless Threë." It shows Bruce and the Great Dane that is not so familiar to picture-goers and the woolly dog who was known as the "Whoosit." The scenes start in the Yosemite and we have a particularly fine shot of the falls from a distance. Many of the scenes show the man and the dogs in the snow-clad mountains and there are a number of intimate touches that get a laugh. Near the end there is a brilliant shot where the title says: "They stand in awe of the great silence," and the end of the picture gets a hand that the makers of many big features would envy. "Schubert Symphony" is the most appropriate musical accompaniment.

Now we have the Roosevelt tribute. The curtains slowly part revealing a quartette representing the choir in an Episcopal church, either side is a white column of the church and then the lighted candle effects with a semi-oval window with the blue showing through at the rear. There is one hanging light and the rest of the stage is dark except for the candle effects. The quartette from Verdi's "Requiem" is the selection.

Follows the feature, Nazimova in "Out of the Fog." There is one of the most effective musical settings that we have ever heard for this, opening with Tschaikowsky's "Tempest" for the opening scenes. In this picture Nazimova plays a double role, first as the mother and then as the daughter, the first portion being unusually tense and therefore music with it is largely sympathetic, the organ prevailing in some of the effects. With the scene where Eve recognizes her drowned lover we have "Visions" followed by "Brahmsiqua" as the brother comes out of the door, then "Pathetic Symphonies" as Eve goes to the dead man and then when the brother asks what that man was to her the music changes to "Poem Erotique" coming back to "Pathetic Symphonies" with the title "You are right" and then march from "Jewess" for the title "Nothing but earthly memories," and then three numbered selections until the title "Captain Shoals" when we have the organ alone with the sea effects. Then with the title "Isolated" we have "Adrian," followed by "Pathetic Symphonies" and the bell buoy effect on the organ as Eve leaps from the lighthouse to her death.

Tips From First Showings Here

With the title "Through the dull monotony" "Claire de Lune" is played, followed by "Musette" as Faith is told to go and then "Courtesy" for the tender's helper. With the title "Within the month" we have "Mercedes" without the intro., then a numbered selection and at the title "Lost in the fog" we have the organ with all sorts of effects brought in. With the title "On the morrow" we have the theme, which is Victor Herbert's "Love Theme" from "The Fall of a Nation" and following through after this come "Melancolie" and a couple of numbered selections and then the theme is repeated as Blake rings the bell and then there follows through "Zara" and "Francesca," then another numbered selection, the theme again as the man sits down to write a letter. From that point on the numbered selections carry the picture until the girl recognizes the returning Blake, then the organ carries the music up to the time that Blake returns to Faith and with this the orchestra comes into the theme until the end of the screening.

With the lights all in gold the orchestra plays "The Spring Maids" and after that we get the Rivoli Pictorial, which opens with Gaumont pictures of the "Lady marines" for which "Lance and Shield" is played. Then come Universal Current Events pictures of France honoring the "Flying Devil Dogs" and with these we have "Semper Fidelis," which continues to the Gaumont pictures of flying over San Francisco for which "Oh You Sweetie" is used until the machines take the air and then the orchestra is tacit and effects are employed. After that come Pathe pictures of the Los Angeles auto races with "Big White Top" played and then Gaumont pictures of the return of Capt. Eddie Rick-enbacker with "The Southlanders" as the music.

THEY'RE WAKING UP

Producers Catering to the Exhibitors Who Really Do Things

WE met representatives of three producers in a hotel lobby the other evening and the discussion turned around an article that had recently appeared in these pages. For obvious reasons we are omitting all names.

"He is showing what can be done in smaller cities," said one of them. "I have just written the exchange manager in that territory to see that this man is given every co-operation. Accounts of what these live wires are doing advertise our pictures better than anything else can do."

"But," retorted the other, "you are not going to get all of this man's business. Report on my desk today told what he was going to do with —," and then he named one of his company's productions. "The best thing about an exhibitor like this is that he makes money on his pictures and he is satisfied."

After the other two had left the third man turned to us and said:

"Gee whiz, if we could only wake them all up like this fellow the rumor corner would have to go out of business. Some of these days the exhibitors as a whole are going to wake up to the fact that the live boys can get most anything they want if they show the pep in their turn."

Do you wonder that the producers and distributors are watching the men that are doing things?

And what are you doing?

Pathe shows pictures of the captured whale at Los Angeles with "Shepherds All and Maidens Fair" and then the music turns to "Bannerweihe" for Gaumont's views of the graduating class at Annapolis. Kinogram pictures treatment of soldiers for shell shock to "Paysage" and then we have pictures elsewhere described of the wounded men of Gen. O'Ryan's division to "March Joyeuse." Kinogram gives us a view of the Atlanta saying goodbye to slang and "Cyclone in Darktown" is used to the end, which comes with a delightful "Happy Hooligan" cartoon.

Le Duc's "Gavotte" is the final organ number.

Strand Theatre

WITH the feature exceedingly tense and dramatic and barren of laughs, Managing Director Plunkett has pursued the right policy at the Strand this week in putting comedy setting all around the main picture. Because of the fact that the feature carries us to Alaska he has also omitted a scenic from the program and here again he has reached a happy decision.

Selections from "La Boheme" form the overture and this is played with the lights gold, correctly, for the opera tells of the inseparable quartette who with equal cheerfulness defy the pangs of hunger and the landlord of their garret. There is sometimes a little pathos, tenderness, but the most of it is all in a good humor and toward the end the full orchestra and the organ come in for a smashing climax.

Then comes the Strand Topical, opening with Pathe pictures of the Los Angeles Victory Sweepstakes, thrilling auto races, which are shown to "Tempest Galop." Then come Universal Current Events views of the immense throngs of Italians crowding the New York steamship offices seeking return to their native country and here "A Trento e Trieste" is used effectively. To the tune of "June Barcarole" the same service shows a motorcycle speeding along the pipes of a California aqueduct, and this continues through the Pathe pictures of the flood at Kent, Washington. There is a good laugh with the flivver dashing through the waters.

After this are Universal Current Events pictures of the wounded of General O'Ryan's division at the Fox Hills hospitals. So interesting are these that they are being shown this week at three of the four theatres reviewed here. These men are on crutches except for the officer, who is in a wheel chair, and they go through the various drills with their crutches. At first one might get the impression that such would be repulsive. And it might be if the smiles of the boys did not show how they were enjoying it and showing the indomitable spirit that brought victory to the world. "Military Tactics" is the musical accompaniment.

Then come the laugh-bringing Topics of the Day, bright paragraphs from various newspapers. One of them that gets a hearty laugh is: "It may soon be milk that made Milwaukee famous," and another one: "We heard a man say that he wished that wives were like money so he could exchange one forty for two twenties." "Entr'acte Valse" accompanies these pictures. Then come pictures of the honors paid by France to the Marine aviators with "Semper Fidelis" used. There is a particularly strong tribute paid to the standard of the "Devil Dogs." Then there is a little diversion with Pathe pictures of the whale washed ashore at Los Angeles.

Pathe then follows with pictures of "Following the army of occupation into Germany." The first views are in Cologne and show freed French and Italian prisoners passing through on their way back home and then British making their entry into the city. To the full orchestral accompaniment of "Admiral Nelson March" these pictures draw a considerable volume of applause. Following this Hearst pictures show "Germany a democracy," with some of the scenes of the parading crowds, the speakers and the preparations for the defence of Berlin against rioters, and it is interesting to note that the audience receives these in cold silence. "Donno Curiose" is the accompaniment.

Music Hints For Entire Programs

"They got there after all" is the title for the first American soldiers to enter Berlin. These are two negro soldiers, whose story was recently told in the news dispatches and they get a big hand. "Stars and Stripes" staff, the newspaper published by the soldiers over there, is then shown in a flash, both of these being to the music of "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Then the stage curtains part revealing a castle with a huge tree at the left and a background of blue, and Mabel Day and Richard Gold, en costume, sing the duet from the second act of "Pirates of Penzance." The soldier is seated on a bench as the girl enters and then he arises and the duet is carried through.

Geraldine Farrar in "Shadows" is the feature and for the opening scenes of this "La Fee aux Perles" is used until we are taken into the ballroom of the Barnes homes, when "Southern Roses" is used to the scene where the dancing stops. Then we have "A Fanciful Vision" played up to the time when Mrs. Barnes enters the ballroom, where the selection shifts to "Tiger Rose." At the point where the last of the guests take their departure the organ assumes the music for seventeen minutes, up to the point where Mrs. Barnes leaves the two men together at the table. There we have "La Nuit et L'Amour," and the scenes that follow for quite a while are transferred to Alaska. When McGoff enters the cabin we get "Ariane and Naxos" as especially arranged, and then at the title "A Hazardous Game" there is "Suite Americana, No. 1," and when the card game starts a dramatic tension. At the point where Cora (Mrs. Barnes) laughs we have "Creole Queen," changing to "L'Amice Fritz" with the scene of the men and Cora in the room.

With the title referring to the last boat the orchestra swings into "Pretty Baby" with steamboat effects and then the musicians remain tacit for a few seconds and there follows through "Rolling," with a couple of more whistles. "Andrea Chamer" is then used and again the orchestra takes up the music until Mrs. Barnes gets the phone message from McGoff, when "Novelletten" is played until McGoff enters the room, when the music becomes "Hermanschact" until the shot is fired and then we have an intermezzo until the scene of the mother and child together, when "Werther" is played to the end.

Joseph Martel, a splendid baritone, then sings "The Kerry Dance" and "Madelon" effectively, and the comedy, "Rip and Stitch" closes the bill. Especially because of the baby and the cat and dog stuff this Mack Sennett is being shown at both the Strand and the Rialto this week. Teddy, the Sennett dog actor, even surpasses the wonderful things that he

WHAT YOU PROMISE

AN exhibitor writes, and we can not use his name; we offer this as an example of what inspiration means to the showman:

"I have read your pages, and especially your advertising suggestions, with much interest. The common sense of them is apparent. You tell us what not to do and what to do. I admit that you are right every time.

"But what am I going to do? I cannot see these pictures before I show them. I have to take the word of the producer in advance. I must base my advertising and everything that I do on what I find out from the trade papers.

"Recently I have noted that you have been printing suggestions about some of the special attractions. And so I have booked some of them, and I have cleaned up. Possibly they are no better than other pictures, but you people have given me some ideas and more than that you have made me think.

"That seems to me to be the main thing—to get me to thinking about the picture. I have used some ideas that I think are better than the ones you suggested, but if I had not had the inspiration I would never have used them."

had done in this one, and there are the usual complications of the married couples that bring no end of laughs, together with a large amount of trick photography stuff. The musical selections are "Girl Behind the Gun" until the title "Indoor baseball," and then "I'm Always Shooting Rainbows" until the baby fires the gun, then "Just Like You" until the dog is showing doing the housework, "My little Billiken" until the title "And the tailor still pursued her." The organ comes in for six minutes and with the title "I hid the baby in that can" the orchestra comes back with "Lion Chase."

Selections from "Carmen" form the organ solo.

Rialto Theatre

A COMEDY bill in a classic setting is the best description of the bill at the Rialto theatre this week, where melody and laughter are put in a most delightful combination.

Tschaikowsky's brilliant "March Slave" is the overture, a selection based on two themes, "Come, my dearest, why so sad?" a Serbian folksong, and the former Russian national anthem. This is played with the lights in gold and nearly all of it with the full orchestral effect, an impressive, tuneful masterpiece that always brings a torrent of applause. But just a hint to the exhibitor:

Don't try to use this unless you have a big orchestra that can really put it over.

The scenic is a Burlingame, "Ascent of the Matterhorn," and is one of the most interesting of mountain climbing pictures. It shows various views of the famous peak and then pictures of the climbers in action, showing the difficulties that they had to encounter. Because many of these scenes had to be taken from above, the inclines are not plainly shown. "In the Garden" is the music for this.

Then comes the Rialto's tribute to Colonel Roosevelt, and a most impressive one it is. Only the dome is in blue, the rest of the lights being out and we have a few strains on the harp and then on the violin. At either side of the stage is a quaint candelabra effect, suggestive of the church and the side curtains are parted with a slight glow of red. With the music of the harp and violin and then the organ coming in the lights become blue on the sides and Miss Gladys Rice comes from between the curtains. There is a blue light on her. Then we have "Ave Maria" sung to the accompaniment of a violin obligato played by Saschal Fidelman with the organ peal coming in for the high notes. At the end the lights gradually fade out and the singer disappears without her exit being noted. It is a startlingly effective arrangement.

Rialto Magazine opens with Gaumont pictures of the Wild West division getting a great reception on its return to Seattle, the marching men stirring the audience to enthusiasm and then follow Kinogram pictures of the state police at drill at Wyoming, Pa. For both of these pictures "Gladiator's Farewell" is the stirring music. Then come Universal Current Events of the inmates of the menageries at Washington who want a league of nations and after this comes Gaumont pictures of the hospital at Colorado Springs for the feathered folk and "Woodland Whispers" are used for both.

Pathe presents some interesting pictures, "With the French Navy," and the stirring music of "La Pere de la Victoire" adds a lot of punch to them with the hornpipe effects brought in on one occasion. Organ music carries the Pathe pictures of the flood at Kent, Wash., and the Gaumont views of the stranded vessel at Aberdeen, Wash. Then Gaumont takes us to Palm Beach, where society has taken up the aquaplanes and here we get some thrills and a laugh to the tune of "Hop Along." With "March Russe" the music Kinograms shows us the Death's Head battalion giving up their arms and passing in review. Then under the title of "Reflections" we have some beautiful views. The Magazine comes to an end with pictures of the happy cavalymen starting home from the Italian front and "A Francesca" is used once through to the end of the pictures.

James Harrod, tenor, then effectively sings "Mary of Argyle," one of the old Scotch songs that will always bear reviving in your theatre and then comes the feature.

New York's Way

"Always Here to Serve You" His Motto, and So a Flood and Storm Failed to Stop Him

Ethel Clayton in "Maggie Pepper," a particularly happy offering with lots and lots of laughs in it.

"Valley of Poppies" is used for the opening and then when we are shown Maggie's cottage we get "Pulcinello" up to the place where she unpacks the shoes when we get "Valley of Poppies" once more. Then with Maggie reading the letter we have "Medusa" followed by "Manse of the Debutante" with the title "In the Lonely Year," then changing to "Apache" with twelve months later and "In a Garden" with the introduction of Joe Holbrook. When Jakey Rothschild, who insists on making love to Maggie, appears on the scene we have "Jewish Melodie," which is repeated with his each reappearance. After this, as the scene changes, we have "Admiration," played without the intro. Then with the title, "Say, Mag," we get "Valse Pleurante," changing to the Jewish theme as Jake appears again, then into "Shepherd Day" as he leaves, into "Causerie" with the title, "If you had any authority" and then to "Melodie d'Amour" with the scene of the two women, the organ taking up the music with "Hargen's opportunity." Then when we have the scene of the crook climbing the window there is a numbered selection and as the action starts, "Turbulence" is played with "Kezekiah" coming in as the scene changes. Then as the doctor arrives we have "Madrigal Serenade," continuing until the manager of the store is seen, when we have "Le Roman," changing to "Jewish Melodie" with the return of Jake, then a numbered selection at the home back again with "You See, Maggie," at the end.

With the lights all gold the orchestra then plays "Gloriana" and then comes "Rip and Stitch, Tailors." Music for this includes "Little Simplicity," "It Gets Them All," "In the Old Fashioned Way," "Waiting," "Speed 'Er Up" and "Aesthetic Galop" at the end.

Gounod's "Fantasia on Faust" is the final orchestra number.

ONE of the favorite stories told of S. L. Rothapfel during the time that he started in his motion picture career in the operation of a motion picture show in a room behind a saloon in Forest City, Pa., is about his tramping for miles through the snow when the railroad was blocked to get a picture so that his audience would not be disappointed.

Now from another small city, Kelso, Wash., comes another example of the same spirit—the sort that is bound to make a success in any business. The man is C. G. Vaughn, who operates the Vogue theatre, the only place of amusement in this community of 2,500 which is located on the main line of the Northern Pacific about fifty miles east of Portland.

"Always here to serve you" is the motto of Mr. Vaughn, whose boast has been that his theatre is never dark. But a couple of weeks ago this boast would not have been borne out except for his unusual energy, for there came one of the sort of rainstorms that makes history, and the railroad tracks for miles on either side of Kelso were piled so high with mud and debris that a thing like running trains was out of the question. And Vaughn didn't have any picture to show that night.

But over in his garage there was his trusty automobile and Vaughn waded through the mud, put on the chains, filled her up with gas and started out as best he could to make his way through the mud. But before he started on his journey he stopped by the printer's and had some handbills printed announcing that he was going to Portland "in an aeroplane" to get a picture for that evening. But he didn't count on a collision with a truck after ploughing his way for five miles through the mud. And the damages were such that the truck had to pull the "flivver" back home.

Back home again, Vaughn got busy and soon learned that the railroad to Rainier, a little town on another line and sixteen miles farther down the Columbia River was still over. He hustled over to the station and looked up the connections, finding that there was still time to get a picture from Portland to Rainier. The long distance 'phone then told the exchange of his predicament. It took Vaughn only forty-five minutes "down hill" to Rainier, but it was a three hour and a half trip coming back, and it was still raining.

Vaughn was wet and bedraggled when he returned, but he rushed the picture to the operating room just in time for the evening show. But before the picture was started there flashed on the screen his old motto, "Always here to serve you," and there came a burst of applause from the audience that paid for all of his troubles.

There aren't many managers that would do this. They would simply say that it wasn't their fault that the railroad was out of business and that the public wouldn't blame them, so what would be the use of going to a lot of trouble. It was bad weather anyway and so a lot of people wouldn't care about coming to the theatre, and even if there were a few people who didn't have anything to do that evening there would be little harm done.

But Mr. Vaughn doesn't figure that way. He believes in making good every day in the year. That's the reason he has the only show in Kelso, and judging from this feat it will be a long time before anyone tries to start opposition. It's the spirit that wins—no matter the size of your community.

Two of the window displays on the song "Mickey" secured by Harold B. Franklin during the Buffalo showing of the picture

Buffalo Stores Give Franklin Wonderful Cooperation in Exploitation of "Mickey"

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, was able to get a large amount of co-operation during his showing of "Mickey" and as one of the results he reports remarkable business with the Mabel Normand production. He followed largely the plan prepared by H. J. Shepherd and, as already outlined in these columns, of getting the co-operation of the phonograph stores which have the record of the song for sale and of the five and ten-cent stores in selling the sheet music.

There were a half dozen window displays in the business section around the theatre including the Woolworth and Kress stores where the windows were filled with copies of the song and pictures of Miss Normand as she appears in the production, the Columbia phonograph, Aeolian and Vocalion stores. Not only did the people look on these displays, but they heard "Mickey" music everywhere and so they did not get a chance to forget that the picture was being shown at the Hippodrome.

In order to increase the effectiveness of these window displays Mr. Franklin had designed some very artistic display cards and rush work was done in getting out some sixty of these within twenty-four hours. The photos were secured from the exchange and the colors touched up. These were mounted on buff cardboard and the same matter that was used in the newspaper displays. Mr. Franklin reports that he was able to get window space in practically every department store, music show and Columbia phonograph dealer in the city.

Mr. Franklin maintains his own art department and readers of these pages are familiar with the manner in which he prepares the attractive special posters that he uses in his lobby frames. Such a department as this enables him to meet an emergency often and to get a lot of results that would otherwise not be attained. For instance, in this case the stores were willing to give the space to the attractive cards that he prepared, whereas had he undertaken to get the average ready-prepared poster placed the chances are nine out of ten that he would have been refused.

These attractive posters were 14 x 22 and sixty of them were made over night by Mr. Franklin. They were placed in the show windows of practically every leading store in Buffalo and helped to bring big business to Shea's Hippodrome.

Buffalo Manager Capitalizes Program Attraction

Some months ago, while we were printing special articles about theatre programs we had occasion to commend that of the Elmwood theatre, Buffalo, but suggested that it would be better if the cast of characters of each picture was included. E. C. Weiberg, the manager, is a live wire and he was quick to grasp the idea and put them in.

But he is also the sort of a live wire that wants to keep the people talking about his house, so recently the following appeared:

"Have you noticed that the cast of characters has been omitted from the Elmwood program? You have. And you'd rather have them in? All right. We figured out you might care to know more about the play than the players—but, after all, it seems as if something was missing about them. And, besides, it isn't a big stunt to find out what you are seeing on the screen. Because—you wouldn't go to the speaking theatre without knowing the stars who were to appear, would you? The Elmwood isn't ashamed to print the names of the players, so you'll always find them inside."

And the casts came back.

Makes It Worth While to See Special Trade Showing

There have been lots of records of trade showings of pictures, but they were all broken when "Heart of Humanity" was shown to an audience of a thousand invited guests at the Majestic theatre, Detroit, through the courtesy of the Univers exchange manager, Paul Bush. Cigars were distributed to the men and boxes of candy to the ladies. Charles G. Branham, manager of the Majestic, had his full orchestra on hand and Henry Santrey, soloist of the theatre, sang. The picture scheduled for an early run at the Majestic

N. Y. Theatre Interests 5,000 New Patrons Through Way That It Exploited "Our Teddy"

WHEN S. A. Shackman, owner and manager of the Eighty-First Street theatre, New York, booked "Our Teddy," the six-reel screen version of the life of Theodore Roosevelt, he believed that he had an opportunity to interest new patrons in his photoplay house. The picture had already been shown at the Strand theatre for a week under the title of "The Fighting Roosevelts."

To bring the end of the story right up to the top the results that Mr. Shackman achieved was to bring approximately 5,000 new patrons to his house, to show the picture for four days to capacity in a house seating 2,400 and to work up a large amount of interest in the school children and to get the fullest co-operation of the teachers in advertising the picture and his house.

Eighty-first Street theatre changes its bill twice a week, the second half opening on Thursday and continuing through Sunday night, and this was the time that "Our Teddy" was put on. But he determined to make the picture stand out not only as the feature of the week, but to get the advantage of all possible advance exploitation, and so he began to cast about for methods to arouse interest outside the regular patronage.

It was while Mr. Shackman was laying these plans that he learned there had been just written a song called "Goodbye, Teddy Roosevelt, You Were a Real American." Now the final scenes of the picture show Colonel Roosevelt and his four sons in double exposures over a service star, the action picturing the part taken by the four sons in the great war. So Mr. Shackman saw what a hit he could make by having this song sung by a quartette of wounded soldiers. He began a search of the hospitals around the city and located the men that he wanted.

So beginning with the Sunday matinee, preceding the opening of "Our Teddy," he introduced these soldiers as "Pershing's Overseas Quartette." Specific reference was made to the Roosevelt picture and the song was sung while slides showing scenes from "Our Teddy" were flashed on the screen. This was repeated at every performance during the first half of the week.

Variety and novelty was sought for the lobby display. A display portrait of Roosevelt was hung from the marquee, and in an apartment house opposite he placed a spot light which threw a strong light on the portrait after dark. A similar portrait, draped with flags, was hung in the center of the marquee above the sidewalk for the attention of passers-by on the theatre side of Broadway.

He used a different style of lobby display, alternating the arrangements of material in the cards, so that it appealed both to his regular patrons and to the new clientele. Some of the frames contained lobby display photographs, while others were mounted with newspaper and magazine clippings, surrounding large portrait photos of the former President.

Within a radius of ten blocks to the theatre are public schools, with a registration of 10,000. A personal appeal was made to the principal of each of nine schools and permission was obtained from them individually for the distribution of ten thousand blotters, announcing a special school children's matinee at 11.30 o'clock, Saturday morning. To add interest to the occasion he invited the New York Council of the Boy Scouts of America for its members to attend the special matinee with its band of thirty-five pieces. At the special matinee this band gave a patriotic concert before the showing of the feature. The results: While the special matinee was scheduled to start at 11.30, but at 9.00 the lobby and street were jammed and a half hour later there were nine policemen on the job to keep the street open. This matinee proved of great value in bringing the parents of the children to later performances.

Usually Mr. Shackman uses the ordinary announcement space in the Times, morning and evening World five times a week, but with this picture he started a campaign on Wednesday, which he continued through Saturday, using two-inch, two-column displays, with situations in a cartoon, by Brinkerhoff, to illustrate it. This emphasized the human side of the picture. A special music score was used during the showing of the picture.

Baltimore Paper Tests Ability to Identify Players

Baltimore News, which has always been a leader in co-operation with the motion picture theatres and in giving the fans the real news of the photoplayers, has now started a contest with the identification of motion picture players. One of these is being printed each day and there will be a total of sixty players shown. From the very start the interest in the contest has been the greatest, and theatre managers report that it is stimulating new interest in the pictures. No conditions of any sort are made for participation.

The News was one of the first papers in the country to issue a special Sunday section for photoplays and to use reviews.

Nazimova Begins a New Series

"The Heart of a Child" from Well-Known Novel, Included in the List—Five to Be Made in California

ARRANGEMENTS for a new series of Nazimova Productions have been completed by the star herself in co-operation with Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, who present the Nazimova super-features.

The announcement of the star's new plays comes simultaneously with the release of "Out of the Fog," and word from the West Coast that she has completed the much discussed screen version of Edith Wherry's novel, "The Red Lantern." Maxwell Karger, under whose supervision the Wherry story was made, has already begun the cutting and assembling of the picture, which promises to excel in beauty, elaborateness, and power anything Nazimova has ever done on the stage or screen.

The new series will comprise five deluxe productions and will be photographed in California under the direction of Albert Capellani, and the general supervision of Maxwell Karger. Henri Menessier, Mme. Nazimova's art director, with a staff of nationally known artists, will prepare the distinctive art details of the productions.

In variety of theme, wealth of costume, direction, setting and lighting, the new Nazimova pictures will surpass even her achievements of the last twelve months, according to Richard A. Rowland, as superb and superior and satisfying as these masterpieces were from an artistic and box-office standpoint. Contemporary literature has been finely combed to provide the star with vehicles commensurate with her art and popularity. Each story will be widely different in theme, treatment and locale.

The first of the new Nazimova super-features consequently will be a surprise to many since it gives an English part to the star popularly supposed to be most at home in roles of Oriental or exotic flavor.

However, this particular English role has all the fire and imagination that Nazimova's most exacting admirers could wish. The story in question, the screen rights to which have been obtained for the star's use, is "The Heart of a Child," Frank Danby's (Mrs. Julia Frankau) most popular and most appealing and gripping novel.

Pathe Claims Notable "Beat" for News Reel

DECLARING that it had a camera man right in the most exciting phases of the German revolution and that he was in Berlin during the big dramatic developments of the movement, Pathe claims that the Pathe News reels contained the first pictures of these big happenings in No. 13, released February 8.

In the first nine issues of the Pathe News some idea of the efficiency of the service on both sides of the Atlantic is given by the records, which, they assert, represents clean beats over all competitors. They are declared to be as follows:

December 18, first pictures of the big Caproni biplane and a remarkable series of pictures taken from it while flying over New York City; December 25, another series of aerial pictures, taken from the big naval dirigible in a flight over New York City, and pictures of the submarine chasers in heavy seas; January 4, pictures of the British ship Vindictive, sunk in the bombardment of Zeebrugge; remarkable demonstration of American tanks; scenes of the earthquake disaster in Guatemala; January 8, stirring pictures of the French entry into Alsace-Lorraine; January 11, President Wilson's arrival in London; King Albert's entry into Brussels, which was exclusive; January 15, pictures showing United States submarine activities; January 18, the King of Italy's entry into Trieste; pictures taken during a remarkable flight over Washington, called one of the best bird's eye views of the capital ever accomplished; January 22, scenes during President Wilson's tour through England.

Many of these stories up to the present are declared exclusive and others in the list are said to have been shown long after they were first given to the public by Pathe News.

Four-Star Work Progresses Steadily

Now that the organization plans of the new company formed to produce the Four Star series of features with Miss Leah Baird are completed work is rapidly being pushed on the first of the six box-office attractions. Under the supervision of Harry Raver a spectacular offering to appeal to the class of exhibitors who participated with him in the profits on "Cabiria" is being molded into picture form.

George Irving, who just finished the Artcraft Special, "The Silver King," with William Faversham, is the director whose name furnishes one-quarter of the Four Star ensemble. The Biograph Studio has been leased in order to ensure the big, beautiful and massive effects called for by the locale of the story.

For the first of the six Augustus Thomas plays starring Miss Baird, the Broadway play, "As a Man Thinks," is to be screened.

Strong Supporting Cast for Tom Moore

In Tom Moore's newest Goldwyn picture, "A Man and His Money," by Frederic S. Isham, he will have Seena Owen as an ideal foil in the comedy drama.

Sydney Ainsworth makes his first appearance in Goldwyn pictures and is the super-polished villain in "A Man and His Money." Claire Du Brey, who is heralded as combining both beauty and dramatic talent, has a prominent part in the cast.

Sydney Deane, known to playgoers through his vaudeville sketch, "Christmas Eve on Blackwell's Island," has a good part in the new Tom Moore picture, and others prominent in the support are Mabelle Gilman, Kate Lester and Edwin Sturgis.

Rialto Theatre Books Vitagraph Film

"The Lion and the Mouse," great stage play and greater screen triumph, according to prediction, has been secured by the Rialto Theatre for its initial New York run. Vitagraph's big super-production which stars Alice Joyce begins a week's engagement at the Broadway "Temple of Motion Picture" on Sunday, February 16.

Vitagraph has secured a notable cast for the support of Miss Joyce, and this company includes such artists as Anders Randolph, Conrad Nagel, Templar Saxe, T. W. Carleton, Jane Jennings, Henry Hallam, Mona Kingsley, Mary Carr, W. H. Burton and others.

Richard Schayer Engaged to Write for Mix

Owing to the difficulty William Fox has experienced in getting suitable stories and scenarios for Tom Mix, his Western star, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has suggested that Tom Mix's own personal experiences as a soldier of fortune be utilized as plot material for the star's stories. Mr. Sheehan's suggestion has been acted upon, and Richard Schayer, New York and Chicago newspaper man and scenario writer, has been engaged to write specially for Mr. Mix. Mr. Schayer will use as the basic plot of his stories dramatic incidents in the career of Tom Mix.

Sherry Getting Good Reports on Anderson Pictures

William L. Sherry Service reports that its release of the five-reel Western drama starring Gilbert M. Anderson has resulted in most favorable comments from the exhibitors. "The Son of a Gun" is the title of this new offering and was written by Mr. Anderson in collaboration with Jesse J. Robbins. "Red Blood and Yellow" released just before "The Son of a Gun" is going over big, it is reported. The Sherry Service will release a series of five of these productions starring Mr. Anderson.

"Reclaimed" Is Shown to the Trade

The trade showing on "Reclaimed" was scheduled for Wednesday, February 19, at 2:30 P. M., on Loew's New York Roof.

A most attractive press book has been gotten up by the Alpha Pictures, Inc., on "Reclaimed," Harry McRae Webster's latest production, in which Mabel Julienne Scott and Niles Welch are co-starring.

Kitty Gordon is starred by World Film in "Mandarin's Gold."

Jane and Katherine Lee are the fun-makers in the William Fox production called "Smiles," which was directed by Arvid E. Gilstrom

Quinn Likes "Turn in the Road"

Runs It At His Rialto in Los Angeles to Success—Pronounces It a Step Toward Better Productions

WHEN J. A. QUINN saw "The Turn in the Road" at a private running with the officials of the producing company, The Brentwood Film Corporation, he claimed it would prove to be the turn in the road toward the type of better picture for which he has been working. Therefore he arranged to put this feature on for a try-out at his Rialto theatre, Los Angeles, commencing Sunday, December 29. At present writing, "The Turn in the Road" is still showing there and during its fifth week it pulled bigger business than in any previous week, with no evidence of the peak of public interest having been reached.

Contrary to precedent no special advertising campaign was resorted to. The theatre carried its usual modest inch double with a three-inch double space twice in five weeks in the local papers. During the fifth week, however, the producers, the Brentwood Film Corporation, realizing the particularly strong appeal of the picture offered cash prizes of $50, $30 and $20 for the three best answers from the public to the question, "What does the public see in 'The Turn in the Road' to keep this picture showing week after week to steadily increasing business?" and this well-worn stunt promises as this article is written to bring scores of replies containing valuable pointers for aid in shaping future producing policy and also to enormously widen the interests which word-of-mouth advertising has already worked up into record-breaking success.

King W. Vidor, the author-director of "The Turn in the Road" had a serious purpose in mind and clearly wove through the strong drama and deeply emotional scenes of his story a powerful message of the influence which Love in its broadest sense, can bring to bear in the straightening out of the vexing problems

Universal Sees Call for Western Subjects

TWO-REEL Western railroad dramas are so rapidly increasing in popularity among exhibitors all over the country that an extra company of players recently began production of short reel subjects at Universal City, according to word from the home offices of the "Big U."

When Universal began releasing two-reeler Western and railroad dramas last spring it believed the short subjects would have a popular appeal to public and exhibitors, but the demand for these special fillers has far exceeded all expectations to date.

Manager Curly Calvert of the Omaha Universal office reports an extraordinary business with the short-reel subjects;

Manager J. V. Bryson at Minneapolis, Manager Abbett at Indianapolis, Manager Smith at Cleveland, from Pacific Coast exchanges and from New England and Pennsylvania Universal offices have received numerous requests for prints of short-reel subjects.

To provide exhibitors with the best of stories and players in these short-reel subjects Universal's scenario department has sent out hundreds of letters asking writers to submit stories for production, and many prominent film stars have been featured in short-reelers. Helen Gibson, Fritzi Ridgeway, Marie Walcamp, Kingsley Benedict and others have been featured in releases to date.

Pearl White is master of the situation, apparently, in episode six of "The Lightning Raider," Pathe serial. This episode is called "The Mystic Box."

Three Graphics to Inter-Ocean

World Rights Secured Exclusive of United States and Canada by President Cromelin of Lat-ter Concern

GRAPHIC FILM CORPORATION has sold the world rights, exclusive of the United States and Canada, on "Ashes of Love," "When Men Betray" and "The Echo of Youth" to the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, according to announcement made by President Paul H. Cromelin of the Inter-Ocean.

The Inter-Ocean statement reads: "Ivan Abramson was long an independent producer and started the Graphic Film Corporation in order to bring out a bigger type of special feature than his name had up to that time been identified with. The Graphic business has been in existence for over a year and yet only three features have been made. All three productions have been successfully marketed in the most difficult of American markets—the state right field—and this was a further recommendation to us in considering the exploitation abroad of these productions.

"We believe that an important factor in the success of the Graphic plays was found in the care with which Abramson picked his casts. Seldom in the history of filmdom has a cast contained so many prominent artists as those engaged for 'Ashes of Love,' which features James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon, Mabel Julienne Scott, Paula Shay, Ruby de Remer, Dora Mills Adams, Hugh Thompson, William B. Davidson, William Bechtel and Thea Talbot. Although this director, of course, realized that 'names' give added prestige to a picture, it was not for their reputation alone that the selection was made.

"While writing his photoplays he has a habit of visualizing some particular actor or actress in the role of each character he creates, making a note of their names on the manuscript, with the result that, when the story is finished, he has a tentative cast already chosen.

"In 'Ashes of Love' he has evolved another powerfully dramatic story, with finely developed characters, and his visualization of artists possessing the ability necessary for their proper interpretation naturally took him into the upper strata of the profession."

"When Men Betray" stars Gail Kane, with a supporting cast that includes Robert Elliot, Stuart Holmes, Jack McLean, Sally Crute, Reed Hamilton, Dora Mills Adams, Gertrude Braun, Tallulah Bankhead, Hazel Washburn and Juliet Moore.

Mr. Abramson's latest Graphic production is "The Echo of Youth," which features Charles Richman, Leah Baird and Pearl Shepard, supported by Marie Shotwell, Jack McLean, Peggy Shanor and William Bechtel.

Sells Spanuth's Vod-a-vils

It was announced in New York this week that the Superior Film Exchange, Inc., the Exhibitors' Co-operative Exchange, have purchased the rights to "Spanuth's Original Vod-a-Vil Movies" for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey. They will be released one each week, the first release being March 1.

Kay Laurell, Star of the Goldwyn Production, "The Brand"

Ralph Ince Returns to Vitagraph

Among the interesting events of the week is the announcement by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, of the return of Ralph Ince to that company as a director. Mr. Ince, after an absence of a couple of years spent in independent directorial essays, has been re-engaged to direct Gladys Leslie. He will assume artistic suzerainty over the glad some little screen personality on completion of the Leslie picture now being finished, "Miss Dulcine from Dixie."

Coupled with the announcement of Ralph Ince's resumption of Vitagraph relations comes another important piece of news. "A Stitch in Time," one of the comedy drama hits of the past season in New York, where it ran at the Fulton Theatre for thirteen weeks in spite of the pressure of multitudinous productions which had opened on the road and commuted between outlying towns and cities waiting for waning business to dislodge a current Broadway show in their favor, has been secured by Vitagraph for Miss Leslie's Star Series and will be produced under the direction of Ralph Ince. Irene Fenwick interpreted the leading role during the Fulton run.

Striking Cut-Out Made to Advertise Houdini

A cut-out of unusually attractive advertising qualities has been prepared by Octagon Films, Inc., as one of the many aids available to exhibitors to exploit Houdini, the handcuff king, in B. A. Rolfe's fifteen-episode super serial, "The Master Mystery."

Standing over five feet high with easel and hand-painted in seven colors, the cut-out pictures the giant Automaton, the "heavy" in the story, assuming a threatening attitude over a striking facial likeness of Houdini. The composition, together with the judicious use of colors, makes the cut-out a piece of advertising that cannot fail to arrest the attention of passersby.

Some of the other unique advertising novelties issued on behalf of the exhibitors' advertising campaigns are a puzzle booklet and an invisible ink herald.

Earles Will Direct Next C. K. Young Picture

Harry Garson has engaged William P. S. Earle and his brother Ferdinand Pinney Earle to direct the next Clara Kimball Young picture at the Brunton Studios.

The story is called "The Love Quest," from the pen of the prolific Monte M. Katterjohn, and promises to be as subtle and absorbing as his "Flame of the Yukon," "Carmen of the Klondike" and his other creations.

The Earle brothers are well known in film circles. William P. S., as he is commonly known among his associates, has to his credit such successes as "Within the Law," "Womanhood," "His Own People," "The Courage of Silence," "The Law Decides," "Mary Jane's Pa," etc.

At the Left Is Norma Talmadge, Select Star, in "The Probation Wife," and At the Right Is Her Sister, Constance, in "Romance and Arabella"

"Teaser" Ads for New Frederick Picture

Goldwyn has prepared many "teaser" advertising suggestions for their first Pauline Frederick picture, "The Woman on The Index." This is the production from the stage success by Lillian Trimble Bradley and George Broadhurst, released February 23, and Goldwyn declares that an atmosphere of mystery will be created in almost every city and town in which it is presented.

To create the mystery effect Goldwyn has designed special "teaser" advertisements, which show a score of hands pointing to a large head of Pauline Frederick. A question mark appears directly over the head and at the bottom of the layout appears a hand-lettered catchline which reads: "Who Is This Woman?"

Lytell Finishing Picture

"The Blind Man's Eyes," starring Bert Lytell, is nearly completed, according to information received from the Metro studios at Hollywood.

In this production, which follows Lytell's "The Spender," "Faith" and "Hitting the High Spots," the young star is directed by John Ince, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

June Mathis made the screen adaptation of "The Blind Man's Eyes" from the novel by William McHarg and Edwin Balmer.

Rosson Added to Fox Directorial Staff

Art Rosson, prominently known in directorial circles, has been added to William Fox's staff of directors on the Coast. Mr. Rosson's first production will be one in which Albert Ray, the new Fox star, is featured. Mr. Rosson has begun work on this production, the working title of which is "Up Against It." Following the completion of Mr. Ray's first Fox picture, Director Rosson will alternate with Director Edward J. Le Saint, directing Tom Mix.

New England Experiences Full Select Week

THE week of February 9 to 15 was celebrated as "Select Week" throughout New England, and the big stunt was put over by Charles R. Rogers, Select Pictures Corporation's New England manager, who has charge of the territory comprising the eastern half of Connecticut and the States of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, Maine and New Hampshire. In all the New England "key cities" Select Pictures received a one hundred per cent showing, while scores of small cities and towns fell into line and ran Select Pictures for four, five and even seven days.

The biggest showing naturally took place in and around Boston, although Select stars were also well represented in Providence, Worcester, Salem, Lynn, Springfield, Portland, Pawtucket, Woonsocket, Manchester, Waltham, Lawrence, New London, Norwich and many other of the metropolitan centers.

Included in the "Select celebration" were all of the well-known S. P. stars—Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady, Marion Davies and Mitchell Lewis. Select's five big specials also came in for a full representation, "The One Woman," "The Midnight Patrol," "The Hidden Truth," "The Cavell Case" and "Ruling Passions," all showing sharp competition for first honors.

The "big week" was the culmination of a three-week campaign by Manager Rogers and his salesmen, and at the last minute it was found that bookings on some of the attractions had run so heavy that it would be necessary to borrow prints from other exchanges. Especially was this true on "The One Woman," for which special prints had to be rushed from the New York Exchange to accommodate the first run houses in Springfield and Worcester.

"Common Cause" Increases Theatre Crowds

"THE COMMON CAUSE," J. Stuart Blackton's photodrama of the day which is being released through Vitagraph, is said to have visibly increased the patronage of picture theatres. A striking psychological fact just uncovered in connection with the showing of this picture throughout the country establishes that the cast of stage celebrities which enacts part of this play has attracted to the picture theatres a certain aloof element of theatre-goers who have maintained an exclusive interest in the so-called legitimate drama.

Followers of Julia Arthur, who for the most part represent the theatre-goers of a passing generation—a class that has clung tenaciously to the habits formed in days antedating the vogue of pictures—have in instances gazed for the first time with serious interest on a photoplay to see the favorite who, because of the scarcity of her present-day stage appearance and her retirement from "the road," is no longer accessible to them in the frame of the speaking stage.

A considerable stock following, who have been Effie Shannon fans from the day that they saw her in "knickers or pinafores," would not miss a performance with Effie Shannon in the cast, be it on stage or screen, and here a quota of new fans have been won for the screen.

Others who have not usually attended pictures have been swung into line by the appearance of Marjorie Rambeau, Violet Heming and Irene Castle in "The Common Cause."

Engages Gertrude Selby

The Macdon Pictures Corporation announces that it has signed Gertrude Selby star of Fox-Sunshine Comedies, L-KO, and Sennett Comedies for a series of eighteen pictures a year which are expected to start at once at a local studio which the company has leased. Frank P. Donovan will direct the pictures and William B. MacNulty will have charge of productions, it is stated.

Warwick to Return to Screen

Captain Robert Warwick, Back from France, Planning to Return to Screen—Recites Experiences

CAPTAIN ROBERT WARWICK is back after seventeen months in the service of Uncle Sam, with two gold stripes on his sleeve, two silver bars on his shoulders, the cap that signifies overseas duty, and a record to which he, his country and especially the screen profession may look with pride. He doesn't say what he did, but expresses regret for not having had the opportunity to do more. He has done his duty. Now he is prepared to take up his work under the calciums, where he left it, seventeen months ago, and, according to his announcement, he will be prepared to make known his plans within a few weeks. He is considering four or five offers from our biggest producers, but he emphatically denies the rumor current that he has signed with William Fox.

After spending three months in officers' training camp in Plattsburgh, Captain Warwick left for France January 22, 1918; returned just one year later, January 22, 1919. He first saw duty in the trenches in France with the 26th Infantry, at Rambucourt, the Toul sector. He was with the First Division when it went into action at the battle of Chantigne and was with the 10th French Army north of Soissons in the Chemin des Dames sector. He was the first American officer in Strassbourg after the signing of the armistice; was aboard a convoy, just astern of the Tuscania, when she was sunk, February 6, 1918, and had the honor of being military aide-de-camp to Lord Reading and Thomas Nelson Page, American Ambassador to Italy, when these two visited the American front near Juvijay. When Marshal Foch reviewed the gallant 20th Division of the French Army after these veterans returned from the firing line, Captain Warwick was one of the few American officers in the citadel at Strassbourg, from which place of vantage the troops passed the French commander in review.

These are a few of the "incidents" which the screen star mentioned as forming part of his duty to Uncle Sam across the seas.

Captain Warwick is the only male star on the screen who served his country in France. He gave up a most lucrative profession to do his duty, and he is glad and proud of the fact. He added, after he had spoken of his experiences in France, that he knew of no better argument or no better incentive to instill in the minds of Americans the necessity of compulsory military training for young Americans than service in Uncle Sam's army. He wouldn't have missed his few months in the service for "the world," as he expressed it, and said that these experiences would do more than any other medium toward assisting him in making his work before the camera better and more artistic than ever.

Captain Warwick brought with him a German officer's helmet as a souvenir. It is finished in solid silver plate and bears the initials, "L. M. H.," and belonged to a brigadier-general in the German army. He found the helmet in an abandoned German headquarters. He also has a revolver which, of German make, he found in a dugout.

While in France Captain Warwick supervised the production of "America's Answer," the Government picture which attracted so much attention on this side because of its realism and stirring battle scenes. Captain Warwick brought the picture to America on its completion, and when it opened in New York he gave an address on the dangers encountered by the Government photographers in getting the scenes of actual battle.

Captain Warwick did his duty, is proud of it, and his country is proud of him. He is now prepared to take up his screen work, and expects to announce within the next week his plans. He said he had received two or three offers to go on the stage, but insists that his time will be devoted exclusively to the screen. Here's success, Captain Robert!

World Gets "Glories of the Sea"

World Pictures announce that the Peerless Company is making a super picture which will be released by the World entitled "Glories of the Sea," the exteriors of which are to be made in Boston and Cuba. It will be in seven reels and will require about eight weeks to make it. An "all star" cast including Montagu Love, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley, Carlyle Blackwell, Johnny Hines, Madge Evans and Jack Drummer will play the principal parts. This will be the first picture especially made for the World by the Peerless Company under the agreement recently made whereby Peerless Company will make six pictures a year to be distributed by the World.

Laemmle Uses Critics' Comments for Film

Believing that "The Heart of Humanity" was a rare, appealing, intensely interesting drama, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, recently issued orders to the Universal advertising and publicity departments that the opinions of critics and other reviewers be used exclusively in boosting the Holubar super-film.

Mr. Laemmle urged the management of the Broadway, theatre, New York, and other exhibitors to use the opinions of local reviewers in advertising the production. Though confidence in the picture was never lacking among the members of the advertising or publicity forces at Universal, it was expected that they would experience considerable difficulty in getting the opinions of various reviewers, but in this they were very much mistaken.

Not only have thousands of letters praising the picture poured into the Universal offices from theatre patrons and newspaper critics, but leading Government officials, rival producers, writers, artists, clergymen, lawyers, statesmen and other men and women internationally known have indorsed the film voluntarily.

Secretary of War Baker saw "The Heart of Humanity" recently in Washington, and after giving the newspaper men of the city his opinion of the film, lavishing praise upon it, he added: "It is truly a wonderful production."

Carter De Haven Writes

Carter De Haven has written his first story to be produced by the National Film Corporation for release by Exhibitors' Mutual, and is now whipping it into shape preparatory to visualizing it. The energetic Carter is going to direct himself and wife, Flora Parker De Haven, and incidentally the cherubic De Haven children, in the breezy stories for which he is best known. Bob McGowan will assist Mr. De Haven in the production of his stories.

Essanay Chaplins Book Rapidly

General Film announced this week that something of a stir was caused in New York motion picture circles during the last week when a most tremendous demand was revealed for a new series of the earlier Charlie Chaplin comedies. A remarkable group of booking has been obtained for the latest revivals of the Essanay "Big Four" Chaplins just now brought to market through General Film Company.

To begin with a stir was made by an announcement that "Shanghaied," "A Night in the Show," "The Bank," and "Police" had been signed up for the Rialto by Managing Director Hugo Riesenfeld. At these foremost Broadway houses these comedies are said to be the first so-called "re-issues" ever adopted. Furthermore, Manager J. A. Hammell, of the New York General Film Exchange, states he is informed that, beginning with these Chaplins, the Riesenfeld theatres may inaugurate a cycle of revived comedy classics of such subjects as are to be found by the director to be worthy of following the "Big Four" Chaplins.

Standard Slide Anticipates Expansion

Having satisfactorily arranged for the Eastern business to keep its New York plant operating at full capacity, the Standard Slide Corporation is contemplating opening a plant in the West. With this in view, the treasurer, Nat. C. Cherin, is now in the West looking over slide conditions in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and other points.

There have been so many inquiries and requests for Standard Slides from Western advertisers that the officials of the corporation feel confident that a Western office is necessary to take care of this business.

E. K. Lincoln in "Virtuous Men"

THE title of the first special Ralph Ince Film attraction starring E. K. Lincoln, and issued under the brand of S-L Pictures, will be "Virtuous Men," according to an announcement made by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin.

In speaking of the unusual name finally selected for the initial "Ralph Ince Film Attraction" Herbert Lubin had the following to say:

"Many superior productions of the present day have failed to attract the patronage they deserve because of the weakness of their titles. We feel that in giving the title 'Virtuous Men' to the first S-L production we have helped the exhibitor immensely by providing a name that will arouse widespread discussion and comment, and attract the attention of all.

"'Virtuous Men' possesses unusual advertising possibilities for the showman. It will stand out with peculiar appeal either in electric lights or on posters. From all angles of consideration, it gives the exhibitor the necessary commercial value which many splendid productions oftentimes lack. After the picture has been presented in the various first class houses of this country motion picture patrons will appreciate the suitability of the title.

ciate the suitability of the title.

"The story, a society melodrama teeming with action, contains innumerable spectacular scenes laid in the great lumber forests of the Northwest.

"A tremendous forest fire, in which the torch was actually laid by Director Ralph Ince to an enormous tract of land embracing hundreds of huge trees, required Lincoln in the role of the hero to lead a brigade of fire fighters against the flaming forest.

"The star of 'Virtuous Men' declined with thanks an offer to have one of the seasoned lumberjacks 'double' in this work for him," continued Mr. Lubin. "In company with Danny Hayes, who interprets the role of 'Hick Hogan' and a band of real lumberjacks, Lincoln led the attack on the burning forest, working steadily for several hours, while a battery of six cameras secured the realistic scenes from as many different angles.

"While enacting these scenes under the direction of Ralph Ince, the leading figure of the initial Ralph Ince Film Attraction was in constant danger from the fast moving flames, enduring a heat which severely scorched many of the lumber men. Lincoln himself suffered painful burns of the hands and arms and his eyebrows and hair were singed more than once."

Universal Issues New Reel on February 21

FRIDAY, February 21, has been set as the date for the issuance of Universal New Screen Magazine, No. 1, according to Jack Cohn, editor of the new weekly. The New Screen Magazine will be released weekly, and will be made up of a number of new and novel features each week. The reel takes on the appearance of a newspaper feature section, with the various features animated. Incidentally it may be interesting to add that the New Screen Magazine is to be presented in the leading cities of the country as the "cinema section" of the leading newspapers, and that the newspapers presenting the reel will give exhibitors unlimited co-operation.

The initial issue of the New Screen Magazine contains seven distinct subjects. The first of these deals with the psychology of footwear. The way a man's character may be discovered by studying his shoes is related by this film.

First pictures explaining the art of camouflaging ships and showing how certain camouflaged designs are found most practical comprise the second subject of the new weekly.

The third subject of the Magazine is provided by Mildred LeGue, celebrated dancer of the "Some Time" company. Miss LeGue demonstrates the art of making up and does a few new steps for the camera for the first time.

Laughographs from the leading newspapers of the country make up the fourth subject of the new magazine; scenes taken in the Maine woods and showing the making of maple sugar from the sap and the manner in which the sap is obtained, a trick of the camera 'showing one good reason for not "crying over spilled milk" and the "Whoozit Weekly," drawn by Leslie Elton, follow.

Doll-Van Gets Tom Mix Reissued Series

The Doll-Van Company, operating on the independent distributing market, in the Indiana and Illinois territory, with offices in Chicago, have secured the exclusive rights for its territory to the series of Exclusive Features Tom Mix two-reel Western re-issues. The Tom Mix re-issues are creating a big demand throughout the country, according to reports received by the Exclusive Features and Doll-Van Company report that it expects good bookings on the series, the first of which will be released March 1.

Gertrude Berkley, whose portrayal of the mother role in "War Brides" was one of the features of this screen offering, has the mother role in B. S. Moss's production of "Break the News to Mother," now nearing completion under the direction of Julius Steger with Pearl Shepard in the featured role. William Bailey, who was prominently cast in "War Brides," has the heavy role in Mr. Moss's production. "Break the News to Mother" is announced for release the second week in March.

Vitagraph Says Stunts Are Not Made—They Are Remade. This One Shows Bill Duncan, Serial Star, Rehearsing a Stunt of Leaping from the Ground to Saddle, As the Steed Gallops By "Silent Strength" Is Well Thought of in Vitagraph Offices—Is Said to Be Powerful and Poignant

Predicts Record on Morey Film

A NEW Morey record means much as a matter of achievement to the sales forces of Vitagraph. Such a record is predicted in regard to "Silent Strength," Vitagraph's imminent Morey release. Much has been said and written about the controversion of all established rules of double-exposure, an unprecedented technical feat which is accomplished in "Silent Strength," and this undoubtedly has something to do with the flood of inquiries and advance bookings which have been flowing in steadily increasing volume into home and branch offices of that company.

Vitagraph points out, however, that the technical novelty of "Silent Strength" is but an incident; the big success of the drama will result from the power and poignancy of it as a whole. Harry T. Morey is said to have a role surpassing all his past characterizations in the demands it makes on his talents. It is a characterization that abounds in subtle touches, yet breathes of the virility of true manhood.

The plot revolves about a woman's unwitting error in marrying a man who resembled her betrothed, and of the latter's self-abnegation in the face of the impending pain a revelation of the true state of affairs would cause the woman. The depth of his love is made apparent when he shoulders the blame of his double to spare her the shame of seeing her husband dragged away a common criminal. How the beneficiary of the cheated man's generosity and nobility overreaches himself and pays the price of his sinfulness forms a climax of breathless interest.

"Silent Strength" is to be seen on the screens beginning February 17. It was directed by Paul Scardon, and in support of Mr. Morey are seen Betty Blythe, Robert Gaillard, Bernard Siegel, Herbert Pattee, James Costello and others.

"For Better, For Worse" by Cecil De Mille

THE theme and title of Cecil De Mille's next Artcraft production is now announced, and the work is well under way at the Lasky Hollywood studio.

"For Better, For Worse," is the title, the story having been written by Edgar Selwyn and scenarioized by William C. De Mille. Alvin Wyckoff is the photographer. As the title suggests, the play hinges upon a marriage, but the picture is not a discussion of marriage problems, it being totally different in this respect from Mr. De Mille's previous production, "Don't Change Your Husband."

The problems arising from marriage as an institution not touched upon at all in the play.

Most of the action in "For Better, For Worse," takes place after the war, and it is therefore heralded as vitally modern, touching upon many of the topics now current in discussion. Although the introductory portion of the drama takes place in America during war times, Mr. De Mille states emphatically that it is not a war play, has nothing to do with war, and deals instead with the actual present.

"It isn't in any sense a problem play," said Mr. De Mille. "It proves nothing, it doesn't attempt to instruct or convince. It is a tremendous drama, narrating the struggles of human beings in their attempts to make the proper adjustment to the situations in which they find themselves. Mr. Selwyn's story is real, it is human.

"I think that it is dramatically the biggest subject I have ever handled. The situations are so unusual, yet so possible and logical, that I am positive it will excel in sheer dramatic value any picture I have ever made."

"A Taste of Life" Is Next Edith Roberts

Universal has given the permanent title of "A Taste of Life" to the next feature starring Edith Roberts. This is said to be based on one of the last stories written by Paul West, who recently died in Paris. The story was entitled "When Cherries Are Ripe."

Jack Dillon produced the film, and it will be released by Universal on March 3.

Extended Bookings Requested on "Mrs. Wiggs"

As a result of several advance showings, held in some of the larger cities of the United States, numerous requests for extended bookings of Marguerite Clark's new Paramount picture, "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch," which is released February 9, have already been received, according to Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In a letter to the exchange managers, Mr. Lichtman calls their attention to this fact and advises them to give every attention to such requests and to put in early requisitions for extra prints when needed.

Only Two Eliminations

The National Juvenile Motion Picture League of New York City has endorsed the Paramount feature, "His Parisian Wife," with two eliminations, as being suitable for young people and adults. In commenting upon the picture, the League said: "It treats a theme of adult life with honesty of purpose and avoids sensationalism and over-acting."

Miss Thomas' Debut in Snappy Comedy

"Upstairs and Down," in which Olive Thomas will make her debut in Selznick Pictures under the management of Myron Selznick, is a snappy comedy-drama of New York's smart set. It was a sensation in its original stage form when produced by Oliver Morosco and under the direction of Charles Giblyn, and promises to be even more exciting as a picture.

Miss Thomas will play the part of Alice Chesterton, whose irresistible desire to flirt causes all the trouble.

In support of Miss Thomas will be Robert Ellis, Rosemary Theby, Mary Charleston, David Butler, Bertram Grassby, Kathleen Kirkham, Donald MacDonald, Miss Travers, Andrew Robeson, Mildred Rendon, Harold Miller and Ernest Pasque.

S-L Pictures Cites the E. K. Lincoln Cast

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin of S-L Pictures take particular pride in the extreme care exercised in regard to selecting director, star, author and story after several weeks of careful study, and now call attention to their selection of a suitable cast to support E. K. Lincoln.

They say that Grace Darling, selected for the ingenue lead, is internationally famous as a screen beauty, while Clara Joel, who will appear in the leading feminine "heavy" role, is conceded to be a real star of the legitimate stage.

She has been seen more recently as the "baby vamp" in the Broadway success, "Business Before Pleasure," where she is reported to have scored a distinct personal triumph.

William B. Mack, known for his characterizations in support of Mrs. Fiske for many years, has been cast in a role perfectly suited to his type and abilities.

Robert W. Cummings, another star of the Broadway stage, was especially chosen to interpret the leading heavy male part. Well known alike on stage and screen, John P. Wade will be seen in a character befitting his dignity and acting ability.

Two Stars Praised in "Reclaimed"

Harry McRae Webster, producer of "Reclaimed," reports that the press comments on the work of Mabel Juliene Scott and Niles Welch, the two stars in the production, are very laudatory and states that they are their best.

The present finished state of "Reclaimed" is declared to have won universal approval, and Mr. Webster promises that it will be a surprise to everyone.

Much preliminary work is said to have been done on the production and an extensive advertising campaign is reported as progressing excellently in the trade papers and on the billboards.

The supporting cast is pronounced most excellent, also the lighting and photography.

"Humanity" Gets Changed Title

Story of Film Supplied by C. R. Macauley from League of Nations
Idea—New Title Chosen for Picture

IT was announced this week by the C. R. Macauley Photoplays, Inc., that the special film production that has been under way under the working title of "Humanity," and news of which has been withheld for two years, has been completed.

The story of the film was written by C. R. Macauley, in collaboration with a number of prominent personalities, the theme of it being President Wilson's ideas for a permanent League of Nations.

Seven months were spent in devising the story, entailing twenty trips to Washington for research purposes, continued conferences with men close to the President, who were aware of Mr. Wilson's ideals, and who were certain that the war would be fought until these ideals could be achieved.

The new title chosen for the picture is "Whom the Gods Would Destroy." The title was selected after the conference in New York of the delegates of the International Organization of the various Leagues of the Nations, and Leagues to enforce peace, last week. "Whom the Gods

Would Destroy," approximately seven reels in length, was produced at Universal City, California, under the personal supervision of William Sellers, formerly Supervisor of the Triangle Studios, with Frank Borzagi in charge of direction. Borzagi was formerly a Griffith director at Triangle.

There are eighteen principal characters in the story, with Jack Mulhall and Pauline Stark playing the juvenile ingenue roles, and supported by prominent players.

Through arrangements with various peace organizations, and organizations supporting President Wilson's great League of Nations ideas, arrangements are going forward for the simultaneous exhibition of this picture in New York, Paris, London, Rome, Sidney, Buenos Aires, Rio de Janeiro, and other world capitals. The entire handling of the picture has been placed under the direction of Harry Reichenbach, who has already arranged a campaign even more ambitious and far reaching than that which characterized his efforts with "Tarzan of the Apes."

Mr. Reichenbach is completing arrangements now for page after page of co-operative text in the daily papers throughout the United States, and a gigantic campaign of unusual attractiveness direct to the exhibitor.

"Under Four Flags" Reports Big Bookings

MOST favorable reports of the further success being established by the Government's Victory picture, "Under Four Flags," are reaching the offices of the Division of Films from the World Film exchanges all over the country. In the many territories where the picture has been shown the reports tell of openings in which house records were broken and unusual enthusiasm displayed by the patrons. In those sections of the country where the picture has not yet opened the reports are that bookings are being made in excess of the remarkable record made by "America's Answer."

In the Southern territory the bookings are unusually heavy and the picture has already been exhibited in many of the principal houses. The Atlanta exchange of the World Film reports new box office records have marked the showing of the picture in a large number of the houses. At the Strand in Knoxville, where it was shown for a week, "Under Four Flags" not only broke the house record but it drew such crowds that it was necessary for the management to give extra performances. Similar circumstances attended the showing at the Alcazar in Chattanooga and at the Air-drome in Miami.

In the territory around Boston the picture is being successfully shown over all the big circuits, playing a week at the Strand in Providence to tremendous business and three days at the Majestic in Pittsfield to a new record for the house.

Similar results have been obtained in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia through the Pittsburgh exchange and in Ohio through the Cincinnati exchange. In the Western districts bookings are reported to be heavy through Utah, Oregon, Oklahoma, Nebraska, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Minnesota and Montana.

Fox Plans for Bigger and Better Comedies

JACK BLYSTONE and Fred Fishback, two well-known comedy directors, have been engaged by William Fox to produce Sunshine Comedies. It is Mr. Fox's plan to make bigger and faster Sunshine Comedies, and with this in view Messrs. Blystone and Fishback have been engaged. They commenced work this week on the first two productions under their direction. Mr. Blystone is now engaged in directing "Virtuous Husband," said to contain more plot and more laugh-making gags than anything ever attempted in Sunshine Comedies. Show lions and other animals will be one of the features of this production.

Fifty carpenters and a force of electricians and other workmen have been engaged in erecting sets for the new Sunshine production, which Fred Fishback will direct. The title has been announced, but it is said that Director Fishback has a number of surprises in store for Sunshine fans. Director Fishback starts this week on production.

Paris Latin Quarter

Glimpses of Bohemian life in the artists' studios of the Latin quarter in Paris will be given in the new Metro production starring dainty Viola Dana.

Lasky Turns to Magazine Field

Adaptations from Popular Stories Proved Successful Venture of Famous Players-Lasky Scenario Department

AFTER practical tests and careful investigation and comparisons, by the Famous Players-Lasky scenario department on the value of photodramatic productions the scenarios for which have been written from popular stories or serials appearing in current magazines, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has concluded that this feature of Famous Players-Lasky production activities, is to be an established policy of this organization and after stating that no less than sixteen productions of Famous Players-Lasky either released or in the course of production, represent screen versions of popular short stories or serials running in magazines, Mr. Lasky tells why this policy will be established.

"Our scenario department has been so systematized under the efficient leadership of Mr. MacAlarney, our scenario editor, that all of the important magazines published are gone over by his staff of expert assistants and available material is chosen. Motion picture 'fans' often write in recommending this or that story. In this way we determine the value of a story.

"Among recent pronounced successes of such adaptations of magazine fiction I cite as examples Wallace Reid's last two Paramount pictures, 'Too Many Millions,' adapted by Gardner Hunting from Porter Emerson Browne's Saturday Evening Post story, 'Someone and Somebody,' and 'The Dub,' adapted by Will M. Ritchey from the story by Edgar Franklin which ran in All-Story Magazine; Bryant Washburn's 'The Way of a Man with a Maid,' Ida M. Evans' Saturday Evening Post story which Edith M. Kennedy scenarized, and the same Paramount star's 'Venus in the East,' which Wallace Irwin contributed to the same periodical and which Gardner Hunting adapted; also Dorothy Gish's Paramount picture, 'The Hope Chest,' which M. M. Stearns adapted from Mark Lee Luther's story which first ran serially in Woman's Home Companion.

"Elsie Ferguson's Artcraft picture, 'The Marriage Price,' tentatively scheduled for March release, is an adaptation by Eve Unsell of Griswold Wheeler's 'For Sale,' which appeared in Saucy Stories, and the same star has just finished the production of 'Eyes of the Soul,' which George Weston wrote for the Saturday Evening Post under the title, 'The Salt of the Earth,' and which Miss Unsell also scenarized. Shirley Mason will be seen this month in 'The Winning Girl,' Will M. Ritchey's screen version of George Weston's Post story, 'Jem of the Old Rock,' and she is now at work in an adaptation for Paramount of Royal Brown's 'The Final Close-up,' which ran in the Red Book. Ethel Clayton has two Paramount pictures scheduled for early release, one of which is 'Pettigrew's Girl,' Will Ritchey's screen version of Dana Burnett's Post story, 'Private Pettigrew's Girl,' and Marion Fairfax's Paramount adaptation of Carolyn Wells' 'Vicky Van,' which first ran serially in Argosy.

"Wallace Reid will soon be seen in 'Alias Mike Moran,' which Will M. Ritchey adapted from Frederick Orin Bartlett's 'Open Sesame,' which ran in the Saturday Evening Post, and is now making for Paramount 'The Roaring Road,' one of the Post's popular 'Junkpile Handicap Stories' by Byron Morgan.

"In March or April Vivian Martin will appear in 'Little Comrade,' which Alice Eytan adapted for Paramount from Juliet Wilbor Tompkins' story, 'Two Benjamins,' which ran in McCall's, while Dorothy Gish is now making for Paramount 'You Can't Just Wait,' which Oscar Graeve contributed to Collier's. And we must not forget that 'The False Faces,' Louis Joseph Vance's great story which Thomas H. Ince has made into a Paramount-Artcraft Special with Henry B. Walthall featured, attracted the attention of millions of readers while running serially in the Saturday Evening Post.

"We have many other fine magazine stories already tentatively assigned and awaiting their turn in the line of production, as well as numerous novels and a large number of the most successful of recent stage plays, an announcement of which was made a short time ago. The tremendous advertising value which these widely read stories have received in advance must not be overlooked, for what person, among the millions who attend the picture theatres, would not like to see a story he has read and liked or heard about, even, would not wish to see it on the screen?

"But do not overlook the fact," concluded Mr. Lasky, "that we are at the same time giving the most careful consideration to original scripts submitted to us and we are doing everything we can to encourage writing for the screen."

Ford Educational Approved by Exhibitors

EXPRESSIONS of approval from both the big and small exhibitors throughout the country are reaching Goldwyn Pictures, testifying to the success with which the Ford Educational Weekly is meeting in the theatre. Goldwyn reports that during the past several weeks the circulation of this weekly has increased with long strides, and without exception the exhibitors who have booked these weekly subjects have reported the utmost satisfaction.

Differing in a measure in their opinions on the general value of these subjects, they are all unanimous in agreeing that the Ford Educational Weekly has filled a gap heretofore left vacant by producers. A few of the testimonials from exhibitors on these subjects follow:

Bernard Depkin, managing director of the Parkway, Wizard and Peabody theatres, Baltimore, writes: "No one can announce or advertise it in competition with any other feature that matches it. It finds the drama and the human interest in many of the overlooked things in American life."

"It is a dramatic news reel that makes no pretension to being a current events weekly," says Frank Buehler, managing director of the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia.

"Both of these men are right and wrong," says Aaron J. Jones, head of the Jones, Linick and Schaefer organization of Chicago, who heard their comments. "The Ford Educational Weekly is the great teacher of the screen, yet it teaches without ever letting the audiences realize they are being taught."

"The Ford Educational Weekly is the best short feature that forms a part of my regular program," says Managing Director F. A. Miller, of the new California Theatre, Los Angeles.

"Henry Ford and Goldwyn should receive full support from the exhibitors of the nation," writes H. F. Boatright, proprietor of the Glidden Theatre, Tabor, Iowa.

R. V. Anderson Joins the International Staff

General News Manager E. B. Hatrick of the three International News releases, has engaged R. V. Anderson, who comes to New York from Atlanta and was branch manager at one time for the General Film Co. there, and more lately branch manager for Pathe.

One of Mr. Anderson's first moves was to begin the publication of a bright little house organ called "The International."

Clara Kimball Young in "The Better Wife"

According to word received from the Harry Garson offices, Clara Kimball Young has already started her first new production to be released otherwise than through Select.

"The Better Wife" is the title, and Mr. Garson has surrounded Miss Young with a cast which he claims is actually "All Star."

In her support for the new production are Nigel Barrie, Lewis Cody, Anna Q. Nielson, little Bennie Alexander, E. M. Kimball, Barbara Tennant, Leoni Childers and Katherine Williams.

The action in "The Better Wife" takes place among the smart watering places of England, and it is said to be a powerful story, eminently fitting for the talents of Clara Kimball Young.

H. K. Sonborn has just arrived in New York City from Los Angeles with the prints of "The Unpardonable Sin," the big ten-reel production made by Garson and Neilan, and starring Blanche Sweet.

The New York offices of Harry Garson, in charge of W. H. Rudolph, are very busy in consequence. The Sweet production will soon receive its New York premiere, and is assured of a long run at one of the leading Broadway playhouses, according to report.

Three Ince Stars Busy at New Studio

Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray and Enid Bennett are busy at the new Thomas H. Ince studio. The monster stages are all filled with new sets and photoplay production in the new studio is said to be progressing with all the smoothness typical of a new machine.

Under the direction of Victor L. Schertzinger, Dorothy Dalton is working on a story under the working title "Miss Marbury and Others," written by John Lynch and placed into continuity by R. Cecil Smith.

It is a comedy drama in which Miss Dalton appears as a feminine "Knight of the Grip." She has been surrounded by a cast including Douglas MacLean, Edwin Stevens, Beverly Travis, Millie McConnell, Frank Leigh and Nora Johnston.

Universal Looks After the Cuts

Universal publicity department has had made a new series of star cuts, for use by editors.

Learning that editors complained about using star cuts that had art work on them, the Universal publicity department about three months ago sent to all publicity departments of Universal exchanges for distribution among editors, special, plain screen cuts of all Universal stars. Universal has sent to all its branch publicity men a series of stippled sketches of all stars. These sketches have been made on pebbled paper, which gives them a surface suitable for great reduction in cut-making, and as cuts a sharp enough stipple to print clearly in any newspaper or magazine.

Arrow Puts Reissues Over to Success

Although re-issued one and two-reel productions have proven their popularity, it remained for the Arrow Film Corporation to go one step further and establish the demand for a serial of strength, even though it be also a re-issued production.

When all of the prints of "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" were withdrawn from the market, Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of the Arrow Film Corporation, suggested to his associates that concentrating the dramatic action of the original serial which was first released in forty reels to a serial of twenty reels or ten episodes would provide the theatres throughout the country with a popular serial at a figure that would guarantee a profit not alone to the exchange handling the production but to the theatres running it.

The release date of the first episode of "The Demon's Shadow" is March 1, and a three weeks preliminary campaign of exploitation is being conducted by each exchange handling the attraction by way of the distribution of advertising matter among all of the theatres in their territory.

Four Fox Companies Working in Florida

With three companies now working in Florida on exteriors, William Fox has sent the fourth company to this section of the Sunny South. Evelyn Nesbit and her company, under the direction of Kenean Buel, left this week for Florida to complete her sixth picture under the direction of Mr. Buel. The picture is temporarily titled "Love Redeemed." Sidney Mason, Al Miles, Ed Becker, Margaret Clancy, assistant director, John W. Kellette and Lyster Chambers accompanied the party.

What Could Be Sweeter?

"What Could Be Sweeter?" is the title of the first comedy to be made by Carter De Haven and his wife, Flora Parker De Haven not forgetting the De Haven kiddies), under their recent contract with the National Film Corporation, whereby their productions will be released through Exhibitors' Manual.

Frances Marion Back With Us

Mary Pickford's Former Scenario Writer Returns After Duty in France—Will Write for Paramount Stars

BACK from France and—looking as natty in her uniform as any of our heroes from the Chateau-Thierry conflict; as modest in relating her experiences as only a real hero can be; and, best of all, so buoyant and delighted because of the opportunity given her to do something to help the American boys in their rout of the Hun, Frances Marion, one of the screen's most accomplished writers and one who has done more than any other one scenario writer to raise the standard of the silent drama and place it in the inner circle of the many that make for real art in entertainment, is with us again after four months' absence in France and England, prepared with that mighty weapon, "broader vision," to set down to her type-writer and give to the screen bigger, better and more finished drama than ever. And if you will remember some of the works that Miss Marion has given to the screen you will appreciate the strength of this statement, for no better screen drama was ever furnished the public through the medium of the greatest single entertaining feature of American life, the photoplay, than that which found its inception in the prolific and fertile brain of this little girl, who, when her country needed her, counted her own work, her own material benefit, her own self as a minus quantity, and gave her every effort to Uncle Sam. She's real—this little girl, and the more you see of her work, of herself and of her wonderful conception of what is entertainment and what isn't, the more you will concur in the opinion, not alone of the writer but of the motion picture world, that has testified by its unconscious submission to her ability to give them what they want on the screen, that she is really a clever girl and a talented artist.

Before leaving for France Miss Marion was scenario writer and editor for Mary Pickford, having given to the screen such works as "Stella Maris," pronounced by the critics the best work in which Miss Pickford ever appeared; "Johanna Enlists" is another of the big successes written by Miss Marion for Miss Pickford. "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and "The Little Princess" were prepared for the screen by Miss Marion as vehicles for Miss Pickford, both of which were big successes. Before this Miss Marion wrote numerous successes for different stars of filmland.

Miss Marion went to France as an official war correspondent for the Government. She was one of the limited number that was sent in this capacity. During part of her stay in France she was engaged with Wesley Ruggles, director, and Charles Thorpe, formerly cameraman for Douglas Fairbanks, in making a Government picture dealing with the activities of the American women in France. During the course of this work Miss Marion visited the most dangerous regions, going into the front line trenches, the base hospitals and on to the battlefields in quest of the real, worthwhile incidents that marked the wonderful, courageous work that was accomplished and is now being accomplished by our American women in France. And in recounting this work, Miss Marion gives due credit to Director Ruggles, who, she said, was largely instrumental in making this picture, not yet shown in America, a wonderful production.

Space will not allow us to recount the interesting experiences, adventures or what you will, related to a News representative by Miss Marion. As she expressed it, "only the actual experience, the physical presence, the seeing with your own eyes, can give one the exultant feeling expressed in the phrase, 'I'm proud I'm an American.'"

Miss Marion will remain in New York as special writer in the scenario department of Famous Players-Lasky. She will start work immediately on scripts for Billie Burke, Elsie Ferguson and Jack Barrymore. She says that she has wonderful ideas for stories and that she is going to put them on paper just as fast as the Underwood will do her work.

Incident to her work for the screen, Miss Marion will put the finishing touches to a novel on which she has been working and which will be published

Viola Dana Is Going Up in the World, Especially in Her Newest Metro Production Called "Satan Junior"

Wheels Buzzing at Estee Studio

Eugene Spitz, President and Owner, Filling Large Contract with Stage
Women's War Relief Fund

THE wheels of production are buzzing at Estee Studios, 561-62 West 125th street, since Eugene Spitz, president and owner of the studio, contracted to produce the series of sixteen two-reel productions for the Stage Women's War Relief Fund. This series when completed will be released on the Universal program and will embrace the work of the American stage's most noted artists. Every star on the American stage will be seen in one or more of these series, each and every one of which productions will be founded on dramatic pieces, written by well known authors.

A representative of the NEWS visited the studio last week while William Courtney and Jane Grey were working in "The Inner Circle," under the direction of George Terwilliger. Miss Grey and Mr. Courtney are two of our best known and most popular stars, having delighted the American audiences in both the speaking and silent drama. Both, however, are better known to the lovers of the spoken drama. Mr. Courtney is co-starring this season with Tom Wise in one of Broadway's biggest hits, "Cappy Ricks," and Jane Grey is with Leo Ditrichstein in "The Marquis of Priola," at the Liberty theatre. Miss Grey and Mr. Courtney are mentioned as two of the many noted stage stars who will be seen in this series produced by the Stage Women's War Relief Fund by Mr. Spitz at the Estee Studios.

Mr. Spitz has one of New York's best motion picture studios, modern in every way and equipped with the latest and most efficient accessories to the producing of pictures. For weeks the machinery of Mr. Spitz's studio has been running full blast and he states that since its opening less than a year ago, there has been very few days that there hasn't been activity. He expects to be occupied with production for the Stage Women's War Relief Fund for a good part of the winter and expresses every satisfaction with the success with which he has met in this branch of the industry.

United Moves Into the World Film Offices

ONE of the first and immediate results of the recently announced United Picture Theatres, Inc., agreement with World Film Company, set forth simultaneously by J. A. Berst and Ricord Gradwell for United and World respectively, was the appointment of Monday last, February 10th as moving day throughout the country for all United branch managers and sales forces and the transfer of United records, effects and business paraphernalia from the General Film offices which United Branch managers have hitherto made their local quarters under a co-operative and economic agreement, to the respective offices of World Film throughout the country, where a similar arrangement of office centralization will obtain.

United has always maintained most friendly relations with both General and World, and the switching of locale and exchanges, carried out with friendly assistance from both in no way changes the good feeling that exists between the three organizations immediately concerned.

Under the new United-World agreement the quarters of World in each city will constitute the branch offices of United managers and the respective World exchanges will act as the channel through which exhibitors will receive United product. World Film undertakes the physical distribution of this product and provides shipping, storing, inspecting, billing, collecting service and every other detail of an exchange, while United remains free to concentrate upon the further expansion of its rapidly increasing membership, the multiplying of its attractions and to pursue its policy of co-operative and profit-sharing arrangements which form the basis of its organization.

Barriscale Gets Another Norris Novel

Bessie Barriscale, starring in her own productions released through Exhibitors' Mutual, is to be a Kathleen Norris heroine again. Announcement is made that the B. B. Features have purchased the rights to Miss Norris's novel, "Jesselyn's Wife," which will be a future feature for Miss Barriscale.

This will be the star's second appearance as a Norris heroine, one of her biggest successes having been recorded not long ago in the "Heart of Rachel."

Maie B. Havey, head of the scenario department of B. B. Features, who adapted "A Trick of Fate," Miss Barriscale's second production on the Exhibitors' Mutual list, will prepare "Jesselyn's Wife" for the screen.

Director Howard Hickman of B. B. Features has chosen his technical staff, which will include Fred Crift, assistant director; Guy Wilkie, cameraman; George Nogle, assistant cameraman, and Clinton Newman, properties.

"Molly of the Follies" February 16

American Film Company announced that "Molly of the Follies," the fourth of the "Flying A" features, starring Margarita Fisher, was scheduled for release February 16, through Pathe exchanges.

"Molly of the Follies" is a comedy which is described as being considerably different from any subject Miss Fisher has attempted. She has been given a story that permits of her displaying all those distinctive characteristics that won for her thousands of admirers.

Edward Sloman is the director. Jack Mower plays the part opposite Miss Fisher.

Doris Kenyon Appears in "Twilight"

"Twilight" will be released February 23 and J. Searle Dawley, director, says that he considers it the most successful production made so far by Doris Kenyon, at the head of her own company. It is a story of the lumber camps.

Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., announces that the illustrated titles for "Twilight" have been made by a new process, and are in keeping with the ultra-artistic making of the picture throughout.

Poli Books "The Lion and the Mouse"

Vitagraph reports that the big circuits of the country are rapidly producing the "Super-Production" released February 24, "The Lion and The Mouse," starring Alice Joyce.

The Poli circuit of bookings alone will practically cover all of New England, and special advertising will be done on a large scale in behalf of this production. It is from Charles Klein's stage play of the same name, and Vitagraph considers that it is well and favorably known to everybody.

IT'S A LANDSLIDE!

The biggest-booking picture of last year was "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." We thought we could never equal it. But "The Heart of Humanity" is booking even faster and is making tremendous sums of money for exhibitors everywhere! It's a landslide!

SWEEPING NEW YORK SUCCESS

Paramount's Product in Three Broadway Houses

Three of the big houses on Broadway, the Rivoli, Strand and Rialto, opened last week each with a Paramount offering.

Cecil B. DeMille's Artcraft picture, "Don't Change Your Husband," at the Rialto; John Barrymore in the Paramount offering, "Here Comes the Bride," at the Strand, and William S. Hart in his latest Artcraft picture, "Breed of Men," at the Rivoli are the three. During the same week the Marcus Loew houses played "The Silver King" with William Faversham and "Under the Top" with Fred Stone.

"The Silver King" is William Faversham's first Paramount picture and it has received the approval of New York audiences. "Don't Change Your Husband," Cecil B. DeMille's Artcraft production, gives Gloria Swanson her first big starring role with Paramount, and John Barrymore is said to give his best light comedy performance before the camera in his offering at the Strand.

Lynch Joins Ritchy Lithograph

After having been associated with the Otis Lithographing Company for fifteen years as its New York representative, Oscar J. Lynch has joined the forces of the J. V. Ritchy Lithograph Corporation, it was announced last week. The Ritchy organization is allied with the Greenwich Lithograph Company, as sales representative.

Mr. Lynch has been actively connected with the poster business for upward of twenty-five years, and is considered an authority in this particular line of endeavor.

An unusual course to be followed by the Ritchy Corporation is to conduct a large national campaign in Motion Picture News, which shall consist not alone in exploiting posters made by that company but also to impress upon exhibitors the necessity of proper poster display and the proper use of lithographs.

Lyons-Moran Comedies Make a Record

On the West Coast the popularity of Lyons and Moran Star Comedies, made for and distributed by the Universal, was very emphatically illustrated in the bookings of this brand for the past week in Los Angeles, when twelve theatres used this brand. Of this number, three were in the downtown district and represent the best houses in the city.

The new California Theatre has already shown several of the Lyons and Moran Comedies, and have a number of others booked. The California is Los Angeles' newest theatre, and one of the finest in the country.

Lyons and Moran, due to the influenza epidemic close down, are behind the schedule of their releases, but have increased their writing staff, and plan to catch up with the schedule by the expiration date of their contract in November.

"Careless America" Makes Good

Universal Declares One-Reeler Is Shown in All Parts of the States
—Exhibitors and Audiences Are Satisfied

Robert Anderson, Who Has Been Engaged
By Universal for Motion Pictures

It was announced this week by Universal that few one-reel pictures put out by that organization have experienced the wide distribution that has been given "Careless America," an industrial film suggested by Secretary of State Hugo of New York and developed by Harry Levey, manager of Universal's industrial department, according to the latter's statement.

"Careless America" is being shown in every territory of the United States and being booked to exhibitors gratis, and possessing much of interest and benefit, it is now booked not only in a majority of the leading theatres of the country but to numerous schools and colleges.

The film shows in a simple, interesting way how Americans can avoid thousands of accidents yearly by "watching their steps." The film shows the many chances pedestrians take in their daily walks, and is being exhibited for the purpose of furthering the national "safety first" movement.

Each Universal exchange is supplied with several prints of the film, and the secretary of state in each district, mayors of cities, police and public safety officials and prominent business men are backing the reel. In New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania the reel has, during the past six months, been given almost 100 per cent. circulation. In Chicago the film was booked by nearly 90 per cent. of the theatres, and in almost every large city of the country theatre men have agreed to run the film for ten or fifteen weeks, according to the ranking of the theatres. At Minneapolis recently the film was presented at a downtown theatre following an address by Mayor J. E. Meyers, who praised the spirit that made the reel possible and laid stress on its benefits. In numerous other cities mayors or police officials have spoken in connection with the initial showings of the film.

H. S. Firestone, president Firestone Tire Company, has sponsored the film and has personally secured 110 prints for distribution throughout the country.

Kenyon Says Horse Must Be Bored to Yawn

"DID you ever try to make a horse yawn?" queried Doris Kenyon, the beautiful young motion picture star, now heading her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc. Of course, no one ever had attempted such a foolish stunt and so informed Miss Kenyon. "Well," she continued, "we did—down in North Carolina, where we were making the exteriors for my next picture, 'Twilight.' It took us eight hours, exhausted the patience of every member of the company and cost $1,150 to secure that yawn, which, fortunately, was followed by two other perfectly good ones. The yawns represent about twelve feet of film in 'Twilight' or cost at the rate of $100 per foot, which is rather expensive, even in these days of extravagance, but the result is well worth every cent of it. It all happened this way:

"We had started out early one morning and the first scene that we took showed Frank Mills, my leading man, and I, returning from a buggy ride. In 'Twilight,' I am a mountain girl, and Mr. Mills is a lumberman in love with me. In our parts we were so engrossed in each other that we failed to notice when we reached the barn. We finally realized where we were and jumped out, only to renew the love-making while we were standing at the horse's head. It was while this was being taken that the horse accidentally yawned.

Of course, the camera was not in action at the time, but we all realized what a splendid bit of comedy it would be to get that yawn into the picture.

"J. Searle Dawley, the director, decided to try for it. All other work was stopped and for eight hours every member of the company practised every artifice imaginable to make that old white horse yawn. We worked mental telepathy, auto-suggestion and moral suasion. But still that horse merely looked bored. We yawned ourselves until our jaws ached and offered a reward of $50 to anyone in the neighborhood who could make the horse yawn.

"All of this time the camera was trained upon him for a close-up, but he heeded it not. Finally, when the sun was just about to disappear and we were to give up in despair, the old horse switched his tail, looked around at Mr. Mills and me, who had been standing there all this time, and then gave three of the most disgusted yawns in which a bored horse ever indulged.

"There was no more work for us that day, but we all felt perfectly satisfied, for we had secured one of the best bits of comedy that ever went into a picture. Just wait until you see it and I think you will agree with me."

And now producers may profit by Miss Kenyon's experiences.

Convalescent Soldiers See "Made in America"

THROUGH the courtesy of the producer, Ashley Miller, the W. W. Hodkinson Distributing Corporation gave a private showing of the eight-reel series of the "Made in America" pictures to the convalescent soldiers at Embarkation Hospital No. 3 in New York City.

It is safe to say that "Made in America" will never be shown to a more appreciative audience nor one better qualified to criticize, for every one of these men had actually lived the experiences shown upon the screen. They found something to appreciate in every incident and found food for merriment when an audience less educated in military matters would have failed to grasp the quiet humor of the situation which, though interesting to the average layman, needed the knowledge and experience of the doughboy to bring out all the fun.

As it was, the overseas men laughed heartily at the grouch of the unwilling draftee, Joe Nelson, and showed warm appreciation at his gradual conversion under the influence of his loyal camp comrades. The movements of the awkward squad, the boisterous outdoor games and all the little sidelights on the doughboys' career were warmly applauded.

When the American soldiers in the practice trench in France hustled on their gas masks as the poisonous vapor rolled over the trench, there was much laughter and applause—it was a case of hustle, and every man present had been through it and appreciated what it means. The serious moments of the picture and the emotional appeal of the dramatic story were followed with an intentness that showed how deeply it struck home to the hearts of these veteran soldiers, who lived over again some of the most poignant moments of their lives.

Famous Players Buys "Secret Service"

One of the most important announcements made by the Production Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the past few months was given out this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of that department. It involves the purchase of "Secret Service," theatrical attraction of the "legitimate" stage, by William Gillette, and in which the actor and playwright scored.

For some time past, "Secret Service" has been one of the sought-after theatrical productions by motion picture producers. Many offers have been made for the play by film organizations, and when the Famous Players-Lasky company finally received the piece for motion picture presentation it was with the understanding that the film is to be presented in a manner befitting its importance.

"Secret Service," written by William Gillette, opened on October 5, 1898, at the Garrick theatre in New York City, with the author-actor in the leading role. The opening was one of the most notable stage occasions in years and a long run was immediately predicted by both critics and public. The play is undoubtedly the most successful of Mr. Gillette's long list of stage offerings. It also served as his initial vehicle when he made his first appearance on the London stage at the Adelphi theatre in May, 1897. In the part of Lewis Dumont he gained wide recognition as one of the most talented actors of the time. From the standpoint of the story his accomplishments with "Secret Service" were equally exceptional.

"We expect to announce in the near future," said Mr. Lasky, "the name of one of the foremost American actors, to play the role created by Mr. Gillette. Details of the arrangement with this star are now under consideration."

Vitagraph Gets Kalem Library

All Literary Properties of Kalem Puts Vitagraph in Possession of Great Photoplay Material

WHAT is declared to be a monster amalgamation of literary properties that puts Vitagraph into possession of one of the greatest photoplay libraries in existence was made known this week by Albert E. Smith.

Mr. Smith announced that Vitagraph had absorbed the Kalem properties, which included a library of photoplay subjects particularly brilliant in authorship and bristling with stage plays that had scored uninterrupted successes for many years.

The announcement follows on the news of Vitagraph's acquisition, sometime ago of Lubin properties and Lubin features, placing at the disposal of that company a choice lot of New York hits which had been acquired by the Lubin Company for record prices in competition with the foremost producing concerns.

The acquisition of the Kalem properties, Mr. Smith announced, included, aside of the great Kalem library, all produced subjects in the negative archives of that concern. This includes "From the Manger to the Cross," the first five-reel production made by an American producer, and which is still being shown every week all over the world.

Aside of the perennially popular "From the Manger to the Cross," title was acquired by Vitagraph in the Kalem and Lubin deals to such fortune-making stage successes as "The Lion and the Mouse," about to be released with Alice Joyce as the star; "The Third Degree" and "The Gamblers," all three by the late Charles Klein, possibly the most successful of dramatists; Eugene Walter's "The Wolf," Winchell Smith's "The Fortune Hunter" and George Bronson-Howard's "Shenandoah."

Four famous Dion Boucicault plays are on the list, as well as several by E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles" and "The Amateur Crackman." Two plays by Joe Murphy, nationally known for a couple of decades as the most prolific and beloved stock producer of the Middle West, are included, and there are some stories by Frederick R. Bechholdt, the Pacific Coast newspaperman, who has made such a mark in magazine fiction.

Hobart Writes Exclusively for Fox

Another indication of the tendency of the motion picture producers to engage, as the authors of screen plays, writers of recognized talent and reputation, is seen in the announcement this week that George V. Hobart, author of "Experience" and other stage successes, is now writing stories exclusively for the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Hobart wrote the original story of "The Jungle Trail," the de luxe production which William Farnum has just completed filming at Miami, Fla. The story of this picture is said to be remarkable for its power.

Besides "Experience" and "The Jungle Trail," Mr. Hobart has written the books of a number of musical shows. His latest stage production, "Just Around the Corner," opened recently on Broadway. Mr. Hobart also is the author of the famous "Dinklespiel" letters, which attained wide circulation a few years ago and were syndicated in hundreds of newspapers.

Ohio Critic Eulogizes Geraldine Farrar

In commenting on "Shadows," Geraldine Farrar's Goldwyn production, Archie Bell in the Cleveland News says:

"In 'Shadows' Miss Farrar demonstrates the best dramatic power that she is capable of, and that is ability of rare dimensions. The picture is powerful in conception and execution. In short, it is drama as we did not formerly admit that drama could be presented by means of the screen."

Mr. Bell recalls how the famous star was persuaded to appear before the camera and how she set herself to conquering this new medium of expression, without, however, proving herself "the big dramatic actress that she is in reality" in "Shadows."

In this vehicle, he points out, she is "shorn of spectacular scenery, operatic trappings and even unusual costumes" and is revealed as "a truly great actress."

Blackton Films Arrival of Troops

When Commodore and Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton went down the bay on the police patrol boat the other day to welcome the 59th Coast Artillery in general and J. Stuart Blackton, Jr., the producer's soldier-son, and Nicholas Musaraca, formerly the Blackton chauffeur, in particular, Mr. Blackton "killed two birds with one stone" by taking his cameraman along to get a celluloid record of the Brooklyn boys' return.

They filmed the New Hampshire and the Louisiana coming up the bay and later docking and unloading their enthusiastic cargo at Hoboken for transfer to Camp Upton.

The first exhibition of these pictures was to the boys who appeared in them. This was at the Orpheum theatre, Brooklyn.

Buys Houdini Serial for Rocky Mountain

"THE MASTER MYSTERY," the super serial with Houdini, the handcuff king, produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., will be distributed in Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico and Southern Idaho by Joseph Goodstein. Mr. Goodstein signed the necessary contracts with Octagon Films this week and left immediately afterward for Denver, Col., where he will open offices.

Fourteen exchanges are now booking the Houdini serial in the United States and Canada their territory being divided as follows: Rolfe productions of Atlanta, booking North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee; Rolfe Productions of New Orleans, supplying Louisiana and Mississippi; Rolfe Productions of New England, controlling the New England States; Rolfe Productions of Pittsburgh, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Arrow Film Exchange, Philadelphia, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, Canada; Rolfe Productions of Dallas booking Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, covering Illinois and Indiana; Effano Film Exchange, New York City, New York; Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., booking Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia; Mid-West Distributing Co., Wisconsin; Rolfe Productions of New Jersey, Southern New Jersey; Star Feature Film Service, Ohio and Kentucky; and Joseph Goodstein, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico and Southern Idaho. The fifteenth distributor—the Export and Import Film Co., New York, controls all the foreign rights to the Houdini serial.

Writers Supply Hayakawa With Features

THE HAWORTH PICTURES CORPORATION, one of the producing units of the Exhibitors' Mutual, filming features starring Sessue Hayakawa, has mapped out a series of pictures for the Oriental actor for which the material has been supplied by some of the foremost screen and literary writers of the day. E. Phillips Oppenheim, Thomas J. Geraghty, L. V. Jefferson, Clifford Howard and Mary McNeil Fenollosa are the writers whose pens have turned out the plots with which Hayakawa will entertain for the next year.

The success of "Bonds of Honor," by Clara Whipple, which is now running throughout the country, presages big things for his subsequent production, "A Heart in Pawn," which was originally entitled "Shadows."

Among the other stories which Hayakawa will produce during the present year is "The Illustrious Prince," a typical story by E. Phillips Oppenheim, which offers splendid screen possibilities. Tom Geraghty has contributed "The Courageous Coward" to the Hayakawa repertoire. In addition to an attractive title, there is real photoplay meat to "The Courageous Coward," which Hayakawa himself predicts will be one of his most successful dramas.

L. V. Jefferson's offering to the Japanese series will be "The Debt," another strong drama of the type Hayakawa prefers, and which the public enjoys him best in. "The Gray Horizon," by Clifford Howard, and "The Dragon Painter," which sounds Oriental, by Mary McNeil Fenollosa, are others on the schedule for the coming season.

Humane Society Praises Pathe Two-Reeler

"Corinne, Come Here," one of the three recent two-reel plays featuring Gloria Joy, distributed by Pathe, has been endorsed by Mrs. Richard Hardy of the American Red Star Animal Relief, a branch of the American Humane Society.

Goldwyn Office Boys Review "Sis Hopkins"

"RED" and "Skinny," officially slated as office boys somewhere within the Goldwyn organization, although the press agent does not say just where, were commissioned last week to look at Mabel Normand's newest Goldwyn production, "Sis Hopkins," and then write their opinion of it.

The future captains of industry were no doubt greatly impressed, for this is what the press agent sent MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"They asked us to come over and see Mabel Normand as 'Sis Hopkins.' Well, it was a pretty tough job getting there, 'cause the boss got wise when Red went and told him that Mabel herself has asked us over. You see, the boss is strong for Mabel and had the nerve to ask us to stay and watch the office while he went out and enjoyed himself. But me and Red fooled him. When we got over to the theatre we 'phoned him that Bryan was in th' office to buy a lot of vacuum cleaners to sweep up the empty bottles, so he beats it back faster than greased lightning. Then me and Red ducks out and when we gets back to th' office, he just naturally has to stay 'put.'"

"To tell you the truth, I'm not much of a 'reviewer.' Red's a pretty good hand at that stuff. He used to hang around a circus and says he knows more about clowns and things than the eighteen-year-old girl who married a sixty-four-year-old batch. And that's goin' some, for that lady certainly knows a lot about business."

"Well, to start, we think 'Sis Hopkins' a corker. The first thing we saw was the back of Sisseretta's head, with those stiff-as-a-poker pig-tails sticking out like they owned the place. Then the slate popped up and 'Sis's Paw sez: 'Never do nothin' for nobody that don't do nothin' fer you!' Now Paw Hopkins has the right idea. That's my way of thinking and the next time the boss tries to put one over on me, I'm goin' to remind him of what Paw says—see if I don't."

"After that we saw Mabel Normand trying to cook a meal for her Paw. The only trouble here is that Sis's feet get tangled with the stove and she sprawls all over the place. Then her Paw tries to save things over and Sis falls right on top of the stove—and there's a fire in it, too."

"Well, everything goes along lickety-split until Sis goes to the grocery store to see Ridy. He's her sweetie. Sis is crazy 'bout him 'cause when Buzz, the humdinger of the village of New Harmony, tries to flirt with Sis and queer Ridy, Sis ups and at 'im and gives him a kick in the guess-where that floors him for the count. Then Sis's dog gets into the scrap. He's hungry or some-thin', for he leaps up on the counter, spies sixty-cent-a-pound boiled ham and is all set for a swell meal. Sis has a heart as big as her body and can't stand to see her pet trying to use etiquette on the ham bone. So Sis goes on over, slices a few nice, round slabs and tells him to help himself. Then the lurcher (he's a big crab) gets hep and tries to run Sis and her dog out o' the place. Gee, how Sis does scrap! Skinny never was in it and even Fat would have had a hard time tryin' to ward off those blows. Anyway, Sis cleans 'em out good and proper and then Ridy he takes a hand and the whole blamed store looks like a cabaret on New Year's Eve."

"Then Sis takes her market basket and oil can and she and Ridy go to Paw Hopkins' farm to do a little spoonin'. The dog finds that he's hungry again and noses around in the basket. Zip goes the oil can and it rolls down into th' clear spring on Paw's farm and th' next day, old Vibert, who was born with a lemon in his mouth, looks over the farm land with Paw Hopkins. Paw suffers with th' 'rheumatics' and Sis wants him to sell a part of th' land so's he get a fancy doctor and get cured and all that."

"Well, Vibert says nothin' doing. The only part of Paw's land that's worth anything is those broad acres that Paw has promised Sis when she grabs a husband. Now right here's where the real fun starts. Vibert gets thirsty and takes a drink out o' the spring. He tastes oil, but the poor boob don't know that Sis's oil can is what spouts up the 'taste.'

"So the old geezer at once gets interested, thinkin' that Paw's land is swimmin' in pay-oil. He's foxy-alright, cause he offers to 'edjicate' Sis and then marry her jest to get the land without payin' a cent."

"He sends Sis to one o' them girl's 'cemeteries,' but Sis says that 'edjication' is like the measles. 'Some people have it and some don't.' What Sis does to that 'cemetery' is enough to make a dead man laugh. She brings it to 'life' alright and makes the fussy old teacher wish she'd never been born."

"Well, I don't want t' tell you all of the story, but I will say that I never hoped to see Mabel Normand do all the stunts she does in 'Sis Hopkins.' Swinging from a trapeze, sliding down ladders, ridin' half-on-half-off the handle-bars of Ridy's old-fashioned byke, turnin' upside down, head over heels, etc., is only part of what she does. Red and me think it's the best picture that Mabel Normand ever had, because it is chocked full of action and keeps you guessing all the time. Then again, Sis is one o' them girls that everybody just can't help but love. When she finally saves her Paw from the clutches of old Vibert and when Ridy asks her to marry him 'cause he wants somethin' more than fences running 'round his house—well, I don't know how to express it, but 'long live' Sis and here's hopin' she keeps on spreadin' sunshine and happiness in this old world of ours."

RED AND SKINNY.

Cassinelli Plans Trip

Dolores Cassinelli, star of the Leonce Perret productions, "Stars of Glory" and "A Soul Adrift," is planning to extensively tour the country to visit the leading motion picture exhibitors and to make a number of personal appearances in some of the theatres in the larger cities throughout the United States and Canada.

Lewis-Select Film Ready for Showing

The print of "Children of Punishment," Mitchell Lewis' forthcoming attraction under the Select banner, and which is the second of his Select Star Series, arrived in New York from Los Angeles late last week and was given a private showing for departmental heads in Select's projection room.

According to an announcement made by Select officials, Mr. Lewis' second Select Picture will be a good box-office attraction. They were especially pleased with numerous choice scenic bits that the film showed, and the unusual adaptability of Mr. Lewis to the role of backwoodsman and lumberjack. From beginning to end, the picture is punctuated with flashes of mountain tops, raging brooks, deep snows and miles upon miles of heavy timberland, while the action of the story itself does ample credit to a man of Mitchell Lewis' character and appeal.

The cast of well known players in support of Mr. Lewis includes Bessie Eyton, Arthur Morrison, Herbert Heyes, Tom Bates, George Nichols and Jane Keckly, in addition to the scores of extras who were recruited from the roster of the Yosemite Lumber Company.

"Better 'Ole" Set for March 16 Release

World Pictures announce that on March 16 "The Better 'Ole," a screen version of Bruce Bairnsfather's cartoons will be released throughout the United States. This will mark the distribution of the picture which in play form is unquestionably the biggest theatrical success of the decade. There are now five companies playing throughout the United States including the organization at present running at the Cort theatre, New York, to capacity houses. This is the first time in the history of the motion picture industry where a play and a screen version of the same subject will run simultaneously.

Metro Names Films 'for March

Expects to Contribute Six Unusual Pictures During That Month—Dana Subject on March 3—
Lytell Is Next

Edith Storey, starred by Metro in "As the Sun Went Down"

THE schedule of releases for the month of March makes it very evident that the Metro studios contributes to the photoplay lovers at least a good half dozen of the best film productions of the year.

March 3 will be the release date of Viola Dana's new All Star Series feature, "Satan Junior."

In this piece Miss Dana portrays a most unusual character, a tomboy vampire.

Among those supporting Miss Dana in this production are Lilie Leslie, Alice Knowland, Frank Currier, Lloyd Hughes and George King, all of whom are well-known to the picture screen.

Lois Weber Supplies

A STORY with a Western setting, Lois Weber's first Western subject, is Mrs. Charles Chaplin's latest Jewel production, entitled "When a Girl Loves."

This Jewel production has been given an early release in the Chicago and Central States territories and has proved a box-office magnet wherever shown to date, Universal declares.

"When a Girl Loves" has been written and directed by Miss Weber and is a distinct departure from the usual trend of her previous screen plays, and Mrs. Chaplin has for her male lead William Stowell, who has supported Dorothy Phillips in her Universal productions, including "The Heart of Humanity."

The story of the film play deals with the efforts of a Western outlaw and atheist to impersonate an express agent and a minister who came West to take his place, in an effort to obtain a valuable consign-

On March 10 "The Blind Man's Eyes" will enable his admirers to see the Metro star, Bert Lytell, in something entirely different from the usual run of photoplay dramas. The novel of the same name by William M. Harg and Edwin Balmer forms the basis of the play, and June Mathis is responsible for the screen adaptation.

The story deals with the struggles of an innocent young man accused of murder to vindicate himself in the eyes of the world and "the one woman" in it.

The balance of the Metro releases for March have not as yet been announced, but it is generally believed that they will include the work of such stars as May Allison, Hale Hamilton and others.

From last reports Miss Allison has completed her production, "The Island of Intrigue," which was being taken on the island of Santa Cruz, off the California coast and near Santa Barbara. The story concerns the holding of a beautiful young girl by a band of brigands with the idea of ransom, and her subsequent rescue by the dashing hero. Judging from the nature of the country about Santa Cruz, with its picturesque hills and semi-tropical vegetation, the picture should prove very interesting from a scenery viewpoint regardless of the story. This feature picture is thought to be one of the Metro's releases for March.

Hale Hamilton should have finished work in a new picture, according to recent advices from Harry L. Franklin, who has been directing Mr. Hamilton. With this idea in view it is thought that this picture also will be released in March, although nothing definite is given out on it and the title of it cannot be secured.

It is understood that Emmy Whalen has a new vehicle for her delightful smile and winsomeness. The name is not yet given out.

ment of gold, and his failure to execute the theft after meeting a girl who, by love, turned his mind toward better things.

Supporting Mrs. Chaplin and William Stowell are Wharton Jones, who is seen as the real minister, Alfred Pagent, who is the lieutenant of Ryan's outlaw band, and Willis Marks, who plays the part of Wiatt, the express agent.

It is expected that "When a Girl Loves" will be given a general release within a short time by Universal exchanges.

Larkin Does Thrills

"The Chasm of Fear," the third episode of the Diando serial, "The Terror of the Range," which is released February 16 by Pathe, shows George Larkin in one of the most spectacular stunts ever revealed on the screen.

William Farnum, the Attentive Lover, in the William Fox Production Called "Fighting Blood." It was Written and Staged by Oscar C. Apfel

William Sherry Releases "Calibre 38"

A new Edgar Lewis production, "Calibre 38," is announced for release February 16, by William Sherry Service through all General Film exchanges outside New York state.

"Calibre 38" is described as a drama of the West, done in the usual profuse style of the producer of "The Barrier," "The Bondman," "The Littlest Rebel," "The Nigger," "Sampson," "The Thief" and "The Gilded Fool," and is said to tell a remarkable story in six vivid pictorial chapters.

It is heralded as one of the most fascinating of recent productions and undoubtedly one of the best pictures Edgar Lewis has ever produced.

Another Bessie Love Picture March 10

Vitagraph announces that it will release on March 10 another Bessie Love picture, her third since coming under the management of that organization.

It is described as her supreme achievement on the screen and will surpass "The Enchanted Barn," according to Vitagraph. The previous release is said to have been met with great favor everywhere.

"The Wishing Ring Man" is the title of the new play, and it deals with a romance of childhood. It was adapted from the book of the same name by Margaret Widdemer.

Sea Atmosphere Dominates

In "The Captain's Captain," starring Alice Joyce, Vitagraph declares that the sea atmosphere is very novel and pleasing particularly to inland audiences.

The photoplay was taken from "Cap'n Abe—Storekeeper," a novel by James Cooper. It was directed by Tom Terris and Miss Joyce is supported by Percy Standing, Eulalie Jonsan, Julia Swayne Gordon and Maurice Costello.

Metro Sets Date for Newest Comedy

February 17 is the date set for the release of the Metro All-Star Series feature, "Johnny on the Spot," with the smiling, forceful Hale Hamilton in the role of "Johnny." It is a rapid-fire comedy of the sort well suited to the screen star, and proves without a doubt Mr. Hamilton's versatility in portraying various types. The character assumed is entirely different from the "get-rich-quick" financier made famous by Hamilton, or that in "Five Thousand an Hour."

The play is based on the story by Shannon Fife, the well known critic, and was adapted to the screen by June Mathis of the Metro scenario staff.

Without the loss of an hour Mr. Hamilton, after the completion of "Johnny on the Spot," began work on a new picture entitled "That's Good."

Universal Announces Four Specials

The titles of the first four Universal Special Attractions to be released according to the new distribution policy of the organization have been announced.

Mae Murray is featured in the first of these "new policy" releases which is titled "The Scarlet Shadow." Robert Z. Leonard produced the film, a majority of the scenes at Lake Tahoe. The story of the play was written by L. H. Fontaine and Katherine L. Robbins.

"The Light of Victory" starring Monroe Salisbury is to be the second of the "new policy" releases. George C. Hull wrote the story for this play and William Wolbert has produced the film drama.

Harry Carey is featured in the third picture of the new policy release schedule. Carey's vehicle has been titled: "A Fight for Love" was written by E. B. Lewis and produced by Jack Ford.

Priscilla Dean in "The Silk Lined Burglar" is the fourth picture scheduled for release according to the new policy. This film play was written by Jack Boyle and produced by Jack Dillon.

"Bella Donna" Current Success Release

Famous Players-Lasky current release of its success series, is the screen version of Robert Hitchens' novel, "Bella Donna," which was presented on the stage several seasons ago by the late Charles Frohman with Mme. Nazimova in the title role. Pauline Frederick is the star of the screen version which was produced under the supervision of Hugh Ford, Edwin S. Porter. Miss Frederick's supporting cast includes Thomas Holding and Julian L'Estrange. The water-ways along the Florida coast served as a background for the Egyptian atmosphere.

"Bella Donna" is the tale of an adventuress who in Egypt poisons her English husband in order to be free to go to an Egyptian with whom she has fallen in love.

Field in Frisky Farce

Elinor Field appears in what Exhibitors Mutual describes as a frisky farce in the Strand Comedy released February 2.

This one-reeler is entitled "How to be Happy Though Married," and the action is derived from the many friends that a young couple have to contend with on returning from their honeymoon. A nice looking stranger and a grass widow help furnish the comedy in the story.

Fourth for Cavaleri

In "The Two Brides," released by Paramount February 9, Mme. Lina Cavaleri, famous operatic diva, makes her fourth appearance on the screen.

The story was written by Alicia Ramsey, who was co-author with Rudolph de Cordova of Mme. Cavaleri's last Paramount picture, "A Woman of Impulse," and was adapted for the screen by Margaret Turnbull.

Special Service Section on

Priscilla Dean in "The Wicked Darling"

If you have booked "The Wicked Darling," make up your mind to get all of the capital possible out of the vogue the star has established for herself in her past few pictures. According to the reports that have been received from many sections, Priscilla Dean is enjoying unusual popularity because of the success that she scored in "Kiss or Kill" and "The Wildcat of Paris." If such is the case in your locality you do not want to let the people forget that when you come along with this one.

Here you have a crook play, but one that is different, and you find yourself forgetting the criminal element because of the strong heart interest that is brought in almost at the start of the picture. We would advise you to tell the public just enough about the plot of "The Wicked Darling" to indicate what it is about, without giving away the unexpected turnings of the story. Heart interest is the strong point to play; most everyone loves romance along with virile action, and we would suggest building the exploitation along these lines.

The title will attract attention, but we would be careful to make it plain that this is not a sex story, because some people will get that impression. Your exploitation should be clean all the way through.

Let's look at the story: Mary Stevens, known as "The Gutter Rose," is the ward of Fadem, proprietor of a crooked pawnshop and owner of an underworld cafe. The girl, whose real name is Mary Stevens, is a pickpocket and the companion of Stoop Connors, a thief. But aside from her thefts the girl's character is clean, and that is made clear at the very start of the picture.

The scenes change and we are taken to the home of Adele Hoyt, and we see her learning that Kent Mortimer, her supposed millionaire fiance, is ruined. She gives him back his ring, but does not return the valuable pearl necklace which he has given her. But that evening on her way home from a reception they come unfastened and fall to the street. Mary and Stoop are on the scene looking for their pickings, and Mary is quick to seize the pearls and dash away. With a crowd in pursuit she takes refuge in the home of Mortimer, and through the loss of one of her French heels he discovers her hiding behind a sofa. He believes her a thief, but there is some cleverly arranged stagecraft that changes this opinion and he allows her to go. But in the meantime she has seen the solitaire, and as she leaves she fixed the lock of the front door so that she may re-enter. In the meantime Mortimer has told the girl his story, of his ruin and the broken engagement. Mary does not return to the house, but a new feeling has come over her, and the only thing that she steals is the framed picture of his former sweetheart.

BUT the trust that Mortimer has placed in her has changed the girl's view of life, and, determining to live straight, she leaves her crooked guardian and finds employment in a small restaurant, and there Mortimer again comes across her life. They find they are living just around the corner from one another, and each evening Mortimer takes her home. Finally Stoop discovers the girl leaving the restaurant one evening and attacks her, but just at that moment Mortimer arrives and gives the crook a beating. In return Stoop shoots him in the arm and the girl carries her sweetheart to his room, hiding from the police that she knows his assailant.

At his boarding house Mary learns from from the landlady that Mortimer is out of funds and deeply in debt to his landlady, and so the girl resolves to come to his aid. In the meantime she had hidden the string of pearls in a flower pot in her room, and she takes two of them to Fadem to get some money, which goes to Mortimer's landlady under pledge of secrecy.

But the two pearls have but excited the desire for the remainder, and so he tells the story to Stoop, and another member of the gang shadows Mary, and while she is away from her room Stoop goes there after the pearls. But, though he wrecks the room and actually cracks the flower pot that holds them, he does not find them.

AND so Stoop jumps to the conclusion that Mary has given the necklace to Mortimer, and so he goes to the injured man's rooms. He has just had time to give away the fact that Mary stole the necklace and to accuse Mortimer of having stolen "his gal" when Mary comes. Stoop hides on the fire escape with the couple covered with his gun, but after Mortimer has accused the girl and she offers him the pearls he re-enters the room and a terrific fight follows, which results in Stoop getting the pearls. And his story has ended Mary's romance, for, since the first night they met Mortimer has constantly told her how he loathes a thief. And she has learned to whom the necklace belonged and that Mortimer had given them to Miss Hoyt.

With her sweetheart lost and her dreams of happiness fading away Mary goes back to her room at Fadem's. But then we have a clever scene in the parlor of the cafe, where Fadem steals the necklace from Stoop and Mary steals it in turn. But this time she takes the pearls to Miss Hoyt. It is only when the latter in turn returns them to Mortimer that he realizes fully the sacrifice that the girl has made for him and that she has been living a straight life because of her love. So he goes to the little restaurant to seek her, and there he is informed that he has sent her back to the gutters by his treatment. But he does learn where she is living.

IN the meantime the two crooks have decided that Mary has the pearls again and Stoop is choking her to make her tell where they are when Mortimer arrives on the scene. Then another terrific fight ensues, with Mortimer facing Stoop, Fadem and another member of the gang. It is when Mortimer is almost unconscious that Mary is able to slip from the room and summon the bartender in the cafe below, a hulking brute who worships Mary, and he arrives on the scene just in time to prevent the murder.

And then, of course, love has its way. The final scenes show them in the country together on the farm they have purchased with the proceeds of the sale of the necklace. The big bartender, who has a small but most striking role, is used to bring in a little comedy element here, for he has been regenerated, too, and we see him in the role of a "milk-maid" and at the very end drinking a glass of milk.

Star and Human Appeal Are Points to Feature

WE have commented in these Special Service Sections several times that one of the results of the great war has been to instill in the average heart the desire for action, and for humanness to accompany it. And when you are able to tell your patrons that you are offering them alternate laughs and thrills, you are getting well nigh a hundred per cent appeal over.

These selling talks are not prepared for the purpose of selling the picture to the exhibitor, but to give the exhibitor some suggestions on how to exploit the picture to the public. The greater portion of the exhibitors are unable to see the average picture for themselves before they show them; and it is just as true that they cannot properly exploit them unless they know what the picture is about and the possibilities that it offers.

Now it is possible that the story of "The Wicked Darling" might happen in some other countries, it belongs in America and every type that is portrayed will be recognized as belonging right here, whether your patrons live in New York or Oshkosh. So let's start the exploitation on the idea that you don't have to explain any of the events, but that they would be accepted by any patron anywhere. Keep away from making a problem out of this one.

WE would not advise an ordinary sort of teaser campaign. While the title is attractive, there is not any use of trying to make it a mystery or to bring it home as a personal proposition to any of your folk. In advance we would rather start in by using a few lines at the bottom of the regular current display for a couple of days with merely the words, "The Wicked Darling." Then for a couple of days following we would enlarge the sentence into "Priscilla Dean is the 'Wicked Darling.'"

After that we would break into the straight advertising campaign.

FOR YOUR HELP Various Sorts of Exploitation Aids Are Available

ELSEWHERE we have featured some advertising suggestions, largely for those who wish to prepare their own advertising and to make their own distinctive appeal. To aid along these lines there are a full line of accessories ready prepared for you.

Posters include a striking 24-sheet, a 6-sheet, two 3-sheets and two one-sheets.

There are two one-column, a 2-column and a 3-column ready made advertisements which are so arranged that they may be sawed apart and other interesting matter that you want to use inserted.

Ready made illustrative matter includes a one column stock star cut and two and three column scene cuts.

There are sets of 8 by 10 and 11 by 14 stills and also a special picture of Priscilla Dean.

Slides are also available. There is a music cue and in addition we have printed here the one used at the Broadway theatre.

Now if Miss Dean has attracted a lot of attention in your community, we would advise a letter to your patrons. The exhibitor should bear in mind that no matter whether he is content with playing the stars who have long been established, the public likes to have new stars—and above everything else each individual likes to think that he or she had a part in their discovery. So to those exhibitors who have played previous pictures with Miss Dean we would recommend this letter. It may be classed as a fake, but it is of the harmless sort:

"After we had heard the remarks that you and scores of other residents of Sweetwater had made about the work of Priscilla Dean in (here mention the names of the last pictures of hers that you have shown), we decided to 'take our pen in hand.' And so we sat down and wrote the producers that we wanted more of her pictures, with lots of action, but with the love element dominant.

"Now the producers have written us that they have placed Miss Dean in a picture that every American will like. She is a little girl of the gutters, but her heart is of gold, and even though she steals a necklace at the start of the picture, and even though you hate a thief, we know that you will sympathize with her to the very end of the film—when she finds such happiness that she doesn't need sympathy.

"Won't you come to the Empire during the week starting Feb. 24 and see whether you and the other people of Sweetwater have been right in pushing a new star to the very front?"

IF you have been playing these Priscilla Dean pictures and they have been giving your patrons pleasure, you should start in right now not only to take the profit from that fact but to build up business for the future with her. Figure out whether you are making money and attracting attention with her pictures and then start on a campaign that will be an insurance for your business.

Some time ago we advised that exhibitors would acquire a big asset by saving the stills on the various productions of each star and using these in connection with later lobby displays. Now if you have saved these pictures from "The Brazen Woman," "Kiss or Kill," "The Wildcat of Paris" and the other successes in which she has appeared, you are well fixed. If you have not done this, start in with this resolve for the future.

You could make a striking advance display for your lobby by using cut-outs in your lobby from the different scenes. At the tops there should be the name of the star in large letters and then under this:

"In 'Kiss or Kill' she was the friend-

At left, Mary and "Stoop," the pickpocket; at the right, a laugh with the appearance of the hulky bartender, and in the center the happy ending less little girl who put her trust in a man she thought a burglar. She faced the problem of a kiss or a killing, and you remember how delightful she was to kiss." And then follow this with the cut-outs.

And after that.

"When you saw Priscilla Dean in 'The Wildcat of Paris' you thought her a wicked queen of the Apaches at first, but you came to love with her and to fight with her and with the spirit that caused her to inspire the robber band to save Paris."

Then, after you have used the cut-outs from that picture: And now they call her 'wicked,' but they have to admit that she is a 'darling.' You'll agree with the title and you'll be as pleased with her happiness as if it were your own."

We know that this space in reference to this suggestion is wasted so far as its employment by most exhibitors is concerned. But don't let it happen again. If you are going to continue to show Priscilla Dean pictures, KEEP these stills for similar use with the next one.

SO when you come down to your newspaper exploitation, feature the picture of Miss Dean to the limit. We really believe that in case of a star like that it is worth taking more space than you usually employ merely to get the illustrative punch over. There is nothing that attracts so much attention as the picture of a pretty woman—when there is ability behind the picture.

We believe that here is a case where you can afford to go to the expense of having special cuts made for your use, at least in your Sunday display. There were two attractive ones, one a bust and the other a full-length picture published in the issue of the News for November 23, and if you have no more at hand you can dig these up and use them. Both the one and three sheets also provide you attractive pictures of the star.

Make the cut dominate the advertising above everything else and then play the

NIGHT SCENES

Here's a Chance for an Unusual Newspaper Story

MOST newspapers are willing to print special stories for you so long as you really have something to say. In this one you have a chance to plant a story that we have never known to have been used.

Every scene in "The Wicked Darling" is a night scene. This applies to both interiors and exteriors and there are some wonderful effects secured. They are so varied that they never become tiresome. Build a story around this angle and have it used in advance or invite the newspaper men to see the picture and themselves write a story along these lines.

There is also a story that will appeal to the sporting pages. The part of the powerful bartender is taken by a former wrestler who was constantly in the public print years ago as "Kalla Pascha, the Terrible Turk." He has a very small part, but it is one of the bits of the picture that will stand out. There's a good story about him that ought to be readily used.

But don't fail to keep Miss Dean featured strong in all that you do.

name of the player and the title of the picture for all you are worth. You will note that in the advertising that is already prepared for you the figure of Miss Dean is kept the dominant one.

When you have done this you have the attention of your patrons. You have the eye of the public on your newspaper space and you do not need the large type to put over the selling argument. But if you have played her other pictures, especially the last two, we would be sure to refer to that fact immediately under Miss Dean's name.

There is a mighty good line used in connection with the star in the ready-made advertising and we urge its adoption by you—"Priscilla Dean, the Adorable."

Another sentence that tends to increase interest in this comparatively new favorite is embodied in: "The latest and greatest star to flash on the photoplay horizon," but instead of this; and if you have played her other pictures, we believe that this could be made much stronger by localizing the same idea. Say this one:

"Sweetwater saw Priscilla Dean months ago and called her 'the adorable.' They picked her as the newest great star of the screen. And Sweetwater was right. After you have seen this one you will see what good pickers you and your fellow townsmen are."

THIS could be boxed in a light rule or Ben Day border right under her name, but there should be sufficient white space left at either side so that it will not conflict with the main border. And if you use this box, use no others in the display. Set your selling argument as large as you wish, though the size of the type has little to do with it in this case, then indent it liberally on both sides so as to give plenty of white, have the printer use leads liberally and go ahead:

"She was schooled in theft, and her heart untaught. And so when she saw the string of pearls dropped to the sidewalk she grabbed them up and ran—straight into the arms of love. And when the man said, 'I hate a thief,' she resolved to be one no longer. And she wasn't—until she thought that she had lost his love. Yes, and still she fought for him and right, and then he came to know—and the little rose of the gutter blossomed in the sort of love that delights us all."

You will note that in these lines and in other ones we have not tried to tell the story of the picture. You will kill the interest if you undertake this. But we do believe that after you have indicated to the public the interest the story holds that you should let them know that this is a happy picture. That's the sort they are looking for these days.

There is one thing that we would avoid, and that is referring to the "regeneration" of the girl crook. That word "regeneration" has scared more people away from a motion picture theatre than any we know of. Let the idea go in my implication and not by direct statement.

HERE are a few other selling suggestions:

"If the gutter Rose hadn't stolen the necklace she would never have seen The Man. But when she did see him her first impulse was to rob him of a diamond. But she remembered what he had said to her, and the only thing she did steal was a picture of the girl who had discarded him because he had lost his money. Then the Gutter Rose saved the necklace from her former pals, turned to the right and devoted everything to The Man. When he found she was a thief he spurned her, but he came to know that even thieves can be redeemed by a great and pure love. You don't like thieves, but you'll fight her battles with her, you'll have many laughs with her, and you'll thrill again and again—if you are a real American."

"Little Mary Stevens lived down in the slums. Her guardian made a thief of her, and the only friend that she had was the strong-as-an-ox bartender—and what a good friend he did come to be. He protected her when she was sought to flee the life and to become worthy of the great love that she had learned. And when she was stamped a thief in her sweetheart's eye again the big, husky bartender came and saved the life of the man she loved. And so, in the end, when we see little Mary happy with her husband, is it any wonder that the giant bartender is with them—now turned to a milkmaid, but happy he helped to bring her happiness."

Music and the Settings Deserve Attention Here

ONE of the surest ways in which to guarantee big business for the future on special attractions is to give especial attention to the presentation of your current special. We believe that nine-tenths of the exhibitors have realized now that they are not running their houses merely for the day's receipts or really the receipts of a run of any one picture. They are insuring the future.

For that reason we would strongly recommend that you give this picture a special presentation and see the effect that it will have on your theatre. We would stay away from anything of the freak and would see that all of the details are worked out smoothly. You can create plenty of atmosphere, but that does not mean that you have to hang a lot of junk around your lobby or resort to trick methods.

There are a number of laughs in "The Wicked Darling," but at the same time it is essentially a gripping, thrilling picture, and for that reason we would suggest that you use a large amount of comedy on the bill or the higher class of scenics of the peaceful order.

MUSIC is one of the big things with all productions, and you have a good chance here. There is a cue sheet supplied by the producers, but we have reproduced on these pages the one that is being used at the Broadway theatre this week, it being the work of J. C. Bradford, the musical director. Here the theme used is "Night, My Love and I," while in the other score "For You a Rose" is employed.

At the start of the picture we have "Rustles of Spring" used up to the title, "Its petals were soiled," and then we get the theme for the first time, and it is brought back again when Mortimer discovers the girl hiding under the couch in his apartments. "Life and Love," by Herbert, is another selection that is used to good advantage. This is brought in first with the title, "The chivalry of a man," and then comes again with another title, "And I said that you were wonderful," and then is repeated where Mortimer says, "I'm so sorry, Mary."

Mr. Bradford is perfectly right in keeping the love music at the strongest through this offering. You have to use action music as suggested by the music cue at certain times, but the smoother you keep this music the better the audience is going to enjoy it.

THERE are a few suggestions that we ourselves would offer. You can bring back an old-time strain and get a lot of the elders at least interested by using "Sally in Our Alley," when the man and the girl find that they live just around the corner from each other.

There are several scenes in the cafe where the piano player is "pounding the ivories," and here the piano alone should be used largely with the burlesque effect. There is another scene where Stoop runs the scale with his fingers, and here the orchestra or organ should remain tacit. Of course, this may be called "old stuff," but it will help you get the atmosphere.

For a prelude we would strongly recommend that you have a male voice sing "Mary's a Grand Old Name." This was one of the song hits in "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" some twelve years ago, and it may be hard for you to locate the music, but we would start on this advance. There is unusual emphasis placed on the name of the girl in the titles, and the song will get your patrons right into the spirit of the picture with the first time that "Mary" is flashed on the screen.

For the overture we would suggest either lively action stuff like the toreador song from "Carmen" or some of the better known love music.

ON another page we are reproducing the lobby display that is used at the Broadway this week. We would strongly advise confining the greater part of this display to pictures of the star and the name of the picture. Don't let anything of the gruesome get in or you are likely to keep some of the people away, when that sort of a display is not justified by the picture.

Remember that crime is not the theme of this picture. It is merely the background. Love is the big theme and the settings are put against the career of the girl merely to show the wonderful power of love.

You can take the twenty-four sheet and get from this a splendid cut-out of the head and shoulders of Miss Dean, and under this you need simply to use the words, "The Wicked Darling." Star lithographs should be used liberally. We would make this display a strictly Priscilla Dean one, especially if the star is well known with you. We believe that this will bring you more business than anything else that you can do.

Another thing to be remembered in all of your exploitation is the strength of the supporting cast. In Lon Chaney, who has the most important of the crook roles, you have one of the best known actors on the screen and Spottiswoode Aitken, who plays "Fadem," ranks at the very top of character actors. Wellington Plater has the hero's role, while Gertrude Astor is seen in an engaging little bit.

Keep away from adjectives, for you do not need them. But in everything that you do don't fail to tell your public:

Some people might get the idea from the title that it is a foreign one, very likely with the scenes in Paris, and we would make this point clear.

Strauss Series from Educational

Noted Artist and Illustrator Arranges with E. W. Hammons to Release His Series of Plays

EDUCATIONAL FILMS CORPORATION, through its vice-president and general manager, E. W. Hammons, announces that it will release the series of screen plays which Malcolm Strauss, one of New York's most famous artists and illustrators, will produce, the first of the series to feature Lelia Hope pronounced by some of the leading artists of the country as "the most beautiful woman in America." The watchword of Mr. Strauss in the production of this series will be originality and new and distinct ideas in photography. Production on the first subject of the series will commence immediately.

Mr. Strauss will be remembered as the first American artist to appreciate the possibilities in illustrating the covers of magazines with pretty girls. He next took up portraiture work and his fame in this line spread abroad. For a year or more Mr. Strauss has been working on new and original work in photography as adaptable to the screen. With these plans perfected, he has launched forth in the producing line and through Educational Films, he will give to the public the benefits of his work.

As the star for his first series of screen plays, he has selected Miss Hope, primarily for her beauty and type. Miss Hope has never had experience either on the stage or before the camera, but she has rare beauty, personality, and her natural grace in adapting herself to work before the camera, has, in the opinion of those who have seen the first of the finished series, justified the confidence placed in her by Mr. Strauss.

Neither Mr. Hammons or Mr. Strauss would discuss the novelty of the new series, but both say that the Lelia Hope series of Strauss productions, will present something distinctly novel and idealistic. Mr. Strauss has laid particular stress on the photographic phase of his productions for the screen, and it is in this branch that the public is promised the most decided originality.

Through the Malcolm Strauss News and feature service, this series of photoplays will run in story form, with illustrations by Mr. Strauss. The stories and illustrations will be syndicated through more than seventy-five newspapers of the country, and the widest and most thorough publicity will be given his subjects. Alfred Cheney Johnston, whose fame as an artistic photographer is known throughout the country, has been engaged by Mr. Strauss to supervise the photographic department of the new company. In addition to the series referred to, starring Miss Hope, Mr. Strauss has planned for a number of other series to follow in production the Hope series.

Mr. Hammons in speaking of the arrangements made with Mr. Strauss for the Educational to release all Strauss productions, said: "I have every confidence in Mr. Strauss to furnish the Educational program with subjects that will reflect credit on our releasing organization. The idea which Mr. Strauss will incorporate in his series are highly original and in the opinion of the few who have seen the samples of his work the subjects to be released will receive immediate favor from the public. Educational is fortunate in having a product such as Mr. Strauss is furnishing the picture-going public through the medium of the Educational Films Corporation."

Foreign Rights to Dalton Picture Sold

APOLLO TRADING COMPANY, represented by Bobby North and L. Lawrence Weber, this week purchased the foreign rights to Southern Feature Film Company's production of "Beyond The Law," written by and featuring Emmett Dalton. Mr. Dalton is also general manager of the Southern Feature Film Company and acted for that company in closing the deal. Theodore Marston directed and Harris Gordon, Virginia Lee, William Dunn, Mabel Bordine, Jack O'Laughlin and Dick Clark.

Mr. North in commenting on the purchase said: "The reason that we made the purchase of foreign rights so quickly, and did not wait for the domestic rights to be placed, was that we knew the foreign market lacked a subject of this kind at this particular moment. We had been asked for this kind of subject by buyer after buyer from the foreign field, and we expect to make shipment of prints almost immediately.

"The story from which the picture is made had wide international publicity, and this was also a factor in determining us to close for these rights. The story ran serially in the Wide World Magazine, and circulates through every English-speaking country. And in countries not English-speaking we found that the adventures of Mr. Dalton had received unusual notice."

The story opens with the appointment to the office of United States deputy marshal of Frank Dalton, who later loses his life in the rounding up of lawbreakers.

Rapf Sells Territory

Joseph Goodstein, independent buyer of Denver, has purchased the Colorado, Wyoming and Utah rights to Harry Rapf's productions, "The Accidental Honey-moon" and "The Struggle Everlasting."

Louis Brock, to Tour the West Indies for Inter-Ocean

Brock Tours West Indies for Inter-Ocean

President Cromelin of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation said at a banquet last year that with the first sign of peace Inter-Ocean representatives would leave to meet exhibitors face-to-face. The first man to leave Inter-Ocean Building under this plan was H. G. Harper for his 40,000-mile tour of the far East, and today comes announcement from Inter-Ocean Film that Louis Brock took boat Wednesday for a tour of the West Indies.

Representative Brock will first stop at Havana, Cuba, where he will close contracts now pending for program releases in that territory.

Despite the proximity of Cuba to the United States it is very seldom that home office representatives of important pictures and exporting firms visit that territory, and perhaps this is the reason that American films invaded the country much more slowly than they did in lands further removed. Before leaving on Wednesday Mr. Brock closed contracts taking in Spain and Portugal for the World Films, Plaza Pictures, "The Victim" and Inter-Ocean specials.

He has been with the firm since 1916 and is the nephew of the late Henry J. Brock, who was one of the first American film men to recognize the possibilities of American pictures in foreign fields. Prior to associating with Inter-Ocean where young Brock has specialized in Central and South American business, he managed theatres in New York State and Canada for his uncle.

Ford's Serial Proving a Big Winner

Francis Ford reports from the Coast that his latest serial, "The Silent Mystery," is proving a box-office winner for the exhibitor. Mr. Ford's next serial will be produced in the Orient. He and his company will leave next month for Honolulu, Japan and China.

Frohman to Produce in San Antonio

It was announced in New York this week that active preparations are now under way by the Frohman Amusement Corporation for the production of the twenty-six two reel western dramas, starring "Texas Guinan."

The first five stories have been purchased and are now being transferred to scenario or continuity form and all other plans are completed with the single exception of choosing the place of production. It was originally determined to engage a studio in Southern California, but since the publication of the fact that the Frohman Amusement Corporation plan making these two reel western dramas, the Chamber of Commerce of various cities, in Colorado, Texas and Florida have been urging that the Frohman Amusement Corporation establish their studio in the locality urged by these business organizations, and in some instances, flattering inducements were presented. The merits of these other cities are being carefully investigated, particularly as to climatic conditions, variety of scenery, accessibility, and ability to furnish local talent. San Antonio may be decided upon.

Capital Enters Third Releasing Week

Entering upon its third week of releases the Capital Film Company reports the demand for two reel features and single reel comedies far beyond all expectations.

Returns from all our branch offices, says an official of the Capital Company are very satisfactory indeed we have had demonstrated by the policy of adhering to one and two reels that it has been a long felt want by the exhibitor.

"Snappy Stories" to Be Filmed

UNDER a contract entered into by A. E. Siegel and the Snappy Stories Publishing company, Mr. Siegel secures the exclusive motion picture rights to all stories published in the Snappy Stories Magazine, a publication issued twice a month and with a circulation that is said to exceed one million copies per issue.

According to a statement issued by Mr. Siegel his company is not required to produce every story published, but has the exclusive rights to such material as in the opinion of the producers is suited to their needs, with the guarantee, however, on the part of the magazine to furnish at least twenty-five worth while stories during the year.

The productions will be released in two-reel subjects twice a month concurrently with the publication of the story in the magazine. In other words, when the story is released for the screen it will appear in the issue of Snappy Stories coming out the same week.

A. E. Siegel, in co-operation with the Literary Digest, is also transferring to the screen under the title of "Topics of the Day," the pithy paragraphs from the Literary Digest Magazine.

To further the campaign of publicity, Snappy Stories will insert a full-page advertisement of each release in the current number of the magazine; devoting space that if it were contracted for at the usual advertising rates would total a sum at the end of any twelve months in excess of $15,000.

Production work will commence within a fortnight, the directorial and studio staff having already been chosen, but the producers are as yet undetermined whether to contract for a star to appear in the entire series of those to be released the first six months, or to cast each production separately, the latter idea prevailing in order to permit of the casting of each production according to the characters to be portrayed.

The manner of release is altogether an open question. Whether the negative rights are to be disposed of to a program concern has not been finally determined, although that does seem to be the preferable form of release, in view of the active negotiations that are now pending between Mr. Siegel and the representative of one of the more prominent releasing corporations in New York.

Sherry's Fourth Keeney Picture This Week

WILLIAM L. SHERRY SERVICE offers for its fourth Frank A. Keeney release "Marriage for Convenience," starring Catherine Calvert. E. Lloyd Sheldon, author and playwright, wrote "Marriage for Convenience" especially for Miss Calvert. Mr. Sheldon is also the author of Miss Calvert's Keeney release, "Marriage." Sidney Olcott directed "Marriage for Convenience."

The story has been scenarioized in melodramatic fashion, involving incidents in the whirl of upper society. The inner workings of modern society and its immorality beneath the coat of respectability is revealed in dramatic episodes of Miss Calvert's latest picture.

Miss Calvert has the role of Natalie Rand, a society girl of the Southland. It is said that the star wears fifteen of the most fashionable gowns. In the supporting cast with Miss Calvert are seen Edward Burns, Anna May, George Majeroni, Blanche Davenport, Henry Sedley, Sadie Leonard and George Pauncefort.

Alpha Gives Trade Show

Bernard H. Mills, manager of Alpha Pictures, Inc., announces that his company's first independent release, Harry McRae Webster's "Reclaimed," starring Niles Welch and Mabel Julienne Scott, has brought requests from all sections of the country for particulars on bookings and distribution. Mr. Mills is arranging for a trade showing in the near future.

Raver's Four-Star Combination

Raver, Producer; Thomas, Author; Baird, Star, and Irving, Director, of New Producing Organization

THE four-star combination in pictures, planned by Harry Raver two years ago, has become a reality, according to Mr. Raver's announcement this week that he has formed a four-star producing organization and will commence work immediately on the first special feature. The four-star combination includes Augustus Thomas, playwright, as author; Leah Baird as the featured player of all four-star productions; George Irving as director, and Mr. Raver as producer.

Mr. Raver is one of the pioneer producers of star dominated pictures, but has always aimed for an even balance in determining selling and entertainment value. He championed the story as being entitled to first consideration and, for that reason, his arrangement with Augustus Thomas was made before either a director or star was considered. Mr. Raver's faith in the Thomas style of play is based upon the long string of successes with which he is credited. Mr. Thomas' war activities, however, held up the completion of Mr. Raver's organization until several months ago, when the project was again taken up and negotiations were opened with the one director whom both Messrs' Thomas and Raver believed fitted to take charge of productions, George Irving.

Mr. Irving made his debut in pictures, as an actor, when the Thomas-Raver production of "Paid in Full" was shown, about five years ago. Six weeks later he completed "The Jungle," after another director had resigned in the midst of production. He later directed Ethel Barrymore's first picture, "The Nightingale," which Mr. Thomas wrote specially for her. His "Witching Hour," by Mr. Thomas; "Raffles," with John Barrymore, and his last Artcraft production of "The Silver King," with William Faversham, are among the list of notable successes.

Leah Baird was selected from the list of available leading women as being most suitable for this production.

Arthur Beck, the business executive of the new organization, has had many years' experience as a distributor and manager of exchanges. He will supervise the distribution and exploitation of the new product.

Mr. Raver contemplates six releases a year—one every two months. The first production will be a screen version of Mr. Thomas' "As a Man Thinks." He stated that the first year's output had been sold, both foreign and domestic rights.

Small Town See "Wanted for Murder" Two Days

That the small-town exhibitor sees the advantage of longer runs on special attractions, is indicated in a telegram received by the Minneapolis branch of the Independent Sales Corporation, which company is booking Harry Rapf's "Wanted for Murder," from Lein and Coats, owners of the Strand in Grafton, N. D. The telegram read:

"Wanted for Murder" went over big—played a big house the first night, and the second we had to turn people away, so you can sure boost this production—everybody went away satisfied.

(Signed) LEIN & COATS."

Demand for Nazimova Product Grows

The demand of exhibitors directing special run theatres throughout the country for Nazimova's newest super-feature, "Out of the Fog," based on H. Austin Adams' stage play, "Ception Shoals," which Nazimova achieved such great heights in when produced at the Maxine Elliott theatre in New York, exceeds the most optimistic expectations of Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger, who present the Nazimova Productions.

Already every theatre devoted exclusively to weekly runs in the United States has booked the picture, though the majority of the owners have not yet seen the production. This is unprecedented in the history of the industry and is due, Mr. Rowland says, to the previous high quality and superior artistic and box-office value of Nazimova's other pictures, "Revelation," "Toys of Fate" and "Eye for Eye."

Kenneth Webb Directs Brady for Select

Select Pictures Corporation announces that Kenneth B. Webb has been engaged to direct Alice Brady in a forthcoming Select Picture, the one which will follow her latest attraction, "The World to Live In," which is being distributed this month as a February production. The title of the picture on which Miss Brady and Mr. Webb are now working has not yet been announced, but the production itself will have a certain amount of smart atmosphere.

Miss Brady's new director is the author and stage director of several very well known Columbia University comic operas, including "The Dream Girl," "The Forbidden City," "Leap Year Land,"

Many Bookings Reported on "Common Clay"

The bookings of "Common Clay" in first-run houses bid fair to excel the unusual record of "Infatuation," according to Pathe.

Following the scheduling at the Rialto, New York, of the screen version of the Harvard Prize Play by Cleves Kinhead, the bookings in the New York district have passed the previous big feature record.

The reports from the West show that the prominent exhibitors have had only to see it and then sign for it. Miss Ward's popularity is also said to have been the strong element in determining the sales.

Given a star of established popularity—and who is especially so with the women—and a strong, modern human play such as A. H. Woods' production has proved on the stage for more than three years, and Pathe considers the combination is ideal in its amusement and selling value.

Vitagraph Sees Record in Serial

Compilations made at the home offices of Vitagraph of the advance bookings to date on file at its various branch offices for the new serial, "The Man of Might," featuring William Duncan, supported by an all-star cast, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, already make it apparent that this newest of Vitagraph's famous chapter plays will prove by far its greatest serial hit.

Ever since its pioneer product in this line, "The Fighting Trail" was presented by Vitagraph, its serial business has grown by leaps and bounds with every succeeding offerings in that form. These justified the expectation of a marked increase in the immediate predecessor, but no such early and sizeable crop of bookings.

Educational Films Gets Hearst Cartoons

AN important announcement to the motion picture industry in general, and to the exhibitor in particular, is made in a bulletin issued by W. E. Hammons, president of the Educational Films Corporation, wherein he states that all of the Hearst cartoons will henceforth be distributed by the organization of which he is president. This important business transaction, which is the culmination of an extensive investigation of the distributing branch of the film business, was finally consummated the early part of last week. The deal involves the distribution of "The Shenanigan Kids," "Judge Rumhauser," and the "Happy Hooligan" cartoons, together with a three hundred foot novelty film, the titles of which will be written by one of America's foremost writers of humor.

Mr. Hammon's statement in part is as follows:

"The Educational Films Corporation announces that it has taken over for worldwide distribution the animated cartoons produced by the International Film Service, Inc. The Educational Films Corporation had, up to the time of the outbreak of Spanish influenza, been distributing the International's animated cartoons with great success. But when the situation reached a critical stage, the Educational ceased releasing these cartoons, and subsequently the International Film Service, Inc., stopped making them.

"However, when the danger period had passed, the International forces renewed making these cartoons, and naturally they set about looking for the best medium for the distribution of their product. Mr. Zittel, General Manager of the International Film Service, Inc., confided to me that for a long time he investigated the distributing end of the business in an effort to find the best distributing facilities, and when he finally decided to let the Educational Films Corporation handle the cartoons he did so saying it was the best medium for his product."

Wholesome Film Opens New York Office

Harry E. Felstein has been placed in charge of the newly opened New York branch of the Wholesome Film Company with main offices in Chicago. The New York office is located at 729 Seventh avenue. The Wholesome Film Company specializes in the production of juvenile features. Its pictures now booking include "Little Red Riding Hood," "Cinderella and the Magic Slipper" and "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star," featuring the child actress, Zoe Rae.

Rests, Then at Work Again

Constance Talmadge started last week on another picture for Select. When she finished "Romance and Arabella," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, she announced that she would take a short vacation before resuming work. "Romance and Arabella" is now being distributed as a February attraction, however, and Miss Talmadge has returned to the studio and to picture making.

The name of her forthcoming attraction has not been decided upon.

Universal Newsettes

Production work on Eddie Polo's new serial for Universal was begun during the week of February 3. The title of the subject has not been announced, neither has the nature of the play been made known. Jacques Jaccard is the director, and Eileen Sedgwick will be Polo's leading woman.

Harry Carey, leading man for Universal, is planning a tour of the United States, where he will appear in several hundred different theatres, it is announced. The recent tour of Eddie Polo made such a hit, it is said, that Universal has determined to send Mr. Carey on a similar tour. Whether other Universal stars will follow Carey is not announced.

Following a rest of several days, Dorothy Phillips has planned to start work immediately on a new Universal production under the direction of Allen Holubar, which will be known as "Ambition." The date for beginning work was tentatively set for February 8. Her most recent production, "The Heart of Humanity," is now ready for release, and it is claimed this is the greatest picture in which she has played.

Priscilla Dean has finished her most recent picture, "Raggedy Ann." She announced on February 5 that she is planning a rest of several weeks before starting another production.

Vitagraph News Bits

Production work on a new serial for Vitagraph, starring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, has been started at the Vitagraph studios under the direction of J. A. Bauman. The story was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph,

Margarita Fisher, American Star in "Molly of the Follies"

Noah Beery, in the Role of Sam Wong with Nazimova in "The Red Lantern," a Nazimova Production and Cyrus Townsend Brady. Its title has not been announced. The company left Los Angeles on February 5 for Tuckee, Cal., to film some snow scenes.

R. N. Bradbury, Vitagraph serial director, was taken ill with influenza on Monday, February 3. It was not believed at that time that the attack was dangerous.

Larry Semon, Big V Special Comedy star, director and author, has returned from New York, where he held a number of conferences with Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, relative to future productions under his direction. He announces that his contract, which was originally for one year, has been extended to three years, and that one of his first productions under the new contract will be a comedy suggested by Mr. Smith.

Bessie Love has finished production on her latest play, "The Wishing Ring Man," directed by David Smith. The title of her next picture has not been announced.

Fox Studio Doings

The Frank Lloyd company has about completed production of the latest Gladys Brockwell picture, entitled "Fifty-Fifty." The play will be turned over to the cutting department for titling and editing on or about February 8, it has been announced. One of the most recent scenes filmed in the picture was a fierce fight between Billy Scott and Billy Sheer, two of the principle people in the cast. Also, a large number of street scenes in downtown Los Angeles have been filmed, and it is said that when the production is thrown on the screen that numerous people will appear in the "action" who never dreamed they would get into the movies.

Al Ray, under the direction of Art Rosson, is about the middle of his filmpay, "Up Against It." Rosson, it will be recalled, was at one time a director for Douglas Fairbanks, and he will endeavor to make the Al Ray picture one of his best productions, it is said.

Peggy Hyland has finished production on her latest screen vehicle, "The First Man." The picture was finished under the direction of Lynn Reynolds, and Pell Trenton is her leading man. It is not announced what her next story will be.

Much comedy resulted at the Fox film plant during the initial week of February when Fred Fishback started into to make a comedy called "High Life in Jail." He had a jail set all fitted up, but it looked more like a drawing room than a prison "tank." There were easy chairs, a piano, victrola and elevators to take the men from the "tank" to the dining room above. Mr. Fishback's characters will in the completed picture refuse to be known as jail birds, but as "guests" of the institution.

About Metro Players

Albert Capellani, leading Metro director and who last week finished Madame Nazimova's superproduction, "The Red Lantern," will leave for New York on Sunday, February 9, having finished his contract with Metro, it is announced. Mr. Capellani will organize his own company upon reaching the eastern metropolis, it is understood, but details of the new organization were not made known in Los Angeles this week. The picture just completed for Madame Nazimova is said to be the most pretentious production ever filmed on the Metro stage. The cutting and titling began this week. It is not announced as yet how soon the subject will be released.

Joseph W. Engle, treasurer of the Metro company, arrived in Los Angeles on February 5 for an indefinite stay.

Emmy Wehlen, Metro star who has been working in the East, left New York the first week in February for Los Angeles, and she is expected to begin work on a new production at the West Coast Studios at an early date. The name or nature of her initial production at the Metro Hollywood studios has not as yet been announced.

Paramount-Artcraft

Ethel Clayton, working a play that has not as yet been named, finished production on the new subject the latter part of this week, or on February 7. The play was filmed under the direction of George Melford, and two prominent people in the supporting cast are Irving Cummings and Lou Cody. It is not announced when Miss Clayton will begin work on a new production.

Lila Lee has started work in a picture to be directed by Irvin Willatt, being her first production since returning from New York. The play has been numbered, but not named.

Bryant Washburn co-starring with Shirley Mason has reached the middle of his new production under the direction of Donald Crisp. This play, in accordance with the plan recently adopted at the Lasky studios of not naming pictures until production is completed, has not as yet received a title.

Here and There

Dorothy Dalton has begun work on a new play at the Ince studios at Culver City. It is a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, and is a society drama. Among those included in the cast are Forrest Stanley, H. E. Herbert, Dell Boone, Elsie Larimer and Hal Clements. Victory L. Schertzinger is the director. The title of the play has not been announced.

The Mary Pickford company will transfer its activities from the Sunset studios on Sunset Boulevard to the Brunton studios on or about February, it was announced on February 5. Miss Pickford's contract calls for only one picture in her present location, she said, although the popular impression has been that she intended to produce a number of subjects at the Sunset studios. The Jack Pickford company is now producing at the Brunton plant, but it is said that his company will work independently of that of his sister. Production work on Miss Pickford's first picture for First National, "Daddy Long Legs," will be completed within two weeks, or just a few days before she moves to the Brunton lot. The company during the week of February 3 spent most of the time on location, filming a number of scenes at the Los Angeles Orphan Asylum.

Clara Kimball Young was taken suddenly ill on Wednesday, February 5, and did not appear at the studio for her usual day's work. It was announced at the time that she suffered only from a severe attack of cold, although the rumor gained credence at the studios that she had influenza. Miss Young had just begun production on her first play since finishing "Cheating Cheaters," which will be titled "The Love Quest." The story was written by Lenore Coffee, and the new picture, it is announced, will be presented under the personal management of Harry Garson. Monte Katterjohn assisted Mr. Garson and Miss Young in passing final judgment on the continuity. William P. S. Earle, and his brother, Piney Earle, have been engaged to direct the picture.

THE ENCHANTED RUG (Film Rights Reserved)

Once upon a time there was a hotel named Alexandria, and on its be-marbled floors there was a large rug of oriental design and texture which had the power to cause everyone who stood upon it to talk in millions. And many learning of this came and stood thereon, and right away they talked prosperous.

Then after many years the film men heard of this enchanted rug, and came and sought its power, and its fibre has been worn by the feet of all the magnets. Word of the power of this wonderful rug spread to the players, and they walked across the rug. The influence was so great that capitalization was immediately discussed. Word continued to be sent broadcast, and now the rug is constantly covered, it having taken on the appearance of the busy aspect of an ant hill, whereby the state of California may benefit by the filing of many corporation papers.

Because of the centralization of the financial interests of the film industry on this rug, a great divan has been set alongside where writers for the press may sit to glean the news of the day.

And so was born the Independent Order of Sitting Bulls.

Which picture would your patrons prefer?

That's easy!—you say—there is but one choice—anyone would prefer the picture with more contrast, color, depth, because it's more realistic and natural.

The two illustrations show the difference in scenic effect of the same picture, one projected on an ordinary screen, and the other on the wonderful

ARGUS CRYSTAL BEAD SCREEN

THIS new type of screen, and the results it assures, cannot be classed with any other—it is entirely different, and better. The screen is made of tiny crystals which look like very small pearl beads. The beads absorb and reflect light from the projection machine in such a way as to give greatest depth of focus, color, realism and charm to the pictures. It eliminates "fade-away"; insures bright, clear pictures when viewed from almost any angle, and will make every seat in your house a good seat. The Argus Screen may be washed with warm water without streaking—it will last for years.

Use of the Argus Crystal Bead Screen in your theatre—making your reel life more real—will cause your patrons to appreciate the pictures more; secure favorable comment; the people will go to the "movies" more often; and they will prefer your theatre because of the better projection

Just a few comments from exhibitors who are using the Argus Crystal Bead Screen:

"My patrons are unanimous in their praise of the clearness of my pictures. I consider the purchase of the Argus Screen the best investment I have ever made."

"Our electrical engineers tested this and several other screens and decided in favor of the Argus screen as being by far the best."

"I have tried quite a number of different curtains at all prices. In fact, this is the fifth curtain we have installed in our theatre, so you may realize that the best is none too good for our patrons. The Argus Screen is satisfactory in every respect."

"We installed an Argus Bead Screen six months ago and have since washed this screen with warm water and flushed it thoroughly with hose, and it is just as good today as when it was installed. We think it is the best screen that money can buy. Projection cannot be beat. Buying of this screen is money well spent."

"We cheerfully and heartily recommend the Argus Screen to the Moving Picture Exhibitors in general on account of its 80% more clear efficiency."

While comparatively new, the Argus Crystal Bead Screen has already been installed in many high-class picture theatres. Usually an exhibitor will arrange for one after seeing the actual results in comparison with ordinary screens.

It is a wonderful screen, and offers you a wonderful opportunity to get much good free publicity, better attendance and more profit.

Be the first in your locality to adopt this progressive idea. It will pay you well. Just fill in and mail the coupon below for further information and details.

Where Is the Responsibility?

THINGS are progressing very nicely. We have been able to publish during the past few weeks letters from various men who are well posted and have definite ideas as to how efficiency in the projection room should be improved.

That improvement is necessary is a foregone conclusion and is acknowledged, but how it should be brought about is a question to be further discussed.

Whether this grading or classification should be forced by the authorities or whether it should come from within the I. A. T. S. E. or other organizations embracing the projectionists is the question.

We are fortunate in being able to publish herewith a letter from Mr. P. Barber, the Electrical Inspector, and a man of authority among the motion picture theatres in the Province of Alberta, Canada. Mr. Barber has had the opportunity of observing first-hand conditions as they exist and through talking with projectionists has absorbed their attitude toward their work:

"In the NEWS of February 1 there is a letter from W. B. Allen, of this city. I wish to reply to that letter by way of adding a few words to the discussion started by H. T. O'Brien, of the Westinghouse Company.

"Mr. Allen and I have been intimately acquainted for a number of years, and in thanking him for mention of my name would say that if all projectionists were as progressive as he is, producers, exchangers and exhibitors would have much less to complain about than they have at present.

"With his letter, though, I do not fully agree. It is my belief that improvement is entirely in the hands of local unions. The union is in a position to educate its members as a whole, either by general debate, instruction classes, or by lectures given by outsiders, such as power house engineers or equipment experts. The union has jurisdiction over all men within its territory. It is constantly in touch with these men. At the regularly monthly meetings these members gather together for business purposes, and a part of that program could easily include a short discussion on some new product in the motion picture field.

"A government can establish standards only in accordance with present knowledge. Those standards will be good or bad according to the intelligence of the men working within a certain territory, for whom the standards were compiled. If the unions, which we all agree hold the best men in the industry, would so educate the majority of their members to be worthy of a high standard, governments will not be slow to see the need of improved methods nor behind the times in putting them into force.

"In closing, Mr. Editor, I would like to ask for more discussion on this subject. W. B. Allen seems to want to shift the responsibility onto the shoulders of others outside the unions. Unions have been the means of raising the standard of projection to what it is today; it is only logical to include that unions can now make a government high standard possible."

That a province, a State or a city can arrange examinations to be passed by all applicants before they are given a license which allows them to operate a projection machine is only right. This should be done, but the actual classification of the applicant is not the duty of the authorities, for all they can do is to set a certain examination, which when passed proves nothing except that the questions have been answered in a sufficiently satisfactory manner. Preparation for this examination may have taken a week or a month, or the applicant may have walked in, taken a chance and gotten through—a case of good luck.

The union, however, is to our mind in a better position. They know their members personally. They know the ability of each one. They know how much actual experience each man has had. They know how much interest each takes in his work. They know whether a certain man is shiftless and is a time-clock worker, or whether he works with the good of the theatre at heart—in other words, whether Jones is a real man or whether Smith is a piker.

Trouble among themselves? Why should there be? The union stands for the maximum of efficiency and will not stand for the man who is a vandal or time-clock puncher, as we understand it. Why, therefore, should they object to refusing a card to the inefficient, the loafer or the man who is being carried along by the organizations at the expense of the rest? Personally, we think that locals in general would refuse, for unless we are much mistaken, they are working for greater ability among their members.

Why, therefore, should they hesitate to elect or appoint a committee whose duty it would be to pass on the ability of its members and grade them. There certainly could be no hard feeling, for justice would be done. All criticism would be done away with and we would have men in the projection rooms of the various theatres whom we would know had ability.

Experience should be demanded. Every man who holds his card should have spent a certain length of time as an apprentice under an experienced man. This would be a guarantee that the holder of a card had the practice necessary before he took charge of the machine.

It is a case of the public safety. The safety of your families and our families as well as the very family of the projectionist in the projection room. Ability, knowledge and practice should be demanded by the entire industry and particularly by the union.

What do you think?

E. K. GILLET.

Questions
AnsweredCurrent Effect on the Positive Crater of the
D. C. ArcBy G. F. Benkelman
Speer Carbon Company

IN the various magazines devoted to the moving picture industry the subject of the relationship of the brightness of the positive crater of the D. C. arc with the current has been discussed from time to time by operators and projection engineers. Some of the opinions held by authorities on the D. C. arc are: That the amount of light per unit crater area is independent of the current used for the same kind of carbons. Increasing the current on a D. C. arc increases the candlepower per unit crater area and also the crater area.

Mr. Blondel* said that although the maximum brilliancy of the crater was independent of the current flowing in the arc, yet that the average brilliancy of the incandescent portions increased both with the intensity and density of the current, until the crater was well saturated. If, he said, the value of the current be suddenly varied, the intrinsic brilliancy undergoes a temporary and very appreciable variation which may reach 10 per cent and which diminishes gradually until the dimensions of the crater are so altered as to restore the surface of emission to the value it ought to have for the new current. He considered that the heating of the crater only took place at the surface, and that the temperature of volatilization was only reached by a very thin superficial film.

The following article deals with the subject which will be of interest not only to the technical man, but gives many practical operation conditions to the operator in the moving picture projection room.

In making the tests described in this article, the carbons were burned in a Standard moving picture lamp house. The condensers were omitted allowing the light to go from the positive crater unobstructed to the test plate whose center coincided with a horizontal line extending to the center of the positive crater.

Figure 1 shows the exact set-up. The angle of the positive crater and the separation of the carbons were maintained in the same relative position, by noting the coincidence of the image of the carbons through a pin hole in the side door on a screen with established marks. About two inches from the pin hole, a condenser was mounted and this served to sharpen the picture of the arc and the crater on the screen. The candlepower of the arc taken from the test plate as shown in Figure 1 was measured by a MacBeth illuminometer. To transform the alternating current supply to direct current for the D. C. arc, a Martin 140-ampere rotary converter was used. This machine delivered a constant D. C. potential of eighty volts, and series resistance was used to keep the arc steady. Very steady operating conditions were thus obtained, which were very necessary to get uniformity in results.

Two standard grades of projector carbons, A and B, which have been used by thousands of operators throughout the country, were tested and in all cases, Hold-Arks were used for the negative carbons. For the $\frac{5}{8}$ and $\frac{3}{4}$ size of positive carbons, size 7/16 Hold-Ark was used, while for the $\frac{7}{8}$ size positive carbon a $\frac{1}{2}$ Hold-Ark was used.

Curves No. 1080 and 1081 show the relation between candlepower and amperes. It is to be noted that the candlepower of the $\frac{5}{8}$ carbon is greater than the $\frac{3}{4}$ and that the $\frac{3}{4}$ is greater than the $\frac{7}{8}$ at the same current. A reason why the smaller carbon might have a higher candlepower is, that the radiating surface and the cross sectional area of the larger carbon is greater; consequently, more heat is conducted and radiated away from the crater. The crater area for the same current increases with increasing size of carbons as is seen in curves 1082 and 1083; therefore, the amount of light per unit crater area decreases with increasing size of the carbon, assuming that the mean hemispherical candlepower is proportional to the candlepower in the one direction taken, and the test plate utilizing only a portion of the light from the crater will have a higher intensity projected upon it, the smaller the size of the source. Let it be understood, however, that the amount of light or the intrinsic brilliancy per unit crater area of the different sized carbons should be very nearly the same when the craters are well saturated.

To prove in another manner that the smaller sized carbon has a higher candlepower at the same current, two arcs were burned simultaneously, so that the light from either arc could be thrown upon the test plate. When the light from a $\frac{5}{8}$, $\frac{3}{4}$ or $\frac{7}{8}$ positive, burning at the same current, was compared with the light from the standard lamp in the illuminometer, a very decided difference was noted. The light from a $\frac{5}{8}$ carbon was even brighter than a $\frac{3}{4}$ though burning at a somewhat lower current.

The interesting part for the projectionist is shown in the curves 1080 and 1081 that the most efficient illumination is obtained when the carbon is burned just below its penciling point. By penciling point is meant that current which will heat the carbon to redness its full length from the crater to the holder, so as to cause it to oxidize or burn to a smaller diameter than the original carbon. See figure 2.

For the two grades of carbons A and B which were tested, the penciling points were found to be sixty-five amperes for $\frac{5}{8}$, eighty for $\frac{3}{4}$ and 100 for $\frac{7}{8}$. Figure 2-A shows a carbon just starting to pencil while figure 2-B shows the carbon fully penciled.

Noticing curve 1081 again it will be seen that burning a $\frac{5}{8}$ carbon at sixty amperes will produce the same illumination as a $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch carbon at sixty-nine amperes, therefore, it would be unwise to produce poor economy by using a $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch at sixty-nine amperes, but the transverter should be made to give sixty amperes for $\frac{5}{8}$ -inch carbons of the same grade. Not only does the $\frac{5}{8}$ -inch carbon produce the same light at sixty amperes as the $\frac{3}{4}$ at sixty-nine but the lens system will utilize more of the light from the $\frac{5}{8}$ -inch carbon due to the fact that the smaller the source of light the greater the efficiency of the lens system. Curve 1083 shows that the crater area of a $\frac{3}{4}$ carbon at sixty-nine amperes is greater than the $\frac{5}{8}$ carbon at sixty amperes.

To give grade A and B carbons a rating as to current would be as follows: Fifty-five to sixty amperes use a $\frac{5}{8}$ carbon, seventy-five to eighty use a $\frac{3}{4}$ and ninety to ninety-five use a $\frac{7}{8}$. For instance, suppose a machine gave a current of seventy amperes, what carbon should be used? A $\frac{5}{8}$ carbon should be used, stepping the machine down by suitable series resistance or voltage control to sixty amperes. In other words, to get efficiency the carbon should be burned between the limits given. For the projectionist to find the correct current to burn his carbon, he should by increasing the current on a particular size of carbon find its penciling point, and then use a current of five less. Another statement can be made like this. Burn a carbon at the maximum current it will stand without penciling.

No definite rule can be given as to the current ratings of the different makes of projector carbons, for every grade will have a different penciling point, depending on the specific resistance and the composition of the carbon. A carbon whose specific resistance is high will have a low penciling point, while if specific resistance is low the opposite is true.

The relation of crater area to amperes as shown by curves 1082 and 1083 is very interesting. The crater area increases with current and at the same current and voltage the larger carbon has the larger crater area. When the penciling current is exceeded, it causes the crater to overlap the end of the carbon and a condition of unsteadiness will occur. Figures 3 and 4 show the effect of current on the size of the crater area.

The arc voltages are 13/32 arc length varying with current as on curves 1084 and 1085 shows that it increases with current, which is an unusual condition. Generally the D. C. arc, especially the D. C. street-lighting arc has an arc voltage curve which decreases with current. Many points were taken to determine arc voltage for the different currents and also for the different sized carbons. It would seem that different arc voltages for the different sizes at the same current should have been obtained, but with the large variation it was impossible to plot an individual curve for each size.

The efficiency curves also on curves 1084 and 1085 give an idea as to the tendency of the efficiency of the arc. The watts per candlepower are very low and do not represent the true value due to the fact that the candlepower was taken in one direction only, and is not the mean hemispherical candlepower. However, assuming that the mean hemispherical candlepower is proportional to the candlepower taken, these curves again verify the statement previously made, that the maximum efficiency is obtained from a given sized carbon when it is burned just below its penciling point. The $\frac{3}{4}$ carbon curve on No. 1085 curve plate shows that burning it at sixty-nine amperes would be very poor economy.

Curves 1086 and 1087 show the relative burning or consumption rates of the different sizes. The curve marked cubic inches per hour for $\frac{5}{8}$, $\frac{3}{4}$ and $\frac{7}{8}$ gives the consumption rates on a volume basis. The values have been calculated from the individual burning rates of the $\frac{5}{8}$, $\frac{3}{4}$ and $\frac{7}{8}$ and the amount consumed for each current was practically the same for each sized carbon. curve was therefore drawn to represent the volume of carbon consumed for each current.

The burning rate of the $\frac{5}{8}$ grade B carbon in cubic inches per hour at sixty amperes is less than that of a $\frac{3}{4}$ at sixty-nine, still the same horizontal candlepower is produced from carbon at the respective currents given. Another economy is then added in favor of the $\frac{5}{8}$ at sixty amperes, besides the power input, namely the amount of carbon consumed is less.

The points brought out in the discussion of the curves can be summarized as follows:

1. Candlepower is directly proportional to the current within the limits of operating range.
2. Within the working range candlepower decreases with increasing size of carbon, at a given current.
3. The maximum efficiency is obtained, when a carbon is burned just below its penciling point.
4. Crater area is directly proportional to the current for a given size carbon and increase with the size of the carbon at the same current.
5. The arc voltage increases directly with the current.
6. The volumetric burning rate of carbons varies directly with the current and is independent of the size of the carbon at a given current.

Bernard Schneider Dies at Age of Fifty-one

ONE of the real pioneers of the motion picture industry departed from our midst on January 24, at the age of 51 years, after an extremely active life, that produced remarkable results in the art. Owing to the wonderful inventive ability of Eberhard Schneider the cinematographic business has been greatly benefited by his many inventions, which numbered 50 and on which 38 patents have already been issued and the balance are now pending.

Mr. Schneider was born in Breslau, Germany, March 15, 1868, and came to this country in the latter part of 1895. He became a citizen of the United States in 1905 and as such was a firm supporter of the United States Government in word and deed.

Mr. Schneider's career was a remarkable one and he was experienced in all lines of the business, having connected himself with the Wonderscope Company in April, 1896, then with the Eden Musee in December of the same year, where he operated the Joly Cinematograph, the first machine in use at the Eden Musee. He also developed and perfected his first projecting machine during the Eden Musee engagement and used it there until the end of 1898. The press of those days quite frequently mentioned the results produced on the screen at the Eden Musee by Schneider's first projector.

He then became a general exhibitor in the various theatre circuits throughout the East, meanwhile giving close study to the problems in the art and producing many devices of great benefit to the motion picture industry. Tiring of the exhibiting business, he decided to devote his entire time and energy to developing and benefiting the business and started a laboratory and workshop at 175 East 96th Street, New York City, in 1904. This was a very small place and in five years his business increased so that he

How Westinghouse Helps the Producer

We comfortably seat ourselves in a "movie" theatre and watch an absorbing tale of romance or adventure unravel before our eyes. Yet we little realize how intimately the name, Westinghouse, is intertwined with our delight.

William Fox Studios

produce pictures with great artistic and mechanical perfection. Their productions are universally popular. When a "set-up" is taken, requiring artificial illumination, such as night scenes or other interior work, you will find Westinghouse apparatus assisting in the job. Two Westinghouse Motor Generator Sets are used to supply direct current for studio lighting.

Perfect Illumination is secured with this arrangement, and the directors and "movie stars" work with the encouraging knowledge that the lighting effects are the best—while the camera man is assured that no flicker will interfere with the distinctness of his photography.

The utility of Westinghouse products, so generally linked with huge power house and general industrial needs, has been demonstrated in even the field of entertainment. Write us and let us explain how we assist producers in their lighting problems.

Chemical Fog

By J. I. Crabtree

ATHIRD cause of fog is mixing the developer too hot. Heat accelerates the rate of oxidation of the developing agent especially after the carbonate is added, and if the concentration of carbonate is high, even if the developer is mixed in the right order, it will give fog if mixed warm. In the case of developers containing no bromide used for testing the quality of plates and for developing under-exposed negatives, it is absolutely necessary to mix the developer with cold water if a minimum of fog is desired.

Oxidation products are usually formed in the developer on keeping, though most developers will keep for a long time if kept thoroughly stoppered in a full bottle free from air.

A developer should at all times be as colorless as possible. In the case of an elon-hydroquinone developer, the fog produced usually varies in proportion to the color.

C. Impurities in the Chemicals Used.

Fogging agents may be present as impurities in the chemicals used as follows:

(1) Oxidized products of the developer formed during manufacture. If the elon, hydroquinone, or pyro used is strongly colored the presence of fogging agents may be suspected, though some colored samples do not give any more fog than colorless ones. The way to test a developer for fogging tendency is to mix two developers according to the same formula, one with the sample, the other with a pure sample and to develop unexposed strips of motion picture positive film, noticing the time required for fog to just appear at 70° F. The fogging power of the developers is then in the inverse ratio of the times required to produce fog.

(2) Impurities in the developer.

Many metallic compounds such as salts of copper and tin, metallic sulphides, etc., exert a powerful fogging action even when present in very minute quantities. Less than .01% of copper sulphate when added to an elon hydroquinone developer will cause fog on most positive emulsions. The precise action of such a minute trace of copper is not thoroughly understood, presumably it acts as a catalytic agent in accelerating the rate of oxidation.

Red rubber tubing when used for conveying developing solutions is a common cause of fog owing to the solvent action of the carbonate in the developer on the antimony sulphide present as a filler in the rubber.

Stale sulphite which contains sodium sulphate will cause fog indirectly, since the deficiency of sulphite will allow oxidation to proceed more easily.

Dissolved salts present in the water used for mixing the developer, unless of the above nature, seldom produce fog.

IV. Effect of Exposure and Time and Temperature of Development.

(a) When silver bromide is developed to metallic silver with a hydroquinone carbonate developer, sodium bromide is formed in proportion to the amount of silver developed.

In cases of full exposure, therefore, an appreciable amount of bromide accumulates in the developer and this restrains the formation of chemical fog. This can be shown experimentally by developing an unexposed and a fully exposed plate side by side in separate trays, for, say, 10 mins., when the unexposed plate will be seen to be fogged more than the unexposed portions of the negative. The extent of the restraining action of the bromide thus formed depends on the volume of the developer used, so that in order to reduce its effect to a minimum, a generous supply of developer should always be used and the developer well agitated.

(b) Fog appears after a certain definite time interval after development commences, depending on the nature of the developer, the emulsion and the temperature, and then continues to increase proportionally with the time of development. If the volume of the developer is small the bromide formed as a product of development will of course retard the production of fog as explained above.

As a general rule the temperature of the developer should not exceed 70° F. nor should development be unnecessarily forced in case of underexposure, because after the maximum contrast has been secured, that is when the latent image is fully developed, fog still continues to form. An ideal developer is therefore one which gives the maximum contrast before the emulsion begins to fog, and such a developer can only be found by trial with the particular emulsion used. As mentioned above, paraminophenol (Kodolon) most nearly approaches this ideal condition with negative emulsions, even at temperatures above 70° F.

Methods of Compensating for Chemical Fog.

(a) The amount of fog produced by a developer may be reduced by adding a soluble bromide or iodide to the developer before use. The precise action of a salt like potassium bromide is not thoroughly understood though it may be explained from physico-chemical considerations, the added bromide diminishing the solubility product of the silver bromide which is about to be developed. Potassium iodide probably converts a portion of the silver bromide grains to silver-iodide, which develops with difficulty.

(b) If the emulsion tends to give fog this may be compensated for by adding bromide or iodide to the developer as above, though in the case of photographic paper the color of the developed image is affected.

It is also possible to treat gaslight paper in a bath consisting of a mixture of potassium bichromate and sodium chloride, afterwards washing and drying, thereby converting any fogged silver grains to the unfogged condition, through the process diminishing the general light sensitiveness of the emulsion.

Dichroic Fog.

This is a particular kind of fog which occurs only on negative plates, films and lantern slides as a more or less uniform veil over the gelatine coating. When examined by reflected light the deposit appears yellowish green, while by transmitted light it appears reddish pink, hence the name "dichroic fog," which means "two-colored fog."

When examined under the ultra microscope the fog is seen to consist of ultra microscopic particles, which by chemical analysis have been shown to consist of metallic silver. The size of the particles determines their color by transmitted light, a fog which is red in color consisting of very small particles.

Dichroic fog may be formed either in the developer or in the fixing bath. In order that the deposition of the fog may take place in the developer some solvent of silver bromide, such as hypo, ammonia or an excess of sulphite or carbonate must be present, when under certain conditions the dissolved silver is reduced to metallic silver in a very fine state of division, particularly in the shadow portions of the negative, where no bromide is liberated during development.

Fine-grained emulsions in which the grains of silver halide are very small and therefore more readily soluble are most susceptible to this form of fog, especially if the development is forced, but the fog may be prevented by the addition of a little potassium iodide to the developer.

The difference between the cause of sulphite fog and dichroic fog appears to be merely a question of the time interval between solution and reduction of the silver.

The formation of the fog most generally occurs during fixing, especially if the fixing bath does not contain acid or if it is old and exhausted, when it contains an excess of dissolved silver and spent developer. It is possible to obtain dichroic fog with a fresh solution of plain hypo, in which case the silver salt dissolved by the hypo is reduced to metallic silver by the developer carried over by the plate to the fixing bath. This is especially true if the gelatine coating of the plate is abnormally thick and if the developing and fixing solutions are warm. In such a case the developer does not have time to diffuse out of the gelatine film before the hypo begins to dissolve away the silver bromide. A fixing bath containing ammonium chloride (which is added to accelerate the rate of fixing) will give dichroic fog unless the bath is kept acid, in view of the ammonia liberated by the action of the alkali in the developer carried over by the plate.

Dichroic fog never occurs in the fixing bath if a fresh acid bath is used and if the plate is rinsed before fixing. If dichroic fog still persists when using an acid fixing bath at a temperature not above 70 deg. F. the trouble lies in the developer.

was compelled to enlarge his quarters and moved to 109 East 12th Street, where he occupied two floors and basement until August, 1910. He was then compelled to look for larger quarters and purchased the five-story building at 219 Second Avenue, which he outfitted as one of the most complete plants for the producing of cinematographic machinery and in connection had a film laboratory seldom equaled. This establishment was most ideal and to his liking, giving him every opportunity to place before the public the creations of his fertile brain and from this place came some of the wonderful results of his invention, namely, the camera which enabled you to take 500 pictures per second, and also the single lamp dissolving machine.

To have met Mr. Schneider you would at once realize that he was a thorough gentleman, a genius and a scholar, who was able to speak on the merits of the industry in which he was so deeply interested, from any viewpoint you desired to question or discuss.

The business created by Eberhard Schneider will be continued by Mrs. Schneider, who has been closely interested in her husband's inventions and also by his son, Eberhard Schneider, Jr., who was associated with his father in later years and who also has shown marked ability in the electrical and mechanical field connected with the industry and bids fair to sustain the reputation made by his father.

Wonderful Example of Appropriate Motion Picture Music

IS the word "music" if employed as an accompaniment to the motion picture an "infant" or has it reached the stage of "perfection?" "Yes," and "No." It all depends where you are and what elements are influencing your decision.

Ninety per cent of our American picture houses will force a decision of condemning the word "music" into the stages of infancy. The balance of ten per cent, especially such houses as the Rivoli, Rialto and Strand of New York City, will beyond any doubt establish the fact that "music" as an accompaniment to pictures has reached its highest degree of perfection.

Most of the musical directors and exhibitors who are taking active part in the lay-out of their musical programmes are to my knowledge, or in the greater majority of instances, using facial value or the dominating action of the picture as a guide to determine the character and selection of music. It is most natural that during a chase, a galop must be played, or during the portrayal of a common Western barroom scene, a rag or one-step is found appropriate.

This is the "ninety per cent way"; the system which creates an atmosphere of the piano and drum days, when the drum was the spoken word of the silent drama. It is the method that was employed in the old school of "nickel showmanship."

S. L. Rothapfel, the wizard of constructive and refined photographic presentation, is the man who is, if not solely, at least more than partly responsible for the fact that music in the motion picture theatre cannot be condemned into the stages of infancy. He is the man who has created this system of selecting a musical accompaniment solely guided by the thoughts, feelings and sentiments of his audience. S. L. has resigned from the post of guiding the destinies of two of the greatest motion picture theatres, the pride of New York's Broadway (Rialto and Rivoli), but the good work is being continued by Hugo Riesenfeld.

The editor of these columns who has had the pleasure of attending last week's performance at the Rivoli was fully convinced that Riesenfeld's system is worth prevailing, although Rothapfel has left. The musical accompaniment to "BREED OF MEN" was a masterpiece and the acme of perfection. It represented in every detail the feelings and thoughts of the vast audience. It was a typical William S. Hart production. It was all "he and his horse." I particularly remember one Arizona gambling scene where Hart has lost all his money and the other member of the card game persuaded him to stake his horse. The musical accompaniment which was of a sinister character during the gambling scene immediately changed to a pathetic and sentimental melody, although the gambling was still in process. Everybody knew how painful it would be for Billy to part from his horse, and the audience surely thought of that. At least, I did. Hart's mournful and facial expressions during the tense moments of decision, and the thoughts of the audience who fully sympathized and understood him, were the factors which influenced the musical selection, and not the facial value or dominating action (gambling scene) of the picture itself. The pathetic musical accompaniment was therefore most appropriate.

In another scene where Hart found out that the girl he loves was forced out of her home, an act in which he registers determination (as only Hart can do) to bring the man responsible for this action to justice, the orchestra played a hurry. Again the music represented the thoughts of the audience, because everybody knew that he (Hart) was out for trouble, and everyone was aware of the fact that Billy does not adjust matters in a way to require music for a death scene. These are but two instances which distinctively establish the fact that the Rivoli was nothing but a Fata Morgana of the people's thoughts and feelings.

Not only for the feature, but also on the scenic and the rest of the programme, the musical accompaniment interpreted the sentiments of the audience. During the tank scene in the News Weekly, the orchestra played "Ragging the Scale," a composition belonging to the class of overnight hits; one of those numbers which would prompt the majority of any audience to condemn those who performed it to the stone age, and although "Ragging the Scale" belongs to the popular class of musical literature which creates a riotous hit on Monday and dies on Wednesday, it was nevertheless the most clever selection of music during the entire show. The musical construction of this number is known to everybody, and I don't believe it is necessary to talk about it. During the crawling ups and downs of the giant tanks, the trombone played the ups and downs of the chromatic scales which predominate that composition, going up and down with the rising or falling tanks, and adjusting its tempo in perfect unison with the movement of the tanks.

How many leaders would dare to accompany a scenic with such compositions as "La Cinquantaine," by Gabriel-Marie, or "Ave Maria," by Schubert, numbers of bygone days, condemned by those who are striving to appear musically educated by discussing the modern Russian Korsakow or the up-to-date Victor Herbert. It is this old stuff which mothers have sung alongside of cradles that makes an audience forget the shattered world and creates an atmosphere of unpremeditated happiness. It is the music that the people know, and no exhibitor will ever reach the acme of success, unless he is able to parallel his mind, his sentiments, thoughts and feelings with those of his audience.

I earnestly suggest to every exhibitor who is in doubt as to the above statement that he visit such houses as the Rivoli, and convince himself that there is really no other way of reaching the height of perfect film presentation.—THE EDITOR.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

- 1—"Razz-Berries-Jazz." One Step. The boys say "There has never been anything like it since 'Too Much Mustard,' by Frank Banta, Jr. (Richmond, 149 W. 45th street, New York).
- 2—"Rainy Day Blues Jazz." Fox Trot. You've had all kinds of blues but this is the one with real "Pep." By Frank Warshauer. (Richmond.)
- 3—"Bone Dry Fox Trot," by Van Campen Heilner. This number by the composer of the famous "Get Off My Foot" fox trot, is already making its mark with the New York dance orchestras. Its style is an absolute contrast to "No Conversation" fox trot. Although modest, we are in justice compelled to say it's a smashing hit. (Chappel & Co., 185 Madison avenue, New York.)
- 4—"Madelon, I'll Be True to the Whole Regiment." English version of the celebrated French soldiers' song, "Quand Madelon," One Step. The song the boys sang in the trenches and the song they will sing upon their return home. (Jerome H. Remick & Co.)
- 5—"Valse Boston," by R. Drigo. You hear it everywhere. The slow waltz sensation of the season. Based on the world famous "Drigo Serenade." Don't fail to program it. (Carl Fischer, Cooper square, New York.)
- 6—"Pahjamah"—Oh, Mr. Leader, don't waste a minute. Rush your order for this Oriental, musical, novelty (fox trot, one step, intermezzo). Those who have heard it exclaim, "A bigger hit than 'Indianola.'" (J. W. Stern & Co., 102½ W. 38th street, New York.)
- 7—"Fireflies," by Chas. K. Harris. The new "1919" waltz. The composer speaks for this number. (Chas. K. Harris, Columbia theatre bldg., New York.)
- 8—"My Cairo Love"—An Egyptian Serenade by the writers of "Jealous Moon" and "My Paradise." It has that genuine Oriental flavor combined with an irresistible haunting melody that makes it wonderful for concert or dance. The best Oriental number of the year. (Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio.)

9—"When the Boys Come Home," by Oley Speaks. America's heart song at the war's end. Every band and orchestra in the United States ought to play it. A rousing march. (G. Schirmer, 3 E. 43d street, New York.)

10—"Dear Old Pal of Mine." The song by Lieutenant Gitz Rice, made famous by John McCormack, arranged as a waltz. (G. Ricordi & Co., 14 E. 43d street, New York.)

11—"Kisses." Valse D'Amour. The waltz with the melody that no one can forget. It is haunting, lingering, dreamy. A craze from coast to coast. The waltz that everybody is humming; you hear it everywhere. Go where you will, play what you like, but give them "Kisses" Waltz every day. (Sam Fox.)

12—"You Can't Beat Us If It Takes Ten Million More." The doughboys' answer to the kaiser, by Ernest R. Ball—great one step, introducing "For Dixie and Uncle Sam." (Carl Fischer-Witmark, Orchestra and Band Department.)

Another Inquiry About the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers

Musical Editor,
Motion Picture News.

Dear Sir:

A couple of days since, a man dropped into my place of business, claiming to represent the "American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, located at 7 South Dearborn Street, Chicago." He intimated that there should be license paid by me on account of the music played at my theatre, his point being that this music was deriving benefit for me; was copyrighted, and that I was liable to be sued for damages.

I employ two musicians, ladies, one pianist and one violinist, and these young ladies buy their own music, selecting same to suit themselves. Nothing of that kind has ever been brought to my attention, although this man says there is a law protecting the above named association since 1909.

Have you any information on this matter, and if so will you please send same to me at the earliest possible moment. If not, can you advise me where I can get reliable information regarding this matter.

Yours very truly,

W. M. Fay.

In reply to our correspondent's inquiry, we again reprint a complete list of all those publishers who are not members of the American Society and whose music for that reason can be performed free of the tax now being collected by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. We shall also repeat the necessary information regarding this said society, although we have explained it in detail various times.

The American Society is a body of musicians, publishers and composers who claim the copyright privilege of restricting the public performance of their compositions, but to those who wish to publicly perform their copyrights they demand a tax or fee. To the motion picture industry this is based upon the seating capacity of the theatre.

To those exhibitors who believe that this tax is oppressive, and in order to keep free of legal action, it is essential that the selection of music performed in their theatres is restricted to the above mentioned catalogues, because these publishers are not members of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, and they further believe that when they receive payment for the copies of their music that the privilege of free public performance goes with it.

To those of our readers who are not paying the tax of the American Society, we would advise them that ignorance of the law is no protection or defense from breaking of same. It is, therefore, suggested that a manager or his musician have it clearly stated when purchasing music, even from these publishers, that the rights of public performance are not restricted and prohibited.

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In-addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under this heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

"Happy Though Married," with Enid Bennett (Paramount-Ince.—Directed by Fred Niblo)

IF your patrons don't get up from their seats and roar laughing then nothing you can show will please them. You can search the market right and left, but you can hardly find a more cleverly constructed, or more skillfully handled farce comedy. Besides making a spectator laugh to his heart's content, it keeps him in high suspense.

The complications in the plot are caused by the fact that the wife of the hero's brother, a Spanish beauty, cannot speak English. The two brothers are in Mexico prospecting and they strike it rich. One of the brothers, the younger and hero of the story, comes to the state to try and sell the mine. He gets married to his young sweetheart, heroine of the story. The heroine gets hold of a book on how to hold the affections of a husband and puts the teachings into practice. She pretends she is going to visit her aunt, but jumps from the other side of the train and returns home. In the meantime the other brother returns from Mexico married, having eloped with a Spanish beauty. The hero meets the train. On the way the oldest brother drops off at a clothing store to get a new suit of clothes. The hero goes home with his wife. Seeing the husband coming with the woman whose photograph she had once discovered in his coat pocket, the heroine hides in another room. The hero leaves the sister-in-law in the house for a few minutes and goes out in search of his belated brother; the latter has lost the address and could not find the place. In rage over her husband's supposed unfaithfulness the heroine determines to leave him. While preparing to leave the house, however, the sister-in-law apprehends her and, unable to understand English, takes her for a burglar. First she attempts to stab her with a stiletto; the two women struggle, eventually the sister-in-law succeeding to lock the heroine up in the closet. Of course, in the end, everything is explained satisfactorily, but not till they have made everybody in the audience die laughing. Released February 2. Length, five reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"False Faces," with Henry B. Walthal (Arctcraft-Ince Special.—Directed by Irvin V. Willat)

THERE are several reasons why this offering should please picturegoers, especially those who enjoy the kind that are strong and virile. To begin with, it is full of high speed action; again, due to the logical development of the story, it keeps one in continual suspense; further, it contains no gruesome or repulsive situations; and as it appeals to the sympathetic feelings, it should have a wide appeal.

"False Faces" is based on the stage play of the same name by Louis Joseph Vance. It is not a war subject, but a spy melodrama which takes place in the war days. The hero of the story is supposed to be the same as that of "The Lone Wolf," a crook play by the same author, but as having reformed.

In order to avenge the atrocities committed by the German against civilians, the hero assumes a fictitious name and joins the German secret service. During a battle he crawls into the Allied lines and gives the commander some valuable information about the German movements. He is now inducted into the Allied Intelligence department and is sent to America to watch the machinations of the German spies.

While on the boat, he becomes acquainted with a young lady of the Allied service, who, without disclosing her identity, entrusts him with a secret document. Several exciting episodes take place on the boat between himself and the German spies, who make an attempt to take the paper away from him. He is overpowered and thrown overboard, just as a submarine is torpedoing the ship. While floating, the submarine comes to the surface on that spot and he finds himself on the deck. After succeeding to convince the Germans that he is in the Emperor's service, he is taken inside and cared for. Later he manages to sink the submarine, hiding on the American coast, himself escaping.

The story is skillfully handled, and leaves a deep impression. Released February 16. Length, 7 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"Made in America"

(W. W. Hodkinson.—Pathe.—Eight One-Reel Episodes)

HOW the American boy was trained and made into a soldier so formidable as to meet the German, born a soldier, in the field of battle and beat him, is interestingly depicted in these eight reels. The process is shown in detail. The first reel deals with the draft; the second with the questionnaire; the third shows the drafted civilian entering the army life, and so on down the line, each reel showing a particular stage of his training until the Rookie becomes a Veteran.

The picture is presented in a drama-like form, with its hero, a young man who is eager to serve his country; the soft villain, a man who kicks and howls, because he thinks he has been deprived of his rights as a free citizen by the draft; and the heroine, the sister of the hero whom the villain loves. In the end the villain becomes a hero and marries the girl.

Outside of the patriotic element the picture contains plenty of humor that will draw hearty laughs. On the whole, it is interesting and entertaining; and as it is to be released one reel at a time, complete in itself, it can easily fit into a program. The first reel to be released February 17.—P. S. Harrison.

"THE LOVE AUCTION"—FOX

Pearson Picture Charged with High-Power Emotionalism

"THE LOVE AUCTION," Virginia Pearson's latest production for Fox, offers her what is probably the most lachrymose role in her long line of emotional dramas. It is the story of the wife who discovers too late that her husband is a drunkard. Her love has been the possession of another man all the while, and at length she accepts his. Need it be said that things come to a grand climax when the husband discovers he is not the proud father he thought he was? He dies midst his bottles, while wife and lover are free.

This has been produced with evident care to drive home the fact that it is an emotional drama. Often the players' acting borders on ranting, but this apparently constitutes a form of entertainment that a certain portion of the public lean to. Certainly Miss Pearson and Hugh Thompson, Edwin Stanley and Thurlow Bergen register the deepest sincerity in their various heavy scenes, while the plot itself consists of elements and situations dear to the gallery. In this class of audience the subject will find its most enthusiastic reception.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 9.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

Virginia Pearson will be the star to be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, the photoplay in which she appears being entitled "The Love Auction." It is her latest production to bear the William Fox trade-mark. In "The Love Auction" this well known emotional actress has the role of a young woman who is courted by two men. On the one hand is love, on the other money. Lea, the woman in question, believes herself justified in choosing the latter and enters into a marriage with the wealthy Dorian Vanderveer. For a time she is happy. Dorian gives her everything she desires and shows her all attention due from a loving husband. But one day, Lea makes the terrible discovery that her husband is addicted to drinking. She is roused from her slumbers early in the morning by the sound of him stumbling about downstairs. She descends to see him in a state of utter intoxication.

He proves, moreover, to be an habitual drunkard and before long his conduct becomes unbearable to Lea. Then the other suitor of the days gone by appears, now a wealthy engineer. The old love between the wife and this man revives, and is even fostered by an apparently disinterested fourth party and the husband himself. Matters become greatly involved and the picture leads to a stirring climax, the details of which will not be revealed here. Miss Pearson appears resplendent in the leading role, giving her whole self to the part and acting with a fine show of emotionalism. She is ably supported by Hugh Thompson in the role of the husband, Edwin Stanley as the other man and Thurlow Bergen as the fourth party.

CATCH LINES

A play in which mother love, born of misery, paves ways to a final happiness.

In which a poor girl marries for money and achieves instead a heartache.

How a society millionaire drove his wife from the path of virtue through his terrible desire for drink.

An emotional drama in which the road to content lies through a double tragedy.

In which a drunken husband's remorse releases his wife from misery.

He was infuriated with drink and struck his wife down before a number of guests—see her answer to his brutal attack in the absorbing Fox photoplay, "The Love Auction."

Do you believe in heredity? The man in "The Love Auction" did not, but his blood finally told.

She sold herself to the man who bid the highest sum in money instead of the man who offered the greatest love.

THE STORY

Lea Montrose, guided more by impulse than good judgment, marries Dorian Vanderveer, a very rich member of society, but after her marriage she discovers she has become the wife of a drunkard. In response to her tearful protests, Vanderveer promises to reform, and does make an effort to curb his appetite for drink. But again and again he falls from grace, until Lea has lost all hope for happiness.

Heart-broken and discouraged, she is easily persuaded by a woman friend to take part in the rites of a new cult which society has taken up. The head of this cult is Dr. Studholm Charters.

In the midst of Lea's unhappiness a former suitor, Jack Harley, whom Lea had rejected because of his poverty, returns to New York, having made a great success in the West. Lea finds his companionship the one bright spot in her life.

Later Lea becomes a mother, and the birth of the child inspires Vanderveer to take the drink cure.

Dr. Charters, suspecting the child is Harley's, demands that Lea give herself to him as the price of his silence.

Vanderveer soon learns of Charters' demand on Lea. He resumes drinking, seeks out Charters and kills him. Then, after exonerating Lea of all wrongdoing, Vanderveer completes the chapter by ending his own life.

SUGGESTIONS

The greatest possibilities of this production are concentrated in its various sensational angles. It is a picture that immediately lends itself to such type of exploitation. Witness the various characters: The wife who gives herself to another man; the husband who kills himself in a drunken orgy; the bogus philosopher who brings on the catastrophe, and who covets the wife himself. Any one of these three characters can be played up in the advertising and with results that will surely fill the bill when it comes to sensationalism. Word your advertisements accordingly then.

If you operate in a vicinity where the prohibition forces have the upper hand, you can get some good advertising out of a co-operative campaign with any local prohibition organization. If you follow this course, the central character in your advertising should be the inebriate husband and the foremost argument the sorrow and tragedy that his habits brought on his wife.

In Virginia Pearson you have a star known for her emotional ability, while in Hugh Thompson, Edwin Stanley and Thurlow Bergen you have a supporting trio that is generally well known.

"THE LION AND THE MOUSE"—VITAGRAPH SPECIAL

A Special of the Full Blooded Variety

DON'T make the mistake of handling "The Lion and the Mouse" the same way you handle a regular program attraction, just because it has been placed on the regular program release list; it is a full blooded special of the 100% variety, and it deserves to be treated accordingly.

From point of interest, human appeal, action, and suspense, it is without exaggeration the best Vitagraph released in a long time; and if you handle it with the right atmosphere around it, such as music, stage and other effects, there is no reason in the world why you should not pack them in and please every one who sets foot into your theatre.

Almost all of you know the story, which has been presented as a roadshow attraction and in stock; it has also been put in a six reel picture in 1913 by Lubin; it drew large crowds and gave excellent satisfaction. But don't let this fact prevent you from booking it because, in the first place, those who saw it, have already forgotten about it—De Mille's "The Squaw Man" is an example; in the second, the generation that has grown up since then comprises the largest number of today's show going public; and, thirdly, because the production end of this one is far superior, due to the natural advancement of the Art. The continuity, handled by Mr. Edward Montagne, is flawless; the interior settings are the last word in beauty; the direction, of the best; and, in fact, everything needed to make a picture that would appeal to everybody is there.

Play this picture longer if you can, thus helping shut out some of the junk that is flooding the market.—Released Feb. 24.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Adapted from Charles Klein's stage play of the same title.

Directed by Tom Terriss.

Produced under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith.

AD TALK

Charles Klein's big stage success, "The Lion and the Mouse," with one of the screen's most talented and fascinating stars, Alice Joyce, in the role of Shirley Rossmore, the featured role in the production, will be seen as a special attraction at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week. Most of you have seen this example of all that is best in the modern stage play, enacted on the speaking stage. Those of you who have will be the more anxious to see the screen version with Miss Joyce in the principal role.

The theme is fascinating and impelling, and the picture filled with dramatic situations and swift in action. It is the story of the master financial mind and power of the universe brought to his knees by a girl—not by a frail girl, but by a pretty, clever and determined American girl, who knew a wrong had been done not alone to her own kin but to the world, and who set about not only to undo the wrong, but to undo it in a manner that would make such wrongs impossible in the future to others.

"The Lion and the Mouse" with Alice Joyce in the featured role supported by Conrad Nagel, as leading man and other artists of the silent drama, is all that speaks for entertaining via the screen. The author, the star and the play are all examples of the best in dramatic interpretation. It will be at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week.

THE STORY

The story opens at a meeting in New York of directors of a great railway system called to consider a "ruinous" injunction issued by Judge Rossmore. John Burkett Ryder, reputed the richest man in the world and, correspondingly, powerful and unscrupulous, presides, and assures his railway colleagues that within a year Judge Rossmore will be off the bench—impeached. And Judge Rossmore is a man of fine attainments, moderate fortune and irreproachable character.

At the same time, in Paris, Shirley Rossmore, his beautiful daughter, is making a reputation writing stories and happy in the love of Ryder's only son, Jefferson, when newspapers tell of the impeachment of her father and summoning her home. Jefferson, ignorant of the genesis of the charges, pledges his father's aid in vindicating his sweetheart's father. Ryder marshaled his minions and his millions. Shirley had only her wits and Love—love of a sweetheart and of a father being crushed to disgrace and death by this Octopus. And Right triumphed over Might, and the Mouse brought the Lion to his knees.

CATCH LINES

How a financial lion was brought to his knees by a girl mouse who defied his wealth and power.
The sudden halting of a senate impeachment trial brought to light a love story of an amazing sort—see it told in all its dramatic force in "The Lion and the Mouse."

How a girl's fight for the right triumphed over the might of a man's millions.

In which a girl saves her father and the man she loves in a fierce struggle against financial plotting.

ALICE JOYCE
VITAGRAPH

A Vitagraph special feature in which Alice Joyce is starred. You know the high quality of Vitagraph pictures and when we say a Vitagraph "special" we mean something unusually good—as this adaptation of Charles Klein's famous play will reveal to you at the _____ theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a production on which you can use your advertising brain. The measure of your success with this run will depend in a large measure on the manner in which you place its advent at your theatre before your patrons. They have all heard of the stage play of the same name and they have all heard of the reputation of Charles Klein, the playwright who wrote the original stage play. And your patrons all know Alice Joyce, the star. Play all three of these up strong. They are all worth all the good things you can say about

"THE MIDNIGHT PATROL"—SELECT

Production of High Quality; Strong Action Story

THOSE of you who cater to patrons that like the strong, full of life sort of photoplays could not make a mistake in booking this picture. The production end of it is of the highest quality; so is the entertaining. It appeals to the better sort of emotions.

Although it deals with opium and white slave traffic, as carried on in a Chinatown, the picture is in no wise offensive. It could be shown to a discriminating family audience without fear of a kick.

The offering was reviewed extensively in last week's issue, on page 1061. In that review it was said that the best way to handle this picture and get the best of results would be to secure the co-operation of your local police. This does not mean that the picture cannot stand on its own merits, but that by having their co-operation you could draw still larger crowds.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Patrolman Terrance Shannon....Thurston Hall
Patsy O'Connell.....Rosemary Theby
Wu Fang.....Kino
Jim Murdock.....Charles French
Minnie.....Marjorie Bennett
Officer Michael O'Shea.....Harold Holland
"Chink" Ross.....William Musgrave
Sing Bok.....Yamamoto
Sergt. Joe Duncan.....Harold Johnston
Story by Julien Josephson and Denison Clift.
Directed by Irvin V. Willat.
Supervised by Thomas H. Ince.
Photographed by Dwight Warren.

THE STORY

Wu Fang, a notorious Chinese, is plotting with Jim Murdock, a corrupt politician, to keep the police from interfering on a night when a big shipment of opium is expected. The only man they fear is Terrence Shannon, sergeant of the Chinese vice squad. In order to keep Shannon from conducting a raid, Murdock issues orders to have Patsy O'Connell held captive. Patsy is a young woman who has charge of the Chinese mission house. Murdock notifies Shannon that Patsy is being held captive and that she will be harmed unless Shannon keeps away.

Terrence decides to conduct a raid, however, and notifies Police O'Shea to come with the reserves if he is not back at a stated hour. With "Chink" Ross, a ne'er-do-well white man, Shannon finds the secret entrance to Wu Fang's den. When they enter the den Wu Fang and his assistants jump on Shannon and overpower him.

Just as the Chinese are about to throw Terrence into the pit O'Shea arrives with the reserves. In the fight that follows Wu Fang is killed and Murdock is taken prisoner. As soon as his bonds are cut Shannon hurries to release Patsy, and the next day when he is notified that he has been made chief of police for conducting the successful raid, Patsy promises to be his wife.

AD TALK

What would you do if you were told to obtain two hundred large black rats at short notice? That is what happened to Irvin V. Willat, who directed "The Midnight Patrol," which Select Pictures announces for the theatre on

One scene in this vivid story of police and Chinese life shows a rat pit in which two hundred large black rats are swarming. The Chinese were about to throw a young policeman into this pit when the reserves broke into the underground den and saved his life. To make this scene as realistic as possible, Director Willat searched Los Angeles, where the picture was made, for several weeks before he obtained the quantity and quality of rats he required. The result is a number of very vivid scenes, which were admirably photographed under Mr. Ince's personal supervision. "The Midnight Patrol" was produced by Thomas H. Ince.

An all-star cast is to be seen in the big special attraction, "The Midnight Patrol," which is announced by Select Pictures for the theatre on —. Thurston Hall has one of the leading roles. Mr. Hall will be remembered for his excellent work in a number of very recent film successes, while Rosemary Theby, who became a star overnight with Vitagraph, is cast for another important part. Marjorie Bennett, little sister of Enid Bennett, a Paramount star, is also seen in this picture, while others who appear in important parts are Charles French, Harold Holland, William Musgrave, Kino, Yamamoto and Harold Johnston.

SUGGESTIONS

First and foremost place the name of Thomas H. Ince as the producer of this picture, well in the front lines of our advertising.

Call your patrons' attention to the fact that the police department figures prominently in "The Midnight Patrol" and that the policeman in the cast of the production are policemen in real life.

The co-operation of your police department in putting over this offering could be gotten by letting it share in the net profits.

A special performance for the benefit of the department might be suggested.

Call attention to the fact that "The Midnight Patrol" is a special production and that it abounds in thrilling night raids by the police department.

"SUE OF THE SOUTH"—BLUEBIRD

Don't Say Any More About This One Than You Have to

WHILE playing this picture, I would suggest you say as little about it as possible; it possesses no particular merits that would impress or even interest many of the present day picture goers; the whole plot is a collection of old situations rehased and regrouped to form a story.

It is the same old stuff about the young heroine who becomes an orphan. Before her death, the mother writes a letter to the man she first loved but did not marry, owing to the objection of the parents, to take care of her daughter. Of course, for the convenience of the story, this man always happens to be hard-hearted, in order that the heroine may be given the opportunity of softening him. So it happens in this instance.

In view of the several splendid Bluebird offerings released recently, the weakness of "Sue of the South" stands out more prominently; but since it is a clean picture and contains no gruesome or repulsive situations, perhaps it would do you no harm to run it on one of your weak days.—Released Feb. 3.—Length, 5 reels.—*P. CATCH LINES

The story of a Southern aristocrat who loves the "pore white trash" better than social position.

Edith Roberts, star of many a Bluebird picture, in a charming story of life in the Southland, in which she proves that barriers reared by feuds and money are nothing when it comes to love.

How the influence of an impetuous mountain girl changed the lives of three men who thought they were impetuous.

All pigs aren't dirty. The one in "Sue of the South" is pink and clean and the moral effect he has on certain characters whose brains are rather dirty is delightfully shown in this current Bluebird photoplay.

AD TALK

The announcement of an Edith Roberts Bluebird is always a pleasant task. It is the good fortune of the theatre to play the next one, "Sue of the South," on ——. Edith Roberts, who has already starred in "Set Free," "The Love Swindle," "Beans" and other popular dramas.

How the destinies of Shad Peters, Henry Peyton and Donald Peyton were all turned in different channels by the hand of vibrant, clever, entrancing little Sue of the South is the big heart throb of this story. Can you imagine anything more romantic than the love of Tennessee Sue for her mountain playmate—a lad of fire and steel in his devotion to the honor of his feud-fostering ancestors and to Sue? Can you imagine a more brilliant climax of action than little Sue quelling a big factory labor riot? Can you picture a more whirlwind experience for a girl who has grown up in the big, simple, silent places of the Cumberland mountains than to be whisked to the millionaire mansion of her uncle and his dashing young son? And can you see how Sue could make a wiser choice in her selection of a husband than—but we mustn't tell you. See "Sue of the South," directed by Eugene Moore, written by C. J. Wilson, Jr., from a story suggested by Maude Reeves White.

In the cast are George Hackathorne, James Farley, P. S. Pembroke, Ruby Lafayette and Marie Van Tassel.

Clean Comedy Situations Make This a Likely Winner

YOUR patrons should derive healthy enjoyment out of this picture. It belongs to the farce class, in which clean comedy situations are well distributed throughout. Mr. Desmond's first appearance in this new program, therefore, may well be considered as being stamped by success.

The star impersonates convincingly the young student who takes life rather easy. The plot uses a baby as the basis to bring about complications. In order to play a joke on the hero, his friend, secretary of a children's welfare league, sends him a baby, attaching a note on it as if coming from a despondent mother. While the baby is in the house and crying, the hero's sweetheart, in company of her mother, calls. Many comical situations arise from the butler's as well as his own efforts to hide the baby. On top of this, the uncle, who supplies the money for his education, comes to town and brings along with him a fat girl as a bride for his beloved nephew. In the end, everything works out satisfactorily, the hero marrying his own sweetheart.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

A bashful bachelor and a baby have a great time in "Life's a Funny Proposition," a comedy drama that will tickle your funny bone.

A bawling baby and a confirmed bachelor can afford some pretty good comedy if they will. William Desmond wills it that way in "Life's a Funny Proposition," his latest comedy drama.

Louise Lovely, the pretty little Australian actress, assists William Desmond in putting over the comedy in the star's latest picture.

The way of a helpless bachelor with a baby.

AD TALK

One of the funniest true-to-life stories ever told on the screen will be related in pantomime to the patrons of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, when "Life's a Funny Proposition," William Desmond's starring vehicle under the Exhibitors' Mutual program, is shown. It's a comedy drama of the highest type and one that is guaranteed to leave you in a happy frame of mind and drive away the blues. Jimmie Pendleton, the character portrayed by Mr. Desmond, whom you all will remember for his work in some of the screen's biggest successes, is a bachelor, bashful in the company with women and care-free and as congenial a fellow as you would want to meet. The girl comes into his life, however, and Jimmie "falls" hard, but not before a number of humorous episodes are enacted as the result of a practical joke played by one of Jimmie's best pals. In support of Mr. Desmond that little Australian actress, Louise Lovely, a star in her own right, appears as the pretty little lass who makes a contented husband of a confirmed bachelor.

THE STORY

A young bachelor, Jimmie Pendleton, fights shy of the women folk until he meets the "one" girl and then he falls hard. Mary Austin is the girl and her blonde beauty sure did hit Jimmie "between the eyes." But long before Jimmie and Mary decide to live in a cottage for two, a series of events come into the life of Jimmie that prove that "Life's a Funny Proposition." It all comes about after a friend of Jimmie's, who is secretary and treasurer of the Belgian Babies' War Relief, leaves one of his charges on Jimmie's door-step and Jimmie is obliged to care for the youngster, because his friend, after carrying out the joke, meets with an automobile accident and is confined to a hospital for several days. Jimmie is so embarrassed that he is afraid to tell of the new member in his household. Jimmie's uncle, who had gathered together nearly all the money that "grew" in Kansas, has selected a country girl for Jimmie's "partner for life," but—well—it wouldn't do to tell how this funny proposition is solved, but we will say that Jimmie and Mary are united to live happily forever after.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the star of this production, William Desmond—the fact that he is one of the best comedians on the screen. Also mention the fact that "Life's a Funny Proposition" is a thorough comedy drama. In connection with the cast, make mention of the names of Louise Lovely and Jay Belasco, both of whom are known favorably. Miss Lovely having been starred in several productions and Mr. Belasco having attained popularity in short comedy subjects. The direction was done by Thomas N. Heffron, who is credited with some of the screen's biggest productions.

"SUE OF THE SOUTH"

THE STORY

Sue Gordon was an aristocrat. Born to all the purple that Crawford, Tennessee, ever laid claim to. Still her pet was a piggie and her playmate was Shad Peters—poor white trash. Now, the Peters and the Peytons only spoke through the barrels of their rifles and that from behind ambuscades and cabin walls. For Shad's "Pop" had been killed by a Peyton, and the mountain code would not allow Shad to have any other ambition in life than to be revenged on his father's slayer. So it had been in the mountains for generations.

Shad would have dearly loved to go to Nashville to get an "edication," but he durst not. The rest of the Peters would think him a coward. Then fate took a hand. Sue went to the city to live with Uncle John Peyton, as hard a man as ever lived. Even his own son was against him in his relations with his men.

Sue brought her piggie along to town and she also brought the first ray of real joy into this frosty household. But when she was called to account for her interest in Shad, who was "just one of those Peters, with whom no Peyton could have any kind of relations at all," Sue fled to her beloved hills and to Shad's cabin. Only then did John Peyton realize that his one enjoyment in life was slipping away from him. So the old man and his son pursued. When they came to the Peters shack, flames were spitting from a rifle and, upon establishing a truce, the old man found that the undaunted defender was none other than little Sue, while Shad lay, white but determined, at her feet with a bullet in his shoulder. It took a lot of oratory to straighten things out in the feud-cursed county, but it all came out right in the end.

"AS THE SUN WENT DOWN"—METRO

Edith Storey in Screen Version of Baker's Play

"AS THE SUN WENT DOWN" is an adaptation of one of George D. Baker's own plays. It is a Western and contains a story of heroism and villainy worked out against a background provided by several quaint characterizations. That these characterizations are not sustained throughout the production is the picture's main fault. We have bits of humor here and bits of villainy there, none of the bits being very securely tied to the story proper. The author, in truth, has assembled a number of characters typical of Bret Harte and moved them about in a story that contains about as much continuity as a work of this famous author.

However, despite its lack of unity, "As the Sun Went Down" offers entertainment of an average order. The spectator must be hard of head and heart, indeed, who cannot find something to enjoy in the various moves of Colonel Billy, Faro Bill, Pizen Ike and Gin Mill Jack.

Miss Storey appears to advantage when her role gives her the prominence due a star, while the supporting cast acquits itself most creditably.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 10.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

"Colonel Billy" Edith Storey
Faro Bill Lewis J. Cody
Arbuthnot, known as "The Tarantula" Harry S. Northrup
Albert Atherton, the "sky pilot" William Brunton
Gerald Morton E. A. Turner
Mabel Morton, his wife Frances Burnham
Sal Sue Za Su Pitts
Gin Mill Jack F. E. Spooner
Pizen Ike Alfred Hollingsworth
Ike's wife Vera Lewis
Piety Pete George W. Berrell
Adapted by George D. Baker from his stage drama of the same name.
Directed by E. Mason Hopper.
Photographed by William Thompson.

CATCH LINES

"As the Sun Went Down" is a story that might have appeared in a volume of Bret Harte. It is full of homely, human interest, real touches of adventure, romance and villainy abound in it. To miss it is to miss one of the real treats of the season.

Edith Storey in her latest and best Metro picture.

A wonderful mixture of homely comedy and western drama in this adaptation of George D. Baker's play. It puts the usual western into a colorless shade when matched beside it.

AD TALK

Edith Storey will be seen on the screen of the theatre on _____ week in her latest Metro picture, entitled "As the Sun Went Down." This is an adaptation of one of George D. Baker's plays. Mr. Baker, now Metro's director-in-chief, is the author of a number of successes for the speaking stage, some of which have already made their way to the screen. "As the Sun Went Down" he adapted himself for screen use and has acquitted himself creditably of the task of carrying out his original work in its new form.

"As the Sun Went Down" is filled with those unique and homely western characters that are always reminiscent of Bret Harte, that author who wrote of the West as no other. In the persons of "Colonel Billy," Faro Bill, The Sky Pilot, The Tarantula, Sal Sue, Pizen Ike and Piety Pete we find an array of homely, real human nature. Their experiences in the drama presented here form a series of events that add still further lustre to their names and which keep the spectator in a constant state of pleasure.

Miss Storey appears as the "Colonel Billy" above mentioned. An ex-dance-hall girl who has reformed and who lives alone on the edge of Rattlesnake Gulch until such time as the man she loves gains enough gold from his mine to claim her as his wife. The drama in which she is more or less catapulted into the midst of, is one of swift action, swift real old western action of the kind that appears all too infrequently on the screen these days. It is presented with due regard to atmosphere, proper effect and the highlights are many and well handled. All in all, it is a picture that can well be called notable.

THE STORY

"Colonel Billy," a reformed dance hall girl, lives on the edge of the village of Rattlesnake Gulch. The reason for "Colonel Billy's" reformation lies in the person of Faro Bill, whom she loves and who has promised to marry her when he has accumulated sufficient funds. The girl is shunned by all the women of the town, but accorded a certain amount of respect by the men because she is known as a "dead shot." Three strangers come to the gulch, Atherton, a preacher in ill health; a stranded actor and his wife and child. The townsfolk as a joke send the minister to "Colonel Billy's" house to board.

The actor stakes out a claim and soon begins to strike "pay dirt." Arbuthnot, a gambler, possessed of letters that reflect unjust suspicion on the past of the actor's wife, arrives and plans with Pizen Ike, a good-for-nothing of the town, to put the actor out of the way and divide the claim between them. Pizen Ike insults the wife before her husband and is straightway challenged to a duel. "Colonel Billy" insists on taking the actor's place, as he is a tenderfoot and a poor shot. Bill, also arrayed on the side of virtue, is struck over the head by Ike and cast into a deserted mine. In digging his way out he strikes gold.

"Colonel Billy" wounds Ike in the duel. Bill's appearance on the scene upsets him and he retreats, receiving another shot in the shoulder just as he stumbled over the cliff to his death. Arbuthnot is driven from the town, Bill discovers his relationship with the minister, who proves to be his brother, and all ends happily, for Bill's mine pays enough to enable him to marry Colonel Billy at last.

SUGGESTIONS

Bring out the homely western atmosphere of this production to the greatest extent possible. You might name over some of the unique characters of the cast in your advertising. The mere repetition of their names, together with the statement of the fact that the picture possesses an atmosphere akin to that of the works of Bret Harte, will arouse considerable interest in the production.

Miss Storey has not appeared on the screen for some time. Feature her heavily.

Special interest is attached to the picture in that George D. Baker, now Metro's production manager in chief, wrote it as a stage play. He himself produced it some years ago. This fact might be the basis of a story on "As the Sun Went Down." Mention that Baker was a well known stock director and that he himself made the adaptation of his play to the screen. It is a news item that will be of interest to all picturegoers.

Metro has furnished a good supporting cast. Lew Cody and Harry Northrup are well known on the screen. Mention their names in your advertising.

"CHILD OF M'SIEU"—TRIANGLE

Film Lacks Heart Interest, Action and Suspense

MOST of this picture's interest lies in the simple appearance of Baby Marie Osborn. Even her usual childish tricks, however, fail to create any laughs; while hardly any of the situations appeal to the emotions. The story lacks heart interest, action or suspense.

The plot is based on Browning's poem, "Pippa Passes." In this poem, the heroine, by singing a happy song, prevents people from doing wrong; in the picture, the little star is given a similar role. In addition to this, towards the end of the picture, she brings together two lovers.

Released Feb. 16.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Marie, Child of M'sieu.....Baby Marie Osborn
Philp, a man of Bohemian taste,
Philo McCullough
Absinthe, lovable, though a derelict,
Harrish Ingraham
Claire, a plaything of fate.....Claire Alexander
The Lace Lady, a flirt.....Katherine MacLaren
M'sieu.....The Tavern Keeper
Adapted from Browning's "Pippa Passes."
Directed by Harrish Ingraham.
Photographed by W. W. Nobles.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have offered Miss Osborn's pictures in the past, be sure to mention her former successes, such as the Pathe productions—"Winning Grandma" and "Milady of the Beanstalk."

Baby Osborn's pictures always make an appeal to the children. A "kiddies" day might appeal on this. In exploiting to the youngsters, concentrate on the episodes in this picture which display the pranks of children.

However, this show will particularly appeal to women folks and the "grown up" who like kid pictures. There are hosts of these. Emphasize that the story of this was suggested by Browning's "Pippa Passes." There's publicity value in the fact that this poem is well liked and well known.

Triangle provides attractive colored one, three and six-sheet paper on this. Certainly it can be used to your advantage.

The following verse clipped from the Triangle press sheet may be of use in advertising the feature.

Big folks and little folks,
Here's a picture made for you,
Of the thoughts of children
And the things they do.

Baby Marie Osborn
Sings a song that brings good cheer.
That you'll enjoy this picture
There's not the least to fear.

AD TALK

It is difficult to describe the charm of "Child of M'sieu," Baby Marie Osborn's latest starring vehicle, which is being presented at the _____ theatre on _____ nights of _____ week. For its allurements is undoubtedly due to its very simplicity. It is a pleasing little picture, clean cut and humorous.

A bit of pathos, a bit of childish glee—a bit of sentiment and human interest characters naturally harmonized with the colorful background of life in an Italian tavern, are all elements which feature largely in the pleasurable presentation of the "Child of M'sieu."

It is a rare treat to see the delightful little Baby Marie in an unpretentious role, a role which gives full scope to her unusual talents and offers her every opportunity to be her sweet childish self. This does not mean that Miss Osborn cannot act. Indeed, she interprets her character with rare ability that emphasizes clearly the value of a vivid childish imagination. Her acting is very realistic and appealing and attracts a great deal of sympathy.

Perhaps the story of the "Child of M'sieu" will interest you. Perhaps you'll find most entertaining her childish pranks. Grown-up children, large and small, mothers and fathers, and the hosts who have enjoyed Miss Marie's past performances, are sure to enjoy this unusual presentation of the fairy-like little star.

THE STORY

The story of the "Child of M'sieu," stirs the most prosaic imagination with visions of romance and adventure that will be realized to all who view the most admirable of child actresses, Baby Marie Osborn, in this her latest production. In fact, this photoplay is based on that poem of Browning's "Pippa Passes," which has fascinated a host of readers who delight in the sentiments so artfully expressed by this poet.

In the friendly atmosphere of an old Italian tavern, sheltered from the trials of throbbing temperamental life about her by the inn keeper, whose life is inspired by the verse quoted above, Baby Marie is introduced as the little ward of M'sieu. She is the little sweetheart of all who gather around the oak tables to drink to the sorrows or joys of their daily lives, or who visit there to continue their happy courtships away from the prying eyes of intimate relatives.

"Absinthe," the musician of the inn, whose artistic touch and expression have aroused the emotions and brought to a climax many love affairs in M'sieu's tavern, is Marie's constant companion. To while away the idle hours he relates many stories to delight her childish heart. And she endeavors to put into practice what she has heard and finally to imitate "Pippa," the little Italian singer whose songs drove away thoughts of evil and turned to good account all wicked designs.

It is then that the singing of the song of "Pippa Passes" by Marie, in a pathetic climax, calls back Philp to the straight and narrow path. Through her childish influence the lovers are reunited. And it was the song that her dear "Absinthe" had taught her that reveals to him the identity of Celeste as the little girl so long lost to him when drink had caused his degradation.

CATCH LINES

The cleverest little child actress on the screen will be seen in adaptation of Browning's "Pippa Passes."

Baby Marie is taught the song of "Pippa Passes" and then sets out to be a modern singer.

Two lovers who quarrel are reunited by the song of Baby Marie.

Do you recall Browning's poem, "Pippa Passes"? Visit the _____ theatre during the run of "Child of M'sieu" and see Baby Marie Osborn in her screen version of this classic.

"THE LONG LANE'S TURNING"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Story Is Improbable, But Should Please Great Number of Fans

THIS picture will satisfy a large number of picture goers in spite of the story's improbability.

That it will entertain is due to the sensible acting of Mr. Walthall as well as to that of the supporting cast; to the intelligent treatment; to the splendid artistic effects, and also to the clever twists the story takes. They arouse the interest and create suspense.

The theme is a love affair, in which the hero is presented as a reputable lawyer, while the heroine is the daughter of a judge. To save her father, who is accused falsely, she tells the hero she cannot marry him; she then offers to marry the man who brought the charges against her father. After many interesting twists the story takes, during the development of which the hero is made to go to the penitentiary for twenty years for burglary and attempt for murder—acts he did not commit—he is elected governor. In the end he is happily united to the heroine.

It is a clean attraction.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Directed by Louis William Chaudet.

THE STORY

Harry Sevier, a young lawyer, seeks a short cut to fame by the false stimulations of whiskey. His success is marked. He loses many a case until he seeks to defend Paddy the Brick, innocent of the crime of which he is accused, but who nevertheless is sentenced to a jail term because Sevier, lacking the spirit that whiskey always gives him, is unable to cope with the prosecution. Cameron Craig, a politician of an adjoining State, who loves Echo Allen, daughter of Justice Beverly Allen, is delighted by Sevier's defeat.

Meanwhile an important suit involving the immense distilling interests of Craig comes before Judge Allen, and Craig, feeling that the decision is going against his organization, seeks to get something on the judge which he might use as a club. He threatens to expose the judge unless he renders a verdict favorable to the distilling interests. The judge decides to meet the issue, but not before his daughter becomes aware of the facts. Paddy the Brick, released from jail, turns against society, and becomes a crook. Circumstances have it that he seeks the same night that Echo and Sevier arrive at Craig's home to rob the house. Echo doesn't recognize Sevier, nor does the latter recognize Paddy the Brick.

As Craig enters the room where Paddy and his pal are working on the safe a shot is fired, hitting Craig. In the confusion Sevier obtains the letters Craig stole from Judge Allen, and hands them to Echo, telling her to make her escape.

Governor Eveland, of the State in which they are jailed, takes his friend, Judge Allen, through the prison on an inspection tour. Judge Allen is attacked by a criminal whom he had sentenced, but is saved from injury through the intervention of Sevier, who, shorn of his whiskers, is not recognized by the judge. Harry escapes from jail and is later acquitted of the charge.

SUGGESTIONS

Henry Walthall's name should be played up big in connection with the advertising on this production. He is one of the screen's biggest stars and should come above all else in the public's mind. But in playing up the star do not forget the story—it has merit and is a typical Walthall vehicle, offering him a character role that brings forth all his capable acting along these lines. The supporting cast should come in for mention because it contains the names of some well known leading men and character actors. Call attention also to the mystery element that is played up strong in the development of the plot.

AD TALK

Henry B. Walthall is a sufficient incentive for patrons of the — theatre to pay it a visit on the — of — week. The star male character of "The Birth of a Nation" is coming to the — theatre on — of — week in "The Long Lane's Turning," and the management of the — theatre urges every one who can possibly attend the performance to be there. This is one of Mr. Walthall's greatest works and admirers of the star will agree with this assertion of the management of the — theatre. In the role of a brilliant young lawyer who is given to the excessive use of liquor, Mr. Walthall is given the opportunity to give vent to his wonderful ability as a character actor and in the interpretation of the role of the young lawyer, he justifies the praise so often accorded him as being the greatest exponent of character acting on the screen.

In Mr. Walthall's supporting cast there appears some of the screen's best known and most popular actresses and actors. Among them are included Jack Richardson, Joseph Dowling, Ralph Lewis, Mary Charleson, Vera Lewis, Melbourne MacDowell and William De Vault.

"THE MORAL DEADLINE"—WORLD

Familiar Yet Appealing Plot Is Basis of June Elvidge Vehicle

"THE MORAL DEADLINE" presents that story in which the rich father does his level best to ruin the marriage of his son, said son having contracted the marriage without his own social pale. June Elvidge is seen as the wife and, as usual, her performance contains a ring of sincerity and a high degree of emotionalism that manage to put the role fairly and squarely over. Miss Elvidge when handling the most artificial part is always sure of herself and by her very certainty has lifted many an artificial character to a truly interesting plane.

The plot of "The Moral Deadline" is patterned along popular lines and despite a number of licenses which the author has taken with the actions of human beings, it is so filled with incident and scenes of the "heart interest" variety that it seldom fails to direct a very strong appeal toward those whose emotions are easily touched.

Aside from this the picture is possessed of a realistic atmosphere and a varied background. Low dives, high dinners and waterfront saloons are not the least of the various interesting corners into which the author takes his audience. All the scenes have been photographed commendably.

Frank Mayo appears in the role opposite the star's and, as usual, gives a performance complete and effective in every detail.—Length, 5 reels.—Released Feb. 24.—Peter Milne.

AD TALK

June Elvidge comes to the theatre week in her latest starring vehicle on the World program, "The Moral Deadline." When we tell you that the scene of action of this drama is laid in New York with the world's most beautiful public park, Central Park, you will be able to draw your own conclusions as to the picture's scenic beauty. Frank Mayo is Miss Elvidge's leading man. This popular leading man has appeared in support of the World star in several productions and always gives a commendable performance. He will not disappoint his admirers in "The Moral Deadline."

"The Moral Deadline" has the sparkle and pep of all that is entertaining in the silent drama. Woven into the happier moments of the story are the human touches, the incidents that make some of our most popular works of fiction so entertaining. It is a story of love, of constancy and of joy. The management of the theatre recommends this picture to each and every one of its patrons. It will please all. In Miss Elvidge's support will be seen Ned Burton, Grace Stevens, Gertrude Webber and Muriel Ostriche, the clever little actress who has won fame on both stage and screen.

THE STORY

Two shop girls, Evelyn Merrill and her chum, Anna, while walking in Central Park, lose their hats, which fall into one of the many streams of this preserve. Harold Oaker, son of wealthy parents, comes to the rescue of the girls and an acquaintance is made. Young Oaker conceals the fact that his father is the most wealthy man in New York. He gives Evelyn a card which is mistaken for his own. It bears the name of the man who had wrecked his car a few hours before. Later Oaker calls on Evelyn and their romance ends in marriage. Oaker's father learns of his son's marriage and persuades his son to leave his wife. Oaker, Jr., agrees to go West for a year. He agrees not to bid his wife good-bye. After he has gone Evelyn attempts to find him and learns that there is no such person as Harold Carson, the same under which Oaker had married her. She returns to her position in the shops. Later a baby is born. Oaker in the mean time tries to forget.

Later he returns and finds that his wife has become a dancer. He has taken a position as reporter on a newspaper and during a raid of a disreputable place he finds his wife, and they are reunited.

CATCH LINES

When she danced at a stag dinner the Moral Uplifter was immensely pleased. When he found her performing similarly in an east side cafe he wanted her arrested to protect public morals!

Just what is the moral dead line? How far should a mother go to save the life of her child? See the answer in "The Moral Deadline," now on view at the theatre.

Her husband had professed the greatest love, but it was not long before she discovered that he had married her under an assumed name. Was he, after all, a scoundrel? See the answer in "The Moral Deadline."

Another June Elvidge picture, in which this actress has one of the most appealing characters of her career before the camera. And the always dependable Frank Mayo is in the opposite role.

Why should the morals of the wealthy and the poor differ? The Moral Uplifter in "The Moral Deadline" tolerated, even enjoyed, a dance in his own set when he condemned it in a public cafe. He is shocked by his senses in one of the most stirring climaxes the screen has revealed.

SUGGESTIONS

Undoubtedly the greatest asset of this production is its title. "The Moral Dead Line" is a corker. Displayed in large type in newspaper advertisements or in incandescents over the entrance of a theatre it will attract patronage in greater degree than the title of the ordinary feature. It also lends itself well to the illustrative style of advertising. Its very name suggests an allegorical picture of a woman (June Elvidge) hesitating on one side of "The Moral Dead Line." With appropriate catch lines beneath this should attract attention. This method of advertising the feature could be used in either newspaper ads or in special drawings before the theatre.

Another big angle to play up on this picture is its wide variance of scene. Showmen who follow the course of the New York plays will easily recollect Brady's "The Man Who Came Back" which is still touring the country. A good bit of the attraction of this play rested in its variety of scenes. It took the spectator all over the world, in fact. Scenes illustrating the various phases of the picture were stood in front of the theatre and they brought crowds. With the case of "The Moral Deadline" you also have a great number of scenes that could be played up if you plan to run the picture for any appreciable length of time. The old saying that "variety is the spice of life" would seem to apply in the matter of advertising.

June Elvidge is known for the emotional photoplays in which she appears. Stress this fact and mention some of her former successes. Nor do not forget Frank Mayo in the advertising. He is becoming better known with each release.

"MAGGIE PEPPER"—PARAMOUNT

Reviewer Thinks It Will Cause Walls to Bulge

WERE the entertaining values of each picture that is placed upon the market to weigh as much as those of "Maggie Pepper," you would surely think the millennium has come. With such attractions to back you up, you would not be wasting your time worrying how to attract even your regular crowds, as you do now, but you would be using your ingenuity in devising means and ways of caring for the overflow.

Miss Clayton has hardly ever appeared in as good a story. It is a crook comedy drama, so sound and substantial that the impression it creates clings long to the memory. The picture arouses strong interest and keeps one in continual suspense, and as the spirit of the story appeals to the good emotions, it leaves in the spectator a feeling of perfect satisfaction and happiness.

There are situations at the beginning of the picture that will make you mix the laughs and the tears at the same time. The heroine is given a human role, so your sympathy follows her throughout the picture.

The acting of Miss Clayton impresses one with sincerity. The supporting cast is composed of artists; the direction, photography and almost everything that helps to make the picture is of the highest standard, but whoever wrote the sub-titles should be warmly congratulated. They are little gems.—Released Feb. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

AD TALK

What O. Henry, Edna Ferber and other story writers have done for department store workers in literary form, Charles Klein did for the stage in "Maggie Pepper," and now Paramount has pictured the play as a screen attraction with beautiful Ethel Clayton as the star. The picture will be shown at the _____ theatre next _____.

"Maggie Pepper" was prepared for the screen by Gardner Hunting and directed by Chester Withey.

It would be difficult to select a more perfect cast than that chosen to support Miss Clayton in this photoplay. Elliott Dexter plays the leading role opposite the star. It is hardly necessary to call attention to his record for splendid work. He was leading man for Miss Clayton in "Women's Weapons" and has been seen in leading roles in many of Cecil B. DeMille's celebrated Artcraft specials.

Tully Marshall, a famous character actor, is cast for a heavy part and Raymond Hatton is an inimitable Hebrew drummer. His work is artistic to the last degree. Winifred Greenwood is excellent as the wife of the crook and the mother of little Claire. Edna Mae Wilson is seen as Claire, the child—a fine role. Marcia Manon, a skillful actress, has a good character part; Clyde Benson is the hated manager; Billy Elmer is a crook; Bud Duncan is a messenger; C. H. Geldart and Fay Holderness are detectives.

With such a cast, "Maggie Pepper" should prove delightful as a screen attraction.

THE STORY

Maggie Pepper is a department store employee with much ability. She has been caring for Claire, her dead brother's child, because the mother is more or less worthless. The latter marries again and demands Claire. Her husband is a crook and they plan to raise the girl as a "dip" or pickpocket. Maggie reluctantly lets Claire go and settles down to hard work. John Hargen, manager of the store, is anxious that his ward shall marry Joe Holbrook, the owner. Hargen dislikes Maggie because he knows that she realizes how inferior are his methods. Holbrook returns from Europe and meets Maggie.

He is impressed and when the manager discharges her hires her again. His fiancée gives back his ring in anger. Meantime Claire's mother is arrested for shop lifting and sent to jail. When she is released she tells Maggie her husband has planned to steal the child. That night Joe comes to plead with Maggie to return to his employ, she having resigned because she believed she was the cause of the breaking of Holbrook's engagement. He insists but she refuses. Then the kidnapping attempt is made. In the melee Joe is slightly wounded. He pretends it is serious and stays in the house over night. Next day he demands not only that Maggie shall come back to store, but marry him as well—and she finally capitulates. The miscreants are captured and all ends happily.

CATCH LINES

The story of a girl of the world who knew how to take care of herself and others besides. One of the realest dramas ever seen on the screen.

Ethel Clayton's latest Paramount picture—an adaptation of one of Charles Klein's plays—directed by Chester Withey, the man who made "The Hun Within" and "The Pursuit of Polly."

Ethel Clayton in a Lasky picture of the highest order—her support embraces some of the best known members of the Lasky stock company—members each with hosts of admirers.

A story of a sales girl in a big department store—a real insight into life "behind the counter"—more than that which you see when just making a purchase of a tie or a collar or a bit of lace.

SUGGESTIONS

Mention Ethel Clayton's previous Paramount pictures in connection with the exploitation of this production, as her other productions have generally been favorably received. "Maggie Pepper" was one of the late Charles Klein's notable stage successes. Use his name in connection with all advertising, as the majority of people are familiar with it, particularly when his dramatic death on the "Lusitania" is considered.

All those connected with the production of this picture are worthy of consideration. In the first place the supporting cast contains many names well known among the members of the Lasky stock company. There are Elliott Dexter, Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton and others whose many appearances in Paramount and Artcraft pictures have created for them positions approaching stellar calibre. Chester Withey is also widely and favorably known as a director.

In all advertising get into your copy that it is a dramatic story of city life, with many of the scenes transpiring in a large department store. Surely this is a novel locality and you might fashion the pictorial portion of your advertisement accordingly.

THE exhibitor who is a keen booker will avail himself of the "Exhibitors' Box Office Reports and Index to the Complete Plan Book."

This important department appears every issue and usually occupies four or more pages. In this issue it can be found on Pages 1236 to 1239, inclusive.

Every feature reviewed and released during the past three months is listed alphabetically, with comments that are proving very valuable to the readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The worth of the production as a picture and also its drawing value from the box office standpoint is carefully compiled.

In the index also appears the date of issue in which the original plan book was published, covering the subject in a thorough manner.

"THE WICKED DARLING"—UNIVERSAL SPECIAL

Strong Picture That Keeps Interest Alive All Through

YOU can bank on this picture pleasing your patrons: human appeal, action, thrills, suspense, and almost everything that helps make a picture interesting and entertaining will be found in this attraction.

The story introduces the heroine as a clever crook, but the love of a man causes her better nature to awake.

The picture is strong and keeps the interest alive from start to finish; and as it appeals to the pleasurable emotions, it leaves the spectator in happy frame of mind. It belongs to the class that makes a deep impression.

THE CAST

Mary Stevens Priscilla Dean
Kent Mortimer Wellington Playter
Stoop Conners Lon Chaney
Fadern Spottiswoode Aitken
Adele Hoyt Gertrude Astor
Written by Evelyn Campbell.
Directed by Tod Browning.

SUGGESTIONS

First give your patrons to understand that Priscilla Dean, the star of "The Wild Cat of Paris" and other big Universal specials, is the featured player in this production. Bring out the fact strongly, that the story deals with the underworld and with the adventures of the society crook. Be sure and mention the names of Miss Dean's supporting cast. Call attention to the wide range which is covered by the story's plot—that it takes you into the underworld, into the homes of the rich and through the Bohemian section of any large city. Mention the fact that there is a realistic fist fight between two of the prominent members in support of the star. Bring out the adventurous spirit of the play as a whole and—play up the name of the star.

AD TALK

Priscilla Dean, the fastest rising star in the photoplay firmament, is coming to — in another of her Universal Special attractions. This one is called "The Wicked Darling," and will play the — theatre on —. Anyone who has not enjoyed this star's vivid and versatile personality has not seen her. And anyone who has not seen her is to be pitied. But it is not too late. See "The Wicked Darling" and join the circle of Priscilla admirers. You will be the two million and oneth. The succession of "Kiss or Kill" and "The Wild Cat of Paris" will be made into a wonderful trio by the addition of "The Wicked Darling." And there are more just as good to follow.

"The Wicked Darling" is the story of a girl who tried to beat back to the straight and narrow path because she, all of a sudden, had learned to love a man who trod that path unswervingly. He did not know she had been a thief, and above all, he did not know she had the pearl necklace she had stolen from his fiancée still in her possession. She was afraid to give it back, lest he find out about her. And then an old associate in crime told the man after all.

Well, that's all of the story you ought to know until you see it. Evelyn Campbell wrote the story and Tod Browning directed it. And see this; Lon Chaney, Spottiswoode Aitken and Wellington Playter are all in the cast.

THE STORY

Kent Mortimer attends a ball with his fiancée. He tells her he is ruined and that he must sell even his household effects to keep his head above the financial waters. She coolly tells Mortimer their engagement is at an end, returning all his gifts, except a string of pearls, which she loses on entering her cab.

Mary Stevens, "The Wicked Darling," whose habitat is the underworld, snatches the gems from the limousine step and flees. She finds refuge in a home. Mortimer has returned to pay his cabby, and the girl enters without being questioned. There Mortimer finds her. She learns the story of the broken engagement. He thinks her a thief at first, but later allows her to go. She sneaks back later to steal the ring. She goes to work in a cheap restaurant as a waitress, living at a boarding-house not far away. One day Mortimer chances in the restaurant and their acquaintance is renewed. She takes two of the pearls to old Fadern and gives the money to Mortimer's landlady. Fadern and the gunman shadow Mary and ransack her room.

Not finding the rest of the pearls, the gunman jumps to the conclusion that Mary has them. In the struggle between the two men, Mary's real past is revealed and when she calls Mortimer sorrowfully casts her out of his life. As a last resort, Mary returns the pearls to Mortimer's former fiancée, who returns them, with a letter, to Mortimer, who then starts out in search of Mary. In their attempt to force Mary to reveal the hiding-place of the pearls, Fadern and the gunman nearly choked the girl to death. But Mortimer's arm is now well, and after a terrific fight, he rescues Mary and they go west with the prospect of happiness.

"BREEZY JIM"—TRIANGLE

Shows Its Age Plainly; Hot Stuff for Hero Worshipers

APPARENTLY this picture was made long ago, and if any one wishes to note the advancement of the motion picture art, "Breezy Jim" offers a good medium. In point of action, logic of story, photography, artistic affects and general handling, it falls below the standard of the present day offerings. Only people who like the hero stuff, irrespective of how such hero bests the villains, may like it; also some of the children.

The picture opens showing a convict escaping from jail. In the following scenes, in order to make the spectator think that the hero is the escaped convict, he is shown as dodging the guards. The hero reaches a mining town. An evangelist is shown there preaching against the demon rum. Towards the end, the fact is disclosed that the evangelist is none other than the convict; while the hero, a member of the secret service, sent there to apprehend the fugitive.—Released Feb. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Breezy Jim Crane Wilbur
Patricia Wentworth Juanita Hansen
Story by J. Francis Dunbar.
Directed by Lorimer Johnson.
Photographed by Barney McGill.

THE STORY

Patricia goes west to search for a real man. On the stage to Cayenne she meets Jim, a mysterious stranger, who protects her from the advances of the intoxicated driver. Jim is accompanied by an "old-timer," whom he has befriended. Later, in Cayenne, Patricia is again indebted to Jim for protecting her from an uncouth evangelist who has forced Cayenne dry. Jim follows the old-timer on a mysterious tramp to the back country, to find him the victim of the evangelist. He rescue the old man, but upon arriving in town the evangelist has convinced the populace that Jim is the guilty man. A lynching is prevented by Patricia and Jim is locked in jail.

With all who suspect him out of the way, the evangelist attempts to abduct Pat. But meanwhile the old-timer, who has recovered, discovers the circumstances and aids Jim in escaping from the lock-up. Jim pursues the evangelist and Patricia, and is successful in rescuing her and capturing her abductor. Jim forces the evangelist to submit to a clean shave at the point of his gun. It is then revealed that he is the escaped convict who long ago had robbed the old-timer of his gold. This wealth is restored to its rightful owner, and Jim reveals himself to Pat as special agent of the Department of Justice. She has found her real man.

AD TALK

Crane Wilbur, an old favorite of the silent drama, is coming to the theatre on _____ of _____ week in a western picture that presents the region west of the Rocky Mountains as it was in the days of the "Fortyniners," when gold was first found in California district. It tells of the days of the stage coach and the chivalry of the real western man and the treachery of the beast.

"Breezy Jim" is characterized by its swiftly moving plot, events happening in such rapid succession and with such a true-to-life punch to their enactment by an able cast that the patrons of the _____ theatre will enjoy every inch of the five reels that show Crane Wilbur in "Breezy Jim."

The western atmosphere predominates throughout the enactment of this stirring drama of the days of the stage coach. It is thrilling to the last degree and presents Mr. Wilbur in one of the best character parts he has ever interpreted for the silent drama.

"Breezy Jim" will be the attraction at the _____ theatre on _____ of _____ week.

Crane Wilbur, old-time favorite of the silent drama, seen in a stirring western drama.

Five fast-moving reels of western action with Crane Wilbur and Juanita Hansen interpreting the leading roles.

A story of the days when the Fortyniners ruled the Golden West.

The real western man and the coward brought in striking contrast in a picture of the ideal West of days gone by.

SUGGESTIONS

Bring to the attention of your patrons the fact that this is a typical western drama acted in double-quick time by a well-known star of the silent drama.

Play up the name of Crane Wilbur and Juanita Hansen, his leading woman. Both are well known and Miss Hansen is noted for being one of the beauties of the screen play.

If you are a small-town exhibitor, hit hard on the announcement that "Breezy Jim" is a through and through western picture. Your patrons like the western pictures.

Play up the nature of the picture stronger than the star for support.

Use the lobby display sheets that show the thrilling moments of this production and place them well in the limelight.

EVERY showman knows best how to present his own show.

Another Boost for Billie Rhodes; Clean Comedy

WHOEVER first conceived the idea of taking Miss Billie Rhodes out of the single reels and putting her in features has made a wise move; she is fast becoming a favorite.

If "The Girl of My Dreams" has brought the crowds into your theatre, "Hoop-La" should bring them in larger numbers, because of the superior story; clean and wholesome comedy situations, as well as pathetic, are well distributed throughout the picture. Besides, it possesses many more good points, any one of which could furnish the foundation for your advertising campaign.

To those of you who cater to a large number of children, the picture gives an opportunity to draw them by advertising the circus scenes that almost exclusively form the first two reels. Adults will enjoy them equally as well.

The picture was reviewed extensively in last week's issue, on page 1061.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

SUGGESTIONS

As this is a story of circus life you might evolve some original advertising by dressing up all your copy after the manner of the circus press agent's. Go back a little way in your memory to the time when the good old circus used to hit the town when you were a little fellow and revive some of those grand old phrases about the wonderful and amazing, "absolutely without equal" things that were advertised on the billboards of the big show. Yes, scatter superlatives as profusely as you want throughout your advertising, but make the imitation of the circus kind of exploitation exceed just beyond the limits of probability. Just to get a touch of humor into your copy—just to let the readers know that you aren't really serious with all your superlatives and promises. Just good natured, novel copy that's all.

As "The Girl of My Dreams," the first Robertson-Cole Billie Rhodes picture went so well you might mention it with reference to this, her second appearance and feature the star herself for she is an attractive little miss, and seems destined to have quite as successful a career in feature pictures as she did in those old one-reel comedies.

AD TALK

Billie Rhodes, the charming little star who appeared with such success at the ——— theatre only a few weeks ago in her first feature picture, "The Girl of My Dreams," will be seen here again on ——— of ——— week in another five-reel number entitled "Hoop-La," a picture which, it is hardly necessary to add, is a story of circus life. The diminutive star appears as Hoop-La Charters, a little lady who is practically the entire cast of a small circus. Outside of riding bareback, doing a trapeze act and doubling as a lady clown, her life is one of comparative ease. All the comedy and pathos of her existence is charmingly brought out in the five reels that constitute the picture, and, to employ a phrase worn by much usage but still quite useful, there is not a dull moment from first to last.

In a certain town Hoop-La volunteers as a pockey and wins a race for Joe McGee, a cheap horseman, who wants to marry her. When Hoop-La learns that she is really descended from a family of some social distinction she accepts McGee's proposal for the simple reason that society life appears to her none in the least. However she soon after regrets her decision, for she discovers the real stripe of her husband, and is very discontented. How a series of exciting incidents rids her of this pestilence who calls himself her husband, and how little Hoop-La eventually finds true happiness, are events which conclude the photoplay in exciting fashion.

THE STORY

"Hoop-La" is a beautiful young girl who is is an all-round star in a one-ring circus playing county fairs and small towns. She rides bareback, does thrilling trapeze acts and "doubles" as a lady clown. Her guardian and faithful friend is Old Toodles, a clown with the circus, who "brought her up" from a baby.

"Hoop-La" volunteers as a jockey and wins a race for Joe McGee, a cheap horseman who wants to marry her. Tony Barrows, scion of a wealthy family, sees "Hoop-La" perform and falls in love with the beautiful equestrienne. When "Hoop-La" learns that her father was of the Charters family, wealthy snobs, she marries McGee to save herself from having to live a dull society life. She repents, however, and induces McGee to leave her on promise of keeping him supplied with money.

McGee, in a drunken debauch, starts a fire in the circus-tent and is killed when the tent collapses. "Hoop-La" marries Tony and goes to live in her own home, her father's inheritance.

ADVERTISING AIDS

PAPER:—Two one-sheets; one three-sheet; one six-sheet; one twenty-four-sheet. All paper serves to bring out the circus atmosphere that predominates in the picture.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Six 11x14 photo gelatines and title card; six 22x28 photo gelatines and title card.

CUTS:—Cuts on this production include one, two and three-column offerings showing scenes from production and poses of star. The three-column are furnished to exhibitor in mat form only. A program cover cut and a thumb-nail head of star also available.

Other accessories include a sheet-stand, slides and music cue sheet altogether with press sheet.

Billie Rhodes in her second feature picture—a charming little story of a girl's life with a "one-horse" circus.

The freaks, the bearded lady, the bareback rider, the trapeze artist—all of them are in "Hoop-La," the greatest, most magnificent, unequaled and unparalleled, gorgeous and glittering, stupendous and stupefying story of circus life ever cast on the silver sheet! These adjectives aren't ours to be sure. They belong to Barnum's press agent, but all the same, "Hoop-La" is a picture that you don't want to miss. It can be described with all sorts of adjectives, but to say that it reaches the heart is to say the truth.

Billie Rhodes in "Hoop-La," the story is—well to tell the truth the story is around Billie Rhodes, and when this little star is the centre of attraction there isn't a whole lot else that attracts. Of course, she is seen to advantage—when has Billie Rhodes ever been seen to anything but advantage?

YOU need a short filler for your program.

Some little announcement regarding next week's feature.

Not a story exactly: that would be giving the show away.

Something just suggesting the character of the play, telling about the cast, the story in general, the director and the author.

A variety of advertising teaser.

The AD TALK incorporated in each of the plan books is just the thing.

Just the thing to awaken the reader's curiosity regarding next week's show.

Look over the AD TALK on your coming feature.

It may, the chances are 100 to 1, that it will fill the bill.

DO YOU WANT A THEATRE?

Here's a Chance of a Lifetime

I have a new theatre of 1200 seats, beautifully decorated, gorgeously draped and carpeted and fully equipped for pictures—Halberg twin generator set, $10,000. Hope-Jones organ, late style ticket selling machines, change makers, etc.—located in a city of 125,000 population, on the theatrical thoroughfare. 60,000 persons pass the doors daily. The theatre is open seven days a week, doing a business of from $1,200 to $1,800 each week. I will lease it for a term of ten years as it stands. Will stand the most rigid investigation.

Brokers will not be considered. Business must be done in person, first letter must give personal and financial reference that will bear investigation.

This is a man's proposition and only men of solid financial standing will be considered as several thousand dollars will be required.

My reasons for selling are legitimate, but too personal for publication.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to December 1, 1918.

Continuity good, and pleased all to extra big business." "Good Western drama. Popular star. Popular author." "Big business seven days." "Good picture." "Big business." "Very good picture. Big business three days." "Broke all records both days. Run continuous. Couldn't handle them." Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."
LIGHT, THE (FOX)	THEDA BARA	(JAN. 12)	JAN. 25	"Bara has best story in a good while; of vampire type."—M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Flu" scare affecting business. Average to big."
LITTLE MISS HOOVER (PARAMOUNT)	CLARK	(DEC. 29)	JAN. 4	"Miss Clark's charm in a pleasing setting."—M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to extra big, then to average and closed big on seventh day." "Average business seven days." "Opened big business, closed average." "Story too much propaganda. Too convenient. Hats off to Marguerite Clark. She pulled them in and made 'em like it." "Of course the star drew them and while the story was very light it seemed to please." "Average picture. Her other pictures have hurt her as a drawing card and this one didn't get over real good." Consensus—"Fair picture with good drawing powers."
LITTLE ORPHANT ANNIE (PIONEER)	COLEEN MOORE	(DEC. 22)	DEC. 21	(Six Parts) "They don't make them more touching than this one."—M. P. News.
LITTLE WOMEN (W. A. BRADY-PARAMOUNT)	(Six Parts)	JAN. 5	NOV. 23	"This attraction will appeal chiefly to the literary element."—M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Good production, but no 'Special.' Average business." "Great. Want more like it. Big business." "Very good picture. Artcraft sent out personal letters to our mailing list and they arrived one day after we showed the picture. That's co-operation without the Co." Consensus—"Fine picture, good puller."

Gives You All Data on the Pictures

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

ROMANCE AND ARABELLA (SELECT) CONSTANCE TALMADGE (FEB. 3).....FEB. 15
"Good star saves weak story; romance is keynote."—M. P. News.

ROMANCE OF HAPPY VALLEY, A (ARTCRAFT) D. W. GRIF-FITH'S (JAN. 26).....FEB. 8
"New Griffith picture seems a sure-fire winner."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"An artistic production, but for some reason or other fell flat with our patrons. Did not begin to hold up with other Griffith pictures. I personally found it entertaining but the proof of the pudding is that the bottom dropped out of business after Monday."

ROPE (UNIVERSAL SPECIAL) CAREY (JAN. 18).....JAN. 4
 (Six Parts)
"Star should please everybody in this production."—M. P. News.

ROUGH NECK, THE (WORLD) LOVE (FEB. 3).....FEB. 1
"Latest Montagu Love picture shows excellent team work."—M. P. News.

SANDY BURKE OF THE U-BAR-U (GOLDWYN) LOUIS BENNISON (FEB. 23).....FEB. 15
"Western subject full of human appeal and action."—M. P. News.

SEA WAIF, THE (WORLD) LOUISE HUFF (DEC. 30).....DEC. 28
"Love story made sustaining by skillful handling."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Big business." "Don't know why but World pictures are slipping fast. Both days we showed this picture it rained, but doubt if good weather would have improved business. Poor business."

SECRET GARDEN, THE (PARAMOUNT) LILA LEE (JAN. 12).....JAN. 25
"Plenty of action but not the happy type for star."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Story punk. Awful." "Rotten picture. Poor business." "Lila Lee gaining. Fair story." "Weak. Direction fair. She will never be a star. Hasn't the goods."

SET FREE (BLUEBIRD) EDITH ROBERTS (DEC. 16).....NOV. 16
"Light romantic drama with lots of entertainment."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Average business." "Average." "Big business." "Rotten. Poor business."

SHE DEVIL, THE (FOX) THEDA BARA (DEC. 1).....NOV. 9
 (Six Parts)
"This story is not suited to Bara's style."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture. Average business. Big on Saturday." "Average business three days." "Very poor but Bara packed them for two days." "Poor offering. Drew well, but Sennett comedy saved the day." "Theda is slipping." "Just the type of picture this star's followers desire. Pleased all. Well produced and well acted." "An inconsistent story. All Bara, and not Bara as the people expect to see her or want to see her. It afforded some attractive close-ups of the star. After viewing the picture one could not feel that they had seen much. A crime to wish such a picture on an exhibitor who is playing up and paying for Fox Standards. Done fair business."

SHE HIRED A HUSBAND (BLUEBIRD) DEAN (DEC. 2).....NOV. 16
"Subject is not up to star's mark but should please generally."—M. P. News.

SILENT RIDER, THE (TRIANGLE) STEWART (DEC. 1).....DEC. 14
"Roy Stewart returns and scores again."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Average business."

SILENT STRENGTH (VITAGRAPH) HARRY T. MOREY (FEB. 17).....FEB. 15
"Dual role subject that looks good. Should please all."—M. P. News.

SILVER KING, THE (PARA-ARTCRAFT) FAVERSHAM (JAN. 12).....JAN. 18
"Melodrama that offers much chance for criticism."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"This is a very good picture but a very poor drawing card."

SPENDER, THE (METRO) BERT LYTELL (JAN. 6).....JAN. 4
"Excellent comedy backed by wholesome philosophy."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent; great; let's have more of them." "Bert Lytell at his best since 'The Lone Wolf.' Made a great hit with the people. Cannot say enough for 'The Spender.'" "Excellent picture, strong puller."

SQUAW MAN, THE (ARTCRAFT) DEXTER (DEC. 15).....NOV. 16
 (Six Parts)
"This should please and also draw very well."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Great. Extra big business." "Positively one of the best all-around pictures we have ever played." "Average business." "Big business, conditions considered." "Fine picture and pleased to big business." "Great production. Drew only fair. People thought they had seen it before." "This was so good simply had to repeat it. Don't fail to book this winner."
 Consensus—"Excellent production with strong drawing powers."

STRANGE WOMAN, THE (FOX) BROCKWELL (DEC. 8).....OCT. 12
 (Six Parts)
"A lengthy discussion on Free Love versus Marriage."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"No pulling power, but best Brockwell picture for many months." "The best thing Brockwell has ever done. Big business." "Great. Packed them. Star is wonderful in this. Everybody liked it." "Big to average business." "Snow storm. Average business." "Just a fair story, although we are glad to see Brockwell dressed up." "Good show. Gladys Brockwell coming fast and if she continues to show pictures like this she will be a topnotcher." "Brockwell's best. Good picture. Pleased."
 Consensus—"Fine production with good drawing powers."

STRING BEANS (PARAMOUNT) RAY (DEC. 22).....DEC. 21
"Ray fans will welcome this interesting one."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Ray in just the sort of role that suits him. Certainly pleased." "Fair. Story light. Direction saved it." "Average business." "Fine Ray subject. Acting fine. Photography very good. Good weather would have brought big house. Played to remarkable business. Everyone pleased." "A very good picture. Star not yet popular here." "Typical Ray picture that pleased very well."

SYLVIA ON A SPREE (METRO) WEHLEN (DEC. 16).....DEC. 28
"She glimpses a fast life that is extravagant, anyway."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Just an average picture. Pleased. Big business." "Like all Metros. Pleased." "Picture well liked but star doesn't draw."
 Consensus—"Fine picture with good drawing powers."

TESTING OF MILDRED VANE (METRO) ALLISON (Dec. 2) DEC. 14
"A well built typical movie."—M. P. News.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

Exhibitor Comment—"Best Allison has done." "Pleased. Big business." "A Y. M. C. A. advertisement without any help from the Y. M. C. A." "Average business seven days."

TODD OF THE TIMES (PATHE) KEENAN (FEB. 9).....FEB. 1
"Star's work is good and story has been treated well."—M. P. News.

TONGUES OF FLAME (BLUEBIRD) WALCAMP (DEC. 2).....NOV. 16
"Interesting story and heart appeal should help put this over."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Average business."
 Exhibitor Comment—"A very good picture but weather conditions bad. Business normal."

TOO FAT TO FIGHT (GOLDWYN) MCINTYRE (DEC. 15).....DEC. 14
 (Six Parts)
"Nobody loves a fat man but they'll vote for this one."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair." "McIntyre not as good as 'Traveling Salesman.' War stuff dead." "Picture pleased, but was disappointed on its drawing power." "Excellent production. Big business." "Poor business." "Very good but war pictures are dead."

TOO MANY MILLIONS (PARAMOUNT) REID (DEC. 8).....NOV. 16
"Too much talking and posing in this picture."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Average business." "Good picture. Average business." "Good." "Average business." "Opened extra big and closed extra big with big business during five intervening days." "A very clever picture. Star very good." "Fine picture and should have drawn big business on longer run." "A very good picture that drew well. Pleased everybody. Very novel ending. Slightly too much posing by Reid."

TWO GUN BETTY (HODKINSON) BARRISCALE (DEC. 16).....DEC. 14
"Bessie Barriscale pleases in a 'Different' role."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Best she played. Is getting to be a favorite." "If anyone wants a surprise Western comedy drama, book this. Gave great satisfaction to exceptionally large audience."
 Consensus—"Excellent picture, strong puller."

UNDER THE TOP (ARTCRAFT) FRED STONE (JAN. 12).....JAN. 18
"Star's new Artcraft stands up better than his first."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Average business." "Not good." "Poor business." "Pleased better than his first picture. A real good story, something he has not yet had, will put this star over." "Average to poor business." "Too mechanical. Star camera conscious."
 Consensus—"Fair picture with ordinary drawing powers."

VAGABOND OF FRANCE, A (PATHE) KRAUSS (JAN. 26).....JAN. 18
 (Four Parts)
"French-made picture shows padding. Titles need improving."—M. P. News.

VENUS IN THE EAST (PARAMOUNT) WASHBURN (JAN. 26).....JAN. 8
"If you get by with this picture you should be satisfied."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture. Big business."

VIRTUOUS WIVES (FIRST NATIONAL) STEWART (JAN. 5).....JAN. 11
"Lavish production marks star's return to screen."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"First class in every respect. Wonderful cast. Highly complimented on this one." "Extra big to highly pleased audiences." "Extra big business."
 Consensus—"Excellent production with exceptional drawing powers."

WAY OF A MAN WITH A MAID, THE (PARA) WASHBURN (DEC. 29).....JAN. 11
"Good example of the 'better story' we hear about."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair." "Much better than Bryant Washburn's first Paramount picture from the standpoint of our clientele. Good story. Well acted. Good cast." "Highly entertaining. Clean and well done." "Big business." "Poor business." "Well liked. The kind they want." "Good heart interest story. Satisfied most everyone. Flagg comedy with it killed whole show. Terrible stuff."
 Consensus—"Fine picture with very good drawing powers."

WHAT LOVE FORGIVES (WORLD) CASTLETON (JAN. 6).....JAN. 4
"Interesting with good comedy titles but not well balanced."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Just picture, no story or action." "Average business."

WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE (AMERICAN) RUSSELL (JAN. 19).....JAN. 11
"Rapid action Western is William Russell's latest."—M. P. News.
 Exhibitor Comment—"Very poor, no story, no excitement, very tiresome, clean melodrama, not one redeeming feature." "Fine picture, big business."

WHO CARES (SELECT) CONSTANCE TALMADGE (JAN. 19).....JAN. 25
"Story of light pleasing sort; should be enjoyed by all."—M. P. News.

Chicago Theatre Owners [and Operators] Get Together

BEFORE leaving for Bellaire, Fla., where he will spend the rest of the winter, Peter J. Schaefer, president of the Allied Amusement Association, came to an understanding with the motion picture machine operators, Local 110. The following agreement was entered into, the form of which Mr. Schaefer herewith submits:

"This agreement made and entered into this February 4, 1919, by and between Chicago Local 110, Moving Picture Machine Operators, of the I. A. T. S. E., and Peter Schaefer and Morris Choynoski as committee with full power to act for Allied Amusement Association, that the following is hereby agreed: That the members of the Allied Amusement Association will pay to operators of Local 110 employed by them all claims due said operators of Local 110 under the terms of individual contracts drawn up and signed by the various members of the A. A. A. upon or about January 11, 1919, and the following week. It is understood and agreed that the two weeks' back pay due the members of Local 110 from January 11, 1919, to January 23, 1919, shall be held in escrow pending the result of the findings of an arbitration board, three members to be appointed from both the Operators' Local 110 and the Allied Amusement Association and the seventh member to be appointed by the six aforesaid members herein before mentioned. For the Operators' Local 110—Thomas J. Reynolds, Dick Green, Thomas E. Maloy and Hal Johnstone. For the Allied Amusement Association—Peter J. Schaefer, Morris Choynoski."

The Allied Amusement Association, which comprises every branch of amusement industry in Chicago, has opened a beautiful suite of offices at 1320 Consumers' Building, where all business pertaining to the association will hereafter be transacted.

History Reveals That Randolph Theatre Was Built in 1842—Not 1918

THE busy, prolific statistician for Jones, Linick & Schaefer has been turning Chicago's stage history upside down in an effort to establish precedence for the names of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's theatres. Having proved that the Rialto was the second theatre built in the city of Chicago, having opened in May, 1838, he now comes forward with a statement that Chicago also boasted of a Randolph theatre as early as 1842. In thus raking up Chicago's theatrical history he is press agenting the brand new Randolph theatre, the picture house which Jones, Linick & Schaefer opened during the holidays on Randolph Street, between State and Dearborn Streets.

On Tuesday, September 27, 1842, the Chapman Building, at the southeast corner of Randolph and Wells Streets, was opened as a theatre by William P. Hastings and given the name of The Randolph theatre, the opening attraction being "The Golden Farmer," and tickets sold at 25 cents. Its manager was Henry Fuller. The population of Chicago at that time was 4,179.

It was in the year 1844 that it was suggested by the Council that it was advisable to lay a wooden plank sidewalk along Lake Street, between Dearborn and State Streets. Considering the city's drawbacks, youth and isolation, it was a matter of wonder that the place could boast of such a good theatrical beginning.

In naming their new playhouse the Randolph theatre Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer have merely been carrying out a bit of Chicago's stage history and bringing it up to date.

Cropper Tries "Different" Advertising for Picture

DID you ever advertise a picture without mentioning it? Ever hear of printing over eight million four hundred thousand ads, never mentioning the name of the picture? Imagine printing enough ads, if placed end to end, to reach from Chicago to Pittsburgh, and not one of them telling exactly what it was you were advertising. Sounds odd, does it not?

R. C. Cropper, of the Bee-Hive Exchange, Chicago, is doing just that bit of different advertising in Chicago, and he is not running a philanthropic institution for printers and engravers. What he has done, however, is to actually create the inquisitive interest of a few odd hundred thousand fans all anxious to see Francis Ford's latest and greatest serial, "The Silent Mystery."

Of course, there was meaning in the ads. They were very carefully thought out, arranged and written with an air of mystery and taking advantage of the human weakness of inquisitiveness. Each ad merely asked the reader to inquire. The result was like a snowball rolling downhill, gathering more and more force and quantity every day, until during the last few days of the campaign the managers have become so engulfed with inquiries that a few are even going so far as to put up notices: "Please DO NOT Ask Us. You Can Come and See It Here Next Week."

Mr. Cropper is booking the serial for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, and will gladly furnish information and mats to any exhibitor who will write for it.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

WEDNESDAY, January 29, marked the first appearance of Evelyn Nesbit in Dubuque. The picture was shown at the Princess theatre Wednesday and Thursday and was fairly well attended. Miss Nesbit proved to be an actress above the mediocre and her picture was well liked.

WALLACE REID and Kathlyn Williams were seen to advantage at the Family theatre Wednesday, January 29. Mr. Reid and Miss Williams are a good team and it is a pleasure to see them act. The picture drew good evening houses.

"THE MAN OF BRONZE," with Lewis S. Stone and Marguerite Clayton, opened a two-days' engagement at the Dreamland theatre, Wednesday, January 29, and played to good houses on both days.

AS a traveling show "The Boomerang" was put on at the Grand Thursday, January 30. There were no pictures shown. On Friday the second Success Series picture, "The Girl of the Golden West," was presented and it won the approval of nearly everyone who saw it. While there were no featured players Mabel Van Buren and House Peters were easily the stars of the play.

"THE FACE IN THE DARK," with Mae Marsh, and a Broncho Billy Western drama were the program at the Family theatre on Thursday, January 30. Miss Marsh essayed a new role in this picture and proved to be quite an attractive heroine of a detective story. Both pictures pleased the large audiences in attendance.

FRANCIS BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne made quite a hit with patrons of the Dreamland theatre when they appeared there Friday and Saturday, January 31 and February 1, in "Rich Man, Poor Man." The picture was voted to be one of the cleverest films in which the stars had been seen for months.

A CHARLES RAY feature, "The Claws of the Hun," held the boards at the Princess theatre Friday and Saturday, January 31 and February 1. War pictures have a good drawing power in Dubuque, so Manager Billos has two days of the kind of business he likes.

THE Liberty's Thursday program was "Within the Law," with Harry Morey and Alice Joyce. Considering that it was a third run picture, the Liberty did good business.

THE Star theatre has contracted for Vitagraph, Triangle and Bluebird pictures.

ELSIE FERGUSON won more laurels when she played at the Family theatre Saturday, February 1, in "The Lie." The combination of exceptional beauty and great talent make Miss Ferguson a screen actress of the highest order.

IRENE CASTLE starred at the Liberty theatre Saturday, February 1, in "The Mysterious Client." The picture was greeted by an audience large and appreciative.

"THE BUTCHER BOY," with Fatty Arbuckle, which played at the rand Saturday, February 1, was considered one of the comedian's best pictures—in fact, many fans ranked it with "The Cook."

JANE AND KATHERINE LEE were seen at the Liberty theatre Friday, January 31, in "Troublemakers." As usual, the theatre was not large enough to hold the people who flocked to see the little favorites.

"LUCK AND PLUCK," with George Walsh, was shown at the Dreamland theatre Sunday and Monday, February 2 and 3. Fans galore turned out to see their favorite and literally swamped the theatre. Many pronounced it Mr. Walsh's "best yet;" others said it did not come up to "I'll Say So," but everyone agreed that it was some picture.

WALLACE REID carried off more honors in "The Man From Funeral Range," the Sunday, February 1, bill at the Grand. Mr. Reid is at his best in portrayals of characters like Harry Webb. The supporting cast, headed by Ann Little, was of the best. The picture was, indeed, a first rate production and played to capacity houses afternoon and evening.

THE Family has commenced showing Select pictures on Sunday. The first one was "The Reason Why," with Clara Kimball Young, and was shown Sunday, February 1. The actress was greeted by hosts of her admirers.

"BUCHANAN'S WIFE," the picture which had a successful two-days' engagement at the Dreamland a short time ago, was shown at the Liberty theatre Sunday, February 1, to full houses. The star, Virginia Pearson, was well liked.

THE Star theatre is now equipped with a three-piece orchestra, a pianist, violinist and cornetist. The opening picture, "Within the Law," kept crowds waiting outside the theatre until 9 o'clock in the evening. Since that time Manager Bowlers has been having excellent houses. The Sunday, February 1, feature was "Three Mounted Men," with Harry Carey.

AN installment of "The Wolves of Kultur," "The Precipice of Death" and an episode of "The Brass Bullet" drew numbers of serial fans to the Family Monday evening, February 1. These serials take finely and are followed with interest every week by the patrons who made "Serial Day" possible.

IRVING CUMMINGS and Barbara Castleton were starred at the Liberty theatre Monday, February 3, in "The Heart of a Girl." Thrills, suspense and excitement combined made this an exceptionally interesting picture.

THE opera house at Platteville, Wis., has been rented to Kistler, Hackett & Tracy, who will conduct a moving picture show. A fireproof booth will be installed and all the necessary alterations made so that the performances may start as soon as possible. In making the contract for the year the city reserved the right to use the opera house for public gatherings, and no one is barred from using it for occasional show purposes.

ON Sunday, February 2, a Metro production, "Broadway Bill," with Harold Lockwood, was shown at the Blende theatre at Benton, Wis. The program on Wednesday was "The Gun Fighter," with William S. Hart, and the Friday bill was "Jules of the Strongheart," with George Beban.

PERHAPS the most notable production shown at the Dreamland theatre at Galena, Ill., this year was "The Great Love," the noted D. W. Griffith production, featuring Lillian Gish, George Fawcett, Henry Walthall and Robert Harron, which played there Saturday, February 1. Numbers of Dreamland fans witnessed this picture and declared it to be one of the best pictures they had ever seen.

"THE BIGGEST SHOW ON EARTH," with Enid Bennett, and a two-reel comedy, "Love Loops the Loop," was the program at the Grand theatre at Anamosa, Ia., on Saturday, February 1. On Saturday there are evening performances only.

"PECK'S BAD GIRL," with Mabel Normand, was the attraction at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., Friday and Saturday, January 31 and February 1. A Big V comedy, "Misfits and Matrimony," was also shown.

NORMA TALMADGE in "The Heart of Wetona" played to capacity houses at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., on Saturday, February 1. Norma is a great favorite and a capital drawing power at this theatre.

THE Thursday, January 30, feature at the Star theatre at Decorah, Ia., was the "Marionettes," with one of the screen's most accomplished and beautiful stars, Clara Kimball Young.

"SELFISH YATES," starring William S. Hart, played at the Palace theatre at Waverly, Ia., Sunday and Monday, February 2 and 3. On Tuesday and Wednesday Elsie Ferguson was presented in "The Doll's House." A comedy was also shown.

Gathered in Green Bay

MUSIC by a ten-piece orchestra augments the motion picture performances in the Grand theatre, owned by Henry Goldman, and the combination has been productive of increasing business at the house. Mr. Goldman arranges a program offering variety, including travel pictures, orchestra selections, the regular film and a comedy to complete the entertainment. This arrangement, with the comedy at the end, has worked satisfactorily and the crowds attending the theatre have been pleased.

JOHN BARRYMORE made his initial appearance in the Colonial theatre in the Paramount film, "On the Quiet," February 3-4.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, of the Select Corporation, appeared in "Sauce for the Goose," one of the cleverest comedies that has been put on the screen, January 30-31, February 1-2, in the Grand theatre.

"WHEN A MAN RIDES ALONE," a Pathe release, was shown February 5-6 in the Royal theatre. William Russell was in the leading role.

MARY PICKFORD played in the Artcraft picture, "Sweethearts of Mine," at the Orpheum theatre February 6-7-8-9.

CLAIRE ANDERSON was seen in the Triangle film, "In the Mask," at the Royal theatre February 4-5.

MARGUERITE CLARK, of the Paramount studios, played at the Grand theatre February 3-4-5 in "Out of a Clear Sky."

A GOLDWYN film, "Day Dreams," with Madge Kennedy in the leading role, was presented January 29-30 at the Grand theatre.

"OUT OF THE SHADOWS," a Paramount film, was shown February 1-2 at the Colonial theatre. Pauline Fredricks was the star.

A PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT special, "Little Women," was the attraction at the Grand theatre January 27-28-29. The film is based on Louise Alcott's book.

"THE TEMPLE OF DUSK," featuring Hayakawa, the Jap, was shown in the Colonial theatre February 5-6.

ALICE BRADY played in "Her Great Chance," a Select picture, February 6-7-8-9.

They Say in Chicago That—

THE opening, February 4, for a five-day run of "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand, at the Pantheon theatre, was a knock-out. The house, which seats over 2,000 people, was continuously filled with the elite of the North Shore, and hold-outs filling the foyer and jamming the immense lobby out to the curb. When a picture can call forth applause from a conservative Wilson Avenue district audience, it is some picture. "Mickey" turned that trick to a "fare-you-well."

"THE ROMANCE OF THE AIR," featuring Lieut. Bert Hall and Edith Dayhas, had a week's run at the beautiful De Luxe theatre, of Chicago. Lieut. Hall appeared personally every afternoon and evening and related his experiences.

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY," the Universal super-production, featuring Dorothy Phillips, opened Sunday, February 9, at three of Chicago's foremost picture palaces—the Woodlawn, Twentieth Century and Pantheon.

THE Hearst News Weekly No. 6, issued by the International Film Service and released by the Universal Company, containing a very interesting number of pictures taken at the Peace Conference, has reached Chicago and is attracting a great deal of attention.

THE Unity Photoplay Exchange, Chicago, is doing a land office business with their picture, "And the Children Pay."

THE house-warming party given by the Atlas Educational Film Company at their new plant proved a great success and a credit to Mr. Chester Rehm, whose ingenuity as an entertaining host is well known to Chicago's club members.

HARRY WEISS, manager of the First National, of Chicago, leaves February 3 for two weeks in St. Louis, Mo., Jefferson Hotel, where he will hold an exhibitors' convention. Exhibitors attending are advised to bring their check books along.

MANDE M. SPARR is new manager of the Village theatre, of Wilmette, Ill.

R. C. CROPPER, of the Beehive Exchange, Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee, is a busy man, putting over the big publicity campaign for Francis Ford's latest serial, "The Silent Mystery."

HILLIARD CAMPBELL has bought the Oak theatre, at Oak Park, Ill.

O. W. KOPPLEMAN, of the Chicago office of the Capitol Film Company, says that now that he has received his book-er's calendar from the NEWS he is in much better shape to do business.

NOT so long ago if anyone had said that a residential district theatre in Chicago could run a picture a week they would have been considered squirrel food, but that is all changed now. Balaban and Katz have knocked the spots out of the old time way of figuring and are doing things at their Riviera theatre, Chicago, that other exhibitors would do well to emulate. Go ask Joe Koppel, their house manager, about the success of their long runs and get the answer.

IRVING MACK, the genial up-to-date publicity man of the Universal office, is working overtime on the Hearts of Humanity campaign, the Universal superfeature, which will open soon at all of Chicago's leading photoplay houses. As Mack is chummy with the entire daily press of Chicago there will undoubtedly be something doing that will reap a benefit to the exhibitors.

BRUCE GOTTSCHALK, Ascher Brothers' migratorial manager, has jumped across town again and is back at their north side Calo theatre.

JAMES ARNETTE, of West Frankfort, Ill., is opening his new theatre, the Liberty, on February 15.

THE genial and effervescent Harry Weiss, of Central Film fame, is now hobnobbing with Indiana exhibitors, whom he will take into his confidence in the next two weeks.

MACK SENNETT'S production, "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand, had its premier presentation at the Pantheon theatre, Chicago, from February 4 to 8, inclusive. Paul Biese's Novelty Orchestra is still drawing the lovers of snappy, up-to-date music.

HARRY ELSAS has sold the Garden theatre, of Henry, Ill., to Harry Hurby, who owns the American theatre at Harvey.

IT is rumored that S. S. Gregory, of the Illinois theatre, at Chicago Heights, will build a theatre in Hammond, Ind., soon.

B. A. LUCAS, of Metro's Screen Classics, reports that Nazimova played for three days recently at Galesburg, Ill., to 4,800 people, at 25, 35 and 50-cent prices.

RECENT visitors to Chicago are: Carl J. Mueller, Rock Island, Ill.; Peter Pinkelman, Quincy, Ill.; Olgo Heilstadt, La Salle, Ill.; S. G. Gregory, Chicago Heights, Ill., and J. C. Condon, DeKalb, Ill.

IKE SCHLANK, president of the Capitol Film Company, is spending a few days in Chicago.

STAR SALESMAN HUMPHREY, of the Vitagraph Chicago office, has returned to his stamping ground, Indiana, with big expectations.

THE FOX PRODUCTION OFFICE claims the bookings on their picture "Salome," featuring Theda Bara, is breaking all other records into little pieces.

HARRY BERMAN, General Manager of the Universal Film Company, has been in Chicago for a conference with a number of their exchange managers. Among those here to see Mr. Berman were Barney Rosenthal, district manager of the St. Louis territory; Carly Calvert, manager of the Omaha office; and M. H. Frisch, manager of the Des Moines office. While attending this conference Barney Rosenthal took unto himself a wife.

TARKINGTON BAKER, publicity director of the Universal organization, has been in Chicago, at which time he superintended the society showing of the Stage Women's Green Room Series.

JACK LURIN, well known in Chicago film circles, has been appointed publicity manager of the Capitol Film Company and will be located in Indianapolis.

ROY SEERY, the genial manager of the Central Film Company and First National Exhibitors, Chicago office, is rubbing his hands with glee. Answer: The acquisition of more stars.

What LaPorte Is Doing

IRREPROACHABLE weather continues to give La Porte houses exceptionally large audiences every night in the week. The Etropal, which came under F. R. Redington's management a few months ago, has been playing to over-capacity house every show. His business has been on the increase to such an extent that he is contemplating building a new and larger house within a year to accommodate his many patrons. The class of pictures here is considered the pick of the producers.

MANAGER GOLDBERG, of the Princess, has secured a contract for the issues of Keystone comedies, which are making their appearance again. These one and two-reelers are proving to be very popular here and are considered a big drawing card in addition to a feature of five or six reels.

A TYPICAL woman audience was out to see the "Prodigal Wife," played at the Phoenix this past week. A special advertising campaign put on by Manager Ranson especially for the women succeeded in bringing them into the light. The picture stars Mary Boland.

THE Phoenix is making a feature of "Broncho Billy's" return to the movies in the presentation of his first release, "Red Blood or Yellow." It is considered that he will make a good showing because of his former popularity.

SERIALS seem to be coming back into favor if the example of the Etropal can be considered a criterion. "House of Hate" and "Fight for Millions" have proved two drawing cards at this house that have overtaxed the seating capacity. In addition to the serials during the past week Manager Redington has played Bryant Washburn in "Kidder and Ko" and "By the World Forgot," one of the strongest plays presented in some weeks.

EXHIBITORS from La Porte saw the first projection of Frank Kennan's new comedy, "Todd of the Times," in Chicago. The entrance of this popular star into the comedy world has been heralded with great enthusiasm. During the coming week he will be starred in "More Trouble," while "The Bells" have been scheduled for a later date.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "Say, Young Fellow," and Norma Talmadge in "The Forbidden City," starred the week's program at the Princess. Norma Talmadge pleased the moviegoers in her dual role, which showed her wonderful acting ability to an advantage.

"TARZAN OF THE APES" and a return engagement of Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" will feature the coming week at the Princess.

BESSIE BARRISCALE in "Those Who Pay" and Jewel Carmen in "The Girl of the Champagne Eyes" has the board at the Etropal during the coming week.

FILM salesmen making the city declare business in this territory to be above the average and that the much feared slump following the signing of the armistice has not been evidenced. Houses in all parts of the State of Indiana are booming and reporting capacity houses that have not been experienced for some time.

In Indianapolis and Indiana

PICTURE theatres in Indianapolis were required Saturday to adhere to the policy announced recently by Mayor Jewett in regard to Sunday amusements, discontinuing all vaudeville features of Sunday programs and not opening until 1:30 o'clock.

Mayor Jewett said that arrests would be made Sundays for violations of the policy laid down after a series of conferences with motion picture interests and with ministers of the city, and that "more drastic action" will be taken if it becomes necessary to make a second arrest in any case. Mayor Jewett said his order was made for people who desire to have Sunday amusements of this character and not in the interest of the motion picture business, and that he does not expect there will be any violations, either of the spirit or the letter of the order, he announced.

AS a special Sunday attraction, beginning February 2, "The Master Mystery," a screen serial featuring Houdini, the Handcuff King, was shown at B. F. Keith's theatre. Special photo-plays and high class musical features are the attraction at B. F. Keith's each Sunday, while the regular vaudeville program will be shown the balance of the week.

THE Dickson Amusement Company, of Wabash, filed final certificate of dissolution with the Secretary of State in Indianapolis last week.

EXTENSIVE remodeling and enlarging of the Rialto theatre, on Illinois Street, near Kentucky Avenue, was announced last night by George W. Bunting, architectural engineer for C. J. Wacker, general contractor, to whom the contract has been let. The plans call for enlarged seating capacity, rebuilding of an additional room for renting on Kentucky Avenue, office rooms on the second floor of the building and rest rooms for women patrons. The addition will be built of reinforced concrete. The architect is Charles H. Byfield and the cost of the improvements will be about $45,000, Mr. Bunting said. The work will begin Monday and will be rushed. There will be no interference with the performances while the work is going on. The theatre is operated by the Lenwood Amusement Company.

Happenings in Madison

EVERY manager in Madison is wearing a broad smile of satisfaction. Every motion picture house in the city is drawing big crowds daily. There seems to be a general decision on the part of theatregoers to forget such sordid facts as the "flu" and the problems of war and to enjoy themselves at a movie.

PERHAPS the reason for the unusual crowds at the theatres is not entirely due to a general desire to "get out and go somewhere," but the result of the booking of some splendid productions.

A LONG line extending nearly a block has sought admission to see "Mickey" at the Fuller theatre. The receipts compared favorably with the rival productions, "Birth of a Nation" and "Civilization." The picture was offered at advanced prices. The Fuller has another big feature as a treat to the movie public of Madison. Next week the "Shepherd of the Hills" will be shown.

EVERY performance of Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" was greeted so enthusiastically by the crowded house at the Grand theatre that even Manager McWilliams' eyes popped. The repeat show was given as rousing a welcome as the initial performance. "A Law Unto Herself" and "The Enchanted Barn" were two other attractions displayed. A leading coming attraction is Anita Stewart in "Virtuous Wives."

CARL ANDERSON, who was the leader of the Grand theatre orchestra for eight years, is conducting his own orchestra in Boston, Mass., since his discharge from the navy. He called on friends in Madison last week.

THE Majestic has been attracting unusually large crowds to the matinee shows. Some of the pictures this week included "Inn of the Blue Moon" and "Fame and Fortune." Dustin Farnum in "Light of the Western Stars" leads at the Majestic in the coming features.

News and Gossip of Springfield Theatres

GUS KERASOTES reports that business on "Cleopatra" was very good, considering that it was the third engagement in the city for the picture, it having previously enjoyed long runs at the Chatterton and Lyric.

HARRY LOPER, of the Lyric, and Mrs. Loper are visiting Harry's folks in Chicago. The elder Loper is owner of the Kimbark theatre, one of the prettiest houses on the south side of the big city. Herbert Walters is guiding the destinies of the Lyric very successfully in the absence of H. L.

W. D. CAVE announces that he has decided not to book "The Birth of a Race" and that all negotiations are at an end. The play is now at Decatur, after having shown in Bloomington and Peoria, our neighboring towns. Reports from both places are that business was very good.

THE Palace, newest of local family theatres, reports that business has been very good. The Palace is located in a section of the city where a great many foreigners live, and caters almost exclusively to them. It operates four nights a week, using Universal program almost entirely.

WARREN HARRISON, an ex-U. S. soldier, is back at his job as treasurer of the Majestic. Pretty soon George Riordan won't have anything to do but think of new ideas for result-getting advertisements. The Vitagraph serial, "A Fight for Millions," is now in its last chapters at the Majestic.

MANAGER LOPER, of the Lyric, says that he has contracted for Select pictures. This program has been out of the city for three months, and film fans have sadly missed the Talmadges, Alice Brady, Clara Kimball Young and the other stars.

GUS KERASOTES has booked William Farnum in "Les Miserables" for a run the latter part of February.

ELSIE FERGUSON went big for four days at the Gaiety in "His Parisian Wife," on January 26, 27, 28 and 29. The comedy was James Montgomery Flagg's "Perfectly Fiendish Flanagan," and it was liked and disliked, some of the fans not being able to get it at all. For the last half of the same week Manager Thornton had Madge Kennedy in "Day Dreams" and "Beware of Boarders."

THE Vaudette came near making a record with Dorothy Dalton in "Hard Boiled." Business was great for four days. It fell off a little the last half of the week, with Enid Bennett in "Happy Though Married."

THE Princess had a whale of a week January 26-February 1 with Mae Murray in "Danger, Go Slow," Billie Rhodes in "The Girl of My Dreams," and Herbert Rawlinson and Priscilla Dean in "Kiss or Kill." The advertising on all three pictures was especially good.

GLADYS BROCKWELL delighted the fans who attended the Lyric on January 26-27 with her fine work in "The Call of the Soul." On the 28th and 29th Manager Loper had Bert Lytell in "The Spender," one of the season's finest attractions and a picture that charmed everyone. For the 30th, 31st and February 1 Theda Bara held forth in "The Light" and did about her usual business.

MISS NELL KEMPER arrived in the city January 30 to visit with her grandmother and aunt. Miss Kemper was for the past eighteen months scenario editor for William S. Hart at Hollywood, Cal., but is now with the Hearst Syndicate.

THE Gaiety scored another ten-strike with "Sporting Life," Maurice Tourneur's Artcraft-Paramount special production. The opening day's business was extremely heavy, even at increased admission prices. It looks as though the picture will have to be held longer than the original booking called for in order that everyone may see it who wishes. The Gaiety had it for February 2, 3, 4, and 5. "Hop, the Bell Hop," an L-Ko comedy, with Billy Armstrong, was on the same bill. For the week ending February 8 the Gaiety had "Life's Greatest Problem," J. Stuart Blackton's special production, by Anthony Paul Kelly. "Don't Change Your Husband," Cecil B. DeMille's photoplay, will come to the Gaiety for four days, commencing Sunday, February 9.

JOHN BARRYMORE in "Here Comes the Bride" was the feature at the Vaudette on February 2, 3, 4 and 5. The picture did nicely. Fatty Arbuckle in "Fatty and the Bathing Beauties" was also on the bill along with Burton Holmes' newest Travelogue. For the last three days of the same week the Vaudette will have Vivian Martin in "You Never Saw Such a Girl." Charles Ray will follow for four days in "The Sheriff's Son," starting Sunday, February 9.

IN an interview with George McCune, operator of the Empress, southside neighborhood house, George stated that business was fine at 10 and 15 cents admission, and that Mrs. Duer, the new owner, intended booking some strong attractions for February.

"THE LURE OF THE CIRCUS" is the lure that draws capacity houses to the Royal every Sunday. The program for the week of February 3-8 at the Royal was as follows: Monday, Margarita Fischer in "Impossible Susan;" Tuesday, Theda Bara in "When a Woman Sins;" Wednesday, Ethel Clayton in "A Soul Without Windows;" Thursday, Vitagraph's "A Gentleman's Agreement;" Friday and Saturday, Virginia Pearson in "Queen of Hearts."

LOUIS KERASOTES is happy over the fine business being done at the Savoy. Louie believes in serials being offered on Sunday and has "A Fight for Millions" each Sabbath, adding several other reels to the program. The eleventh chapter was shown on Sunday, February 2. On Monday the Savoy had "On Trial," S. & A. feature, with Barbara Castleton; Tuesday, Margarita Fischer in "Impossible Susan;" Wednesday, Elizabeth Risdon in "Mother;" Thursday, Violet Mesereau in "Together;" Friday, Chapter 12 of "The Iron Test" and other pictures; Saturday, Dorothy Phillips in "The Talk of the Town."

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY" has been booked by one of the leading theatres here for an early showing. The name of the theatre has been requested withheld until the date can be given.

NORTH END Circle and Pekin theatres are holding their own and making money for the owners. The warm weather still prevails, and the longer it stays the more money it will bring into the box-offices. No one will object if we do not have any snow or any more cold days. It has been the most remarkable winter in the memory.

THE Woman's Club of Springfield, Ill., has decided that it wants censorship along the same lines as Kansas, Ohio, Pennsylvania and other States, and is preparing to exert its influence to have the measure passed. Pictures that come to Springfield from Chicago now have all the "rough stuff" eliminated, so it is hard to understand what else is to be censored. This new move by the Woman's Club is the first attempt in a long time for a local organization to make a stand on censorship.

THE Princess opened strong on Sunday, February 2, with Harold Lockwood in "The Great Romance." Publicity Manager Sines says that business was terrific—better than usual. Pictures booked by the Princess to show in the near future are Kitty Gordon in "Adele," Sessue Hayakawa in "Bonds of Honor," and Henry Walthall in "And a Still Small Voice." Mildred Harris in "When a Girl Loves" came on February 9 for three days.

THE Lyric reports unusually good business for Sunday and Monday, February 2 and 3, with Peggy Hyland in "The Girl With No Regrets." Ethel Barrymore followed for two days in "The Divorcee," and the last three days were allotted to Evelyn Nesbit in "Woman! Woman!" her newest Fox production. The Lyric and Vaudette are almost directly opposite each other. One theatre, the Lyric, was showing Ethel Barrymore in "The Divorcee," while the Vaudette had John Barrymore in "Here Comes the Bride."

BEN ROVIN continues to swell his bank account every week with many shekels garnered in at the Amuse-U. One of the strangest things about this theatre is its ability to repeat pictures that were shown months ago at 5 cents admission and clean up with them at 10 cents. Ben says he is unable to explain this phenomenon. Fox pictures take up most of Ben's time, with an occasional special feature. Hart and Fairbanks reissues always mean capacity houses, no matter what picture it may be.

ED. MAISEL, manager of the Capitol, spent several days in Chicago recently and signed up some mighty good pictures for his Washington Street theatre. Ed. reports that he has contracts in the safe for Goldwyn All-Star series, Paramount-Success series and for the new Billy West comedies. "Why Germany Must Pay" was shown two days at the Capitol recently to large attendance.

Heard in Detroit

JOE HORWITZ has purchased the State rights in Michigan to "Mickey" and the first run was sold to the Majestic in Detroit before the print was screened. It is said the Majestic is paying $2,500 for the picture for two weeks—the season's record. To help put the picture across a motion picture was made of Charles G. Branham, the Majestic manager, signing the contract with Mr. Horwitz.

JOHN H. KUNSKY has returned to Detroit after a month's visit in Southern California.

THE State Film Company, Detroit, has purchased State rights to the Francis Ford serial, "The Silent Mystery."

A DEAL has been closed with the Detroit Journal by the Universal Film Company for an advertising and publicity campaign for the Marie Walcamp serial, "The Red Glove." The Journal started advertising the serial this week, which is a month in advance of the release of the picture.

THE Detroit Exhibitors' League has sent a notice to every motion picture theatre proprietor advising them that it is against the law to admit children to their theatres after 8 P. M. unless the youngsters are accompanied by adults.

JOHN H. KUNSKY has completed plans for a new theatre in Highland Park, a Detroit suburb. Contracts already have been let for the excavating. Several other theatre projects already have been proposed for Highland Park owing to the fact that Sunday amusements are now permitted there.

JAMES STEELE, who has one house in Detroit and three in Bay City, has closed his Detroit offices and will conduct his business from Pittsburgh.

EMPLOYEES of the Paul Schlossman houses in Muskegon, Mich., were guests at a banquet given by their employer.

WHEN the Arthur S. Hyman exchange moves to the film building next month, every exchange in Detroit will be located in one structure built especially to house them.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

THE treasury of the Priscilla Society has been enriched by $50 as a result of its co-operation with Manager F. R. Smith, of the Bijou, in the presentation of Elsie Ferguson in Henrik Ibsen's powerful drama, "A Doll's House," Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, February 3, 4 and 5.

MADGE KENNEDY, in a picturization of Rose Stahl's "A Perfect Lady," proved to be one of the most popular Orpheum offerings of the season. The picture was presented on Monday and Tuesday, February 3 and 4, and drew excellent business. Many of Manager Ainsworth's patrons took occasion to commend him for booking a picture of such merit.

SATURDAY, February 8, will be remembered as a real circus day in Fond du Lac. At the Ideal patrons were regaled with "The Lure of the Circus," the first episode in the new serial Manager Vollert is putting on, while at the Orpheum they found delight in "The Biggest Show on Earth." It was also the occasion of Manager Ainsworth's 6-cent kid matinee, with Charley Chaplin as a special attraction. And Young America was out in full force.

THE Photo-Play Screen Supplement has been added to the Bijou program with excellent results, the patrons evidently being desirous of a closer acquaintance with their favorite screen stars.

MANAGER VOLLERT, of the Henry Boyle theatre, has booked "Mickey," the big special, for four days—Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, February 20, 21, 22 and 23.

LYMAN H. HOWE will return to the Henry Boyle for a two-days' engagement, Friday, February 28, and Saturday, March 1.

MANAGER VOLLERT is a firm believer in the pulling power of a good serial and plans to keep one on the Idea screen most of the time. "Hands Up," a Pathe serial, has just been completed and Mr. Vollert pronounces it the best he has had. This is now being followed by the Universal serial, "The Lure of the Circus," eighteen episodes. The first episode was put on Friday and Saturday, February 7 and 8, and was well received.

MANAGER F. R. SMITH, of the Bijou, and Manager William L. Ainsworth, of the Orpheum, spent two days in Chicago laboring with the Paramount management in the hope of getting the order switching Fond du Lac from the Minneapolis to the Chicago territory rescinded. Messrs. Smith and Ainsworth argued that the service out of Minneapolis was far better than that out of Chicago in spite of the fact that the latter is much nearer. The answer of the Paramount people was, "Wait and see; anyhow, give the new deal a trial." This was finally agreed upon with the understanding that if the February service is not up to standard Fond du Lac will again be served out of Minneapolis.

THE leadership of an orchestra in a moving picture house is a non-essential occupation, according to the latest War Department ruling, if a Fond du Lac case may be taken as a criterion. It was announced some time ago that men in service would be released as employers made requests for their services. Arthur Hastings is one of the young men who put aside his violin to respond to the colors. He was leading the Orpheum orchestra at the time. When the announcement was made that men would be released on application of former employers, Manager Ainsworth asked for Hastings, who is at Camp Custer. This was weeks ago. Hastings is still in service and there is no release in sight.

MANAGER AINSWORTH, of the Orpheum, will put on a benefit for the Woman's Auxiliary of the Y. M. C. A. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, February 24, 25 and 26, presenting "Vive la France." The organization has taken 3,000 tickets.

Interesting Items of Elgin

THE week of February 3 was one of exceptional attraction and big crowds at the Grand. Instead of the regular three-picture schedule, the week was divided between two special attractions. "Johanna Enlists," the first one, was shown Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday; Nazimova in "Eye for Eye" held the screen Thursday, Friday and Saturday. The Pickford picture made great hit, the "regulars" acclaiming it one of the best "Mary" pictures; the "Eye for Eye" showing received the most enthusiastic admiration of all who saw it.

ALTHOUGH there is difference of opinion between the fans regarding the attractiveness of the screen work of Alice Brady, pictures that star her continue to run good when frequently brought to the Grand. In the second February week "In the Hollow of Her Hand," starring Miss Brady, was shown. Other stars and pictures of the week were: "Cecelia of the Pink Roses" with Marion Davies, and Mitchell Lewis in "Code of the Yukon." The Allied War Review and the Pathe Weekly were also shown.

"THE HEART OF RACHEL," starring Bessie Barriscale, one of the features of the week of February 2 at the Temple, received the adulation of scores of picture fans. Its exceptionally excellent photography and gracefulness of production were particularly pleasing. It was considered by many the best of Miss Barriscale's productions. She was billed for "All of a Sudden Norma" for Sunday, February 9.

MANAGER FAY, of the Temple, was expecting big crowds for the showing of Priscilla Dean in "The Wildcat of Paris" on February 11 and 12. He showed the picture at regular admission prices. Other pictures and stars that made that week's bill included the Monday night Combination Program of Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus"; the Wolfville story, "Widow Dangerous"; Chester Conklin in "Loving Memory," and the latest edition of the Weekly News; Houdini in "The Master Mystery"; "Silent Sentinel," the Screen Telegram, "Mixed Nuts," Edith Roberts in "Sue of the South" and Mitchell Lewis in "Life's Greatest Problem."

IN ADDITION to his "Combination" night every Monday, which offers program particularly planned for the entertainment of youngsters, Manager Fay of the Temple has introduced a "Variety night" for Thursdays. This includes each week the latest "Houdini" release, a western picture, the Screen Telegram and a comedy.

THE SCREEN SUPPLEMENT, a monthly release shown for benefit of a motion picture actors' charity fund, has been made an innovation at the Star. The first release was shown February 12 and 13 depicting home and family life of the Drews, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Miles Minter, Montagu Love and Mary Charleson.

THE STAR expected big houses for Monday and Tuesday, February 10 and 11, for showing of Mrs. Charlie Chaplin (Mildred Harris) in "For Husbands Only." The week's bill also included return showing of the popular Pickford picture, "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley"; Anita King in "Petticoats and Politics," "Braving Blazes"; Harold Lloyd in "Hear 'Em Rave," Billy West in "A Rolling Stone," Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider," Charlie, the Chinese comedian, in "The Dare Devil," and Earle Williams and Grace Darmond in "The Highest Trump."

"THE POOR RICH MAN," the first picture co-starring Beverly Bayne and Francis X. Bushman to be made after the recent marriage of the two, was feature of the bill at the Orpheum the second week in February. Other pictures of the week were Clara Kimball Young in "The Savage Woman," Evelyn Nesbit and Russell Thaw in "I Want to Forget," and Lewis S. Stone in "The Man of Bronze."

THE new Eddie Polo serial, booked for February 14 at the Crystal theatre, Dundee, was postponed in starting until February 28 on account of late booking of David W. Griffith "Hearts of the World" for February 21. It was not deemed advisable to start the serial and skip the second episode, so the opening showing was deferred for three weeks and will be shown February 28.

AT the request of the several hundred fans turned away from the Star theatre at the time of the successive stampede when Charlie Chaplin in "Shoulder Arms" was on the bill, that picture was brought back by Manager Crocker for showing on Wednesday and Thursday, January 29 and 30. Preparation was made for handling of the record crowds that saw the picture two weeks ago.

A RETURN showing of Marguerite Clark in "The Amazons," shown in Elgin several times since its release at various local houses, was brought back again for showing on Tuesday, January 28, at the Star by Manager Ralph Crocker. Other pictures of the week were Bessie Barriscale in "Two Gun Betty," "Mutt and Jeff" in cartoon comedy, Harold Lloyd in "Take a Chance," a Sidney Drew comedy, Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider," Billy West in "Playmates," Madeline Traverse in "The Danger Zone," and Harold Lloyd in "Nothing But Trouble."

"HITTING THE HIGH SPOTS," starring Bert Lytell, was the Sunday and Monday opening feature at the Orpheum the week of January 26. Other stars and pictures shown in the week were Alice Brady in "The Death Dance," Theda Bara in "The She-Devil," and Montagu Love in "The Grouch." All except the Brady picture were shown for two days each.

PROMISE of Mary Pickford in "Johanna Enlists" for February 3 and 5 at the Grand, is elating lovers of the winsome star who have been asking eagerly for this popular picture since it has been shown and seen in Chicago by many from here.

Condensed News of Flint

THOUGH the Strand theatre has been constructed only about three years, Manager Lester E. Natt has found it too small and it will be entirely remodeled this spring and a balcony added. The capacity of the house will be increased from about 700 to 1,200. An entire new front will be constructed and the building will be redecorated and refurnished. A permit for the preliminary work which will consist of the building of a new roof and raising of the walls to give the height for the new balcony has been issued. It is estimated this work which will be done without interfering with the operation of the theatre will cost $18,000. After the new roof is built the theatre will be closed and the old roof torn out and the balcony erected. About $40,000 will be spent on the entire job.

"THE HEART OF HUMANITY" has been booked by Manager Charles Garfield of the Orpheum for a week's showing in the near future. A lavish publicity program has been outlined to help put the picture over.

ANOTHER Evelyn Nesbit picture was shown at the Strand February 10, 11 and 12. "Her Mistake" was the offering.

A SPECIAL screening of "Mickey" was given at the Garden theatre Sunday, February 8, for theatre men and newspaper representatives. "The best Normand has ever done" was the unanimous verdict of those who saw the picture.

DOROTHY GISH in "The Hope Chest" was the attraction at the Garden theatre February 10, 11 and 12. Wallace Reid in "The Dub" was shown the last three days of the week. This theatre is showing Paramount-Artcraft attractions more and more and the increasing patronage which the house enjoys is evidence of how the pictures are being enjoyed.

Chaplin Abandons His World Tour Idea Because of United Artists

CHARLIE CHAPLIN has abandoned his idea for a trip around the world, it was officially announced on February 5 by Sidney Chaplin, personal manager for the comedy star. The trip is abandoned, Mr. Chaplin says, because of his recent affiliation with the United Artists' association. He intends to rush production on his remaining pictures under his First National contract, which he believes will require ten months.

Two pictures on his First National contract, "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms" have already been completed and are now playing. Three other subjects are to be produced. As soon as announcement was made that Chaplin would not go abroad, production activity at his studios, which had been closed for several weeks, was soon under way. In his latest picture it is said that Chaplin has departed from his original characterizations and that he intends to present a new study in comedy.

Gordon Place Succeeds Kearney in New York

GORDON H. PLACE, former publicity manager for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Salt Lake, has been advanced in the New York offices to the position of editor of Progress-Advance, the weekly house organ of the corporation.

Mr. Place was transferred from the Salt Lake office to the home office publicity department last September and was assigned at once to an associate editorship of Progress-Advance. Upon the transfer of Patrick Kearney, the then editor, to the Hollywood, Cal., studio publicity department, Mr. Place was selected to succeed him.

Salt Lake City Forges Straight Ahead

SALT LAKE theatre managers and, in fact, theatrical men of Utah, are taking old man Hard Time by the forelock and shaking him vigorously. While the dailies of the country are wailing over the post-war situation local managers are preparing for a long siege at the box-offices by the entertainment-seeking public. Superattractions are being booked with startling rapidity. New theatres are being built, remodeling is being hastened and other theatres are planned.

George Dwyer Takes Hippodrome in Salt Lake City

GEORGE DWYER, formerly manager of the local Pantages vaudeville house, and an experienced theatre man, has taken over the Hippodrome theatre of Salt Lake, owned by George Hale. The theatre has been dark for more than a year.

Mr. Dwyer has begun the task of remodeling the theatre and thousands of dollars will be put into making the house a motion picture palace. A Hope-Jones Unit organ has been purchased and has already been shipped to Salt Lake for installation in the house. Until it arrives a sixteen-piece orchestra will furnish the music for the house.

Mr. Dwyer has not lined up with any line of pictures but states that he will run only the biggest of film features at the House. He has a strong leaning toward Universal films, however, according to Gus Hager, manager of the local Universal exchange, and is planning to open with Universal's "Virtuous Wives." He is also planning to feature the Universal "Hearts of Humanity."

February 11 was set as the date for the opening of the theatre.

Revised "Intolerance" Shown in Los Angeles at Kinema Theatre

THE first public showing of the revised reissue of the modern story of "Intolerance" is being given in Los Angeles at the Kinema theatre, the film carrying the original title selected for it by D. W. Griffith, "The Mother and the Law." This film opened its engagement on February 2, and is destined to run two or probably three weeks, if not more.

There is very little added to this film that was not seen in "Intolerance," but separation from the two other periods of "Intolerance" seems to add materially to this episode. Like "The Fall of Babylon," recently shown, the story is sufficiently strong to be an excellent entertainment by itself, and one that is more emphatic than when coupled with the two spectacular stories as when it was a part of "Intolerance."

"The Mother and the Law" is a travesty dealing with the effects of the so-called reformers who attempt to better the world for themselves and for their aggrandizement.

LOUIS HYMAN, branch manager of All Star Features, announces that All Star has purchased the rights to Mack Sennett's comedy, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." He has not as yet arranged a preview in Los Angeles, but he believes the picture is going to prove a knockout for the exhibitors. Mr. Hyman also announces that the Mabel Normand production, "Mickey," has been booked for a second run at the Kinema theatre beginning March 2.

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," the rights of which belong to All Star Features in California and Arizona, will in the future be booked direct to the exhibitor from the All Star exchanges, according to announcement by Branch Manager Louis Hyman. "I now look for the picture to be returned to many houses where it has already been shown, and those theatres that did not get the picture on the former special releasing basis, will now have an opportunity to clean up on what is conceded to be one of the best pictures ever made by D. W. Griffith."

THE Central theatre at Lowell, Ariz., owned by Nick Damos, burned down on Thursday, January 30, according to word received in Los Angeles by various exchange managers. The cause of the fire was not determined. Burning with the theatre were twelve reels of film, among which was a feature production owned by All Star features. It is not announced whether Mr. Damos will rebuild.

LOUIS HYMAN, branch manager of All Star Features, announced that on February 1 he increased the force in his office so as to be able to adequately handle the increased books of the office, due to the adding of "Hearts of the World" and "Mickey" to his list of subjects to be booked direct to the exhibitor.

NICK STEELE, salesman for All Star features, left for Arizona on February 3, where with many other film salesmen now traveling in that state, he will call upon every exhibitor in calling distance.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER, district manager for United, left Los Angeles January 31 for a three or four week's visit in Denver.

CHARLES UNDERWOOD, assistant manager of the Grogg Amusement enterprises of Bakersfield, died last Tuesday, January 28, of influenza, it became known on film row a few days later. His death was a considerable blow to the company with which he was associated, inasmuch as it followed so closely the death of Charles Grogg, head of the Grogg Amusement Enterprises, who died a few weeks previously, also of influenza.

H. M. LENTZ, branch manager of the United exchange, has returned from a visit to San Diego, where he called on the exhibitors of that city during the last two or three days of January.

THE Select exchange has received in Los Angeles a print of "The Belle of New York," the Select production featuring Marion Davies. A preview will be given at an early date, according to announcement by Branch Manager B. E. Loper. Mr. Loper maintains that "The Belle of New York" is one of the best pictures placed on the market by Select.

C. E. ELLIOTT, who handles Select special productions in the Los Angeles territory, returned on February 1 from a two weeks' trip through Arizona. He says that conditions in that state are improving, although not as yet back to normal.

Spokane News and Views

THE Casino and Class A theatres in Spokane will be showing Goldwyn pictures regularly, starting off Saturday, February 8. Manager C. E. Stilwell has secured the complete output of the Goldwyn studios and has also contracted for the Hodgkinson features. These two contracts will place before patrons of the Casino and Class A theatres some of the most famous stars of the motion picture industry. The Goldwyn stars include such favorites as Madge Kennedy, Geraldine Farrar, Mabel Normand, Pauline Frederick, Mae Marsh, Tom Moore, and Rex Beach, the author, who will appear in "Laughing Bill Hyde," his own story. The Hodgkinson service includes such actors as Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Harry B. Walthall and others. The first of the new service will be Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell-Cat," Saturday, February 8. Hereafter the Casino shows will be changed on Saturday instead of Sunday.

W. H. ("LONESTAR") DIETZ, famous football coach and moving picture actor, was indicted by the Federal Grand Jury in Spokane recently on a charge of false registration under the draft. Dietz, who has been engaged with a motion picture concern in Los Angeles, will come to Spokane to plead not guilty to the charge. In his questionnaire Dietz, who was the football coach for the Mare Island Marines, is said to have claimed every possible ground for exemption, including necessary head of an industrial establishment, dependent family, ward of the Government, an alien, an Indian, and a non-voting resident of the United States. The fact that Dietz, holding a Federal position as instructor for the marines' football team at Mare Island, denied his American citizenship and placed himself in the role of a man without a country, so aroused the exemption board that the matter was given to the public. His exemption claim was denied and he was placed in Class 1.

THE new D. W. Griffith production, "Greatest Thing in Life," drew big houses to the Liberty theatre all week, with Lillian Gish and Robert Harron in the stellar roles. "Tarzan of the Apes" had its second showing here, doing good business at the Majestic. Marguerite Clark as "Little Miss Hoover" captivated Clemmer theatre audiences.

Fish Gets Sympathy from Viola Dana

"POOR RALPH," sighed little Viola Dana, as she gave away her pet goldfish to a friend in Los Angeles, "I'm afraid he has a trying life."

Ralph swam sadly about in the glass bowl, waving his long tail of gossamer and gold in pensive melancholy.

"I always think of that expression of Irvin S. Cobb's, 'as much privacy as a goldfish,' and think of the model life that he has always been forced to lead. He must always be at his best, always on parade. He cannot even have a past, for he is constantly watched. The only thing reprehensible I ever heard about him was that he drank—but then I don't hold that against him, for practically every fish does."

Photoplayers Return From Army

DURING the past week a number of former photoplayers who have been in the army have returned to Los Angeles. Four of these are Ray Gallagher, George Shesebro, Art Acord, and Jacques Jaccard, who were with the 143rd Field Artillery. Hank Mann, of the same regiment, is still in France as the result of injury received in a football game. Arthur Shivers, formerly identified with the Los Angeles office of Motion Picture News, who was a member of this regiment, has returned from "over there" and honorably discharged. He is now at his home in Des Moines, Iowa, recovering from influenza and pneumonia from which he suffered while in France.

In Portland Film Circles

WITH the Spanish influenza apparently at the mercy of the health authorities, Portland theatres have lifted their self-imposed ban limiting attendance to seating capacity, and while they are not jamming the public in as of yore, about 50 per cent of standing room is being utilized.

BUSINESS is particularly good with the film houses. "The public has recovered from its "flu" scare, and to celebrate their new freedom are invading the theatres in such numbers as to sorely tempt managers to grab tickets until the police order a halt.

ARTHUR SHIRLEY, well-known screen and stage actor, who is going to make pictures in Australia for American consumption, was in Portland for a couple of days recently. He's on a tour of the country meeting exhibitors, and in Portland met an old friend, Paul E. ("No-Bull") Noble, publicity boss for Jensen and Von Herberg. With Virginia Dare as his leading woman, Shirley is going to be making pictures within a few months and plans to have them on the market within eight months.

CLAUDE S. JENSEN and J. G. Von Herberg, the leading film exhibitors of the Northwest, no sooner returned from Southern California than they started on another jaunt to Los Angeles. The affairs of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is what took them South again.

WESTERN MANAGER MOONEY, of the Fox Film Corporation, was in Portland last week with K. L. Burke, north-west manager, and Frank E. Montgomery, new Fox salesman for the territory. Mr. Montgomery is the husband of Princess Mona Darkfeather, who may soon be making pictures at the head of her own company, and is himself a pioneer screen director. He is credited with making the first three-reel feature, and his wide experience as a producer is proving a valuable asset in signing up business for Fox.

HARRY S. FREEDMAN, one of the big stockholders of the Strand theatre, is a rival of Bill Parker, Majestic owner, as a prophet. He, too, predicted that the war would end before January 1, 1919. When his exhibitor friends wish to delve into the future they suggest, "Go into the silence, Harry." It's a difficult feat for Harry to achieve—that silence stuff—but they say he's got nerve enough to name the sex of the offspring before the stork makes his appearance.

"REEL STUFF," the popular exhibitor weekly issued by Universal, with Dean Collins as its editor, is to be temporarily discontinued.

E. S. McCONNELL, one of Universal's publicity men, in charge of serials and Screen Magazine, was in Portland last week.

JEFFERSON AND BROZENE have opened the Derby theatre, in Kenton, a Portland suburb. The house was closed for a long time.

W. F. GATCHELL has sold his Bungalow theatre, Woodburn, Ore., to Hanauska Brothers.

AFTER an enforced theatreless period of six weeks Newburg, Ore., is again on the map. Manager Ferguson has his Baker theatre running full blast these days.

VANCOUVER, WASH., theatres are in the grip of the "flu" ban again and Manager McGill, of the U. S. A. theatre, is planning an auto tour of California.

AMONG recent out-of-town visitors to Portland's film row were L. S. McConnell, of the Star, Sherwood, Ore.; J. B. Sparks, of Heppner and Condon; Doc Crews, of Walla Walla, Wash.; Lew Cullins, of The Dalles; J. Danz, of Astoria.

Enid Bennett Begins New Ince Production

ENID BENNETT has commenced work under the direction of Fred Niblo on a story by the author and scenarist, C. Gardner Sullivan. In this forthcoming production the Thomas H. Ince star is given the part of a young newspaper girl, who is assigned by her superior to solve a murder mystery. Among those in the cast are Mabel Trunnelle, Jack Nelson, Lloyd Hughes, Wm. Conklin, Otto Hoffman, Harry Archer and Joe Anthony.

One of the biggest sets ever built on an enclosed stage has been constructed at the studio for the Bennett picture. The set shows a grand and massive staircase, at the head of which is a hall. Opening into this hall are five complete rooms. By this arrangement the cameras may shoot scenes through the hall and the respective doorways.

Al. Nathan State Rights on the West Coast

AL. NATHAN, who was formerly manager of the Superba theatre in Los Angeles and then went east to manage houses for Carl Laemmle, returned from New York last week. Mr. Nathan is state righting pictures in this territory and has brought along a collection of subjects. He is also buying negatives for eastern trade and world rights and has made some purchases recently that took quite a few reels off of the shelves of various producers. One of the pictures that he will exploit is "And the Children Pay," the picture that ran five weeks at the Bandbox in Chicago despite the many threats of Major Funkhouser to have it stopped. It deals with prudishness on the part of parents. He is dickering with a big Broadway house for its initial opening.

Mitchell Lewis Goes Into Timber for Picture

HAVING completed his first two pictures for Select, Mitchell Lewis will soon journey into one more un-photographed California mountain location and undertake the work of filming another of the type of motion pictures for which he has become particularly noted.

With his own producing organization, located in Los Angeles, Lewis has filmed The Code of the Yukon and Children of Banishment, which are his first two releases for the Selznick Company, and is ready to undertake the third production, which will also be of the rugged type, best suited to this star. Mr. Lewis is at present seeking other vehicles of a fitting nature and it is likely that within a few weeks he will have annexed some of the works of a well-known author. While he has found most of his success in characterizations from famous novels, such as The Barrier, The Sign Invisible, The Bar Sinister and the two stories mentioned above, and will continue to produce pictures from other works of well-known novelists, Lewis also has in mind the picturization later of several original stories if suitable roles can be created.

In and Around Denver

CHARLES R. GILMORE, who represents United Pictures in Denver, is visiting several Idaho points this week. He left here several days ago to attend the annual meeting of the Idaho Exhibitors' League, which was held at Boise, February 5 and 6.

HARRY LUSTIG, special representative for Metro, has been visiting Denver exhibitors for nearly two weeks. He left February 8 for Salt Lake City, where he will spend five or six days. "The new Rivoli here will play all of the Nazimova subjects," said Mr. Lustig. "The regular weekly release of Metro has been shown steadily at the Strand theatre for almost four years, and while here I have arranged for a continuance of the contract. The outlook in Denver territory is exceptionally bright, and Metro pictures and Nazimova productions are being rapidly booked in every town tributary to this exchange. War pictures seem to be going fairly good in Denver territory, with Metro subjects, "Why Germany Must Pay" and "The Great Victory" taking the lead.

DENVER film exchange managers attended a farewell dinner Saturday, February 1, by Mr. and Mrs. H. Bradley Fish in honor of A. E. Fair on the eve of his departure for Dallas, where he has already entered on his duties as manager of the Triangle headquarters. As a slight token of the high esteem in which he is held in local exchange circles, Mr. Fair was presented with a pair of solid gold cuff links set with diamonds.

MR. FAIR has been identified with the motion picture business in this section for twelve years and enjoyed the personal acquaintance of practically every exhibitor in the territory. He was for a time connected with General and has been in charge of Triangle's business here for the past two years. As manager of the Dallas exchange he will have charge of a much larger territory, which is represented by a population of six million. His successor is D. Callahan, whom he is relieving in Dallas. Mr. Callahan has not yet arrived in Denver.

O. F. WOODY has arrived from New York City and has joined the sales force of Select Pictures. In order to accept this position he recently resigned one of more importance—that of assistant manager for Triangle in New York. He had been connected with Triangle there for a year and a half.

EARL RADCLIFFE, also of Select, has left on a long trip covering northern Colorado, Wyoming and the Black Hills circuit.

MANAGER LOTZ, who has just returned from an important business mission in Salt Lake City, says prospects were never better for a big season. He states that the Denver exchange for the month of January surpassed all previous records by 20 per cent, and that February will exceed January by nearly as large a percentage, if not more.

HERMAN BROWN, owner of the Iris at Casper, Wyo., was a Denver visitor this week, as was also H. F. Brennan, owner of the Lyric at Casper. Both report an increased business.

THE Sunnyside Mining and Milling company, Eureka, Colo., has ordered new Simplex equipment for a theatre which it is establishing for the benefit of its employees.

LEVY & DAWSON of the Walsenburg Amusement company are making improvements including new equipment.

GEORGE N. BREWER, who operates the U. S. A. theatre at Sidney, Nebraska, has arranged to open the Opera House theatre at Peetz, Colo., with a regular picture program.

LEE A. STOREY of Lingle, Wyoming, is figuring on opening a picture theatre at that place.

HENRY WATERMAN of Big Springs, Neb., has opened a new theatre there, but has not decided on a name for it yet. Mr. Waterman is also engaged in the automobile business.

G. W. WHITNEY has resigned his position as salesman for Metro out of Denver, to operate the Electric theatre at Hoisington, Kansas. He is succeeded by Irving Ehrensoft, who recently held a similar position with the local Supreme exchange.

San Francisco Does Away with Influenza Masks

ON February 1 the Mayor of San Francisco declared all masks off in San Francisco. Before he issued his proclamation the people were rapidly disregarding their mufflers and a majority of those who clung to the ornament were wearing them under their chins where they could be readily slipped up if a blue coat hove in sight. It is believed that this will end the influenza scare in this section. Dr. Hassler has prates about a return visit, but even he says that if it comes it will, doubtless, be light. As soon as San Francisco unmasked towns all over the state began to discard their closing ordinances. It is expected that by next week every theatre in the state will be running at full blast. At the same time the news from Honolulu is far from reassuring. The epidemic is said to be very severe there and all the theatres, churches and other public meeting places are closed.

With Los Angeles Theatres and Exchanges

T. W. CHATBURN, western division manager for Vitagraph, with offices in Chicago, who succeeded the late H. D. Naugle, arrived in Los Angeles January 29 for a week's visit. Before coming to the West Coast he visited Vitagraph exchanges at Kansas City, Dallas and other Middle Western and South-western cities. "I have not only talked with exchange managers, but with hundreds of exhibitors," he said, "and I find that business is getting back to normal in every community I have visited." It has been three years since Mr. Chatburn was in Los Angeles. He will go from here to San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Salt Lake City and Denver before returning to Chicago.

ALEXANDER PANTAGES, owner of many theatres by that name on the West Coast, has personally booked for a number of his houses the Vitagraph serial, "A Man of Might," starring William Duncan, according to announcement by Branch Manager W. H. Hepburn of the Los Angeles Vitagraph exchange. William Duncan was master of ceremonies on January 25 when ground was broken for Mr. Pantages' new theatre in Los Angeles.

PAT STEVENSON, Vitagraph salesman, left January 31 for a trip to San Diego and Imperial Valley, where he will call upon the exhibitors in this territory.

"THE COMMON CAUSE," J. Stuart Blackton's superproduction for Vitagraph, had a great run in Phoenix during the week of January 27, it was announced by the Los Angeles Vitagraph offices.

BRANCH Manager W. H. Hepburn, of the Vitagraph exchange, announces that it has been difficult to supply enough prints of Big-V special comedies in the Los Angeles and Arizona territory. He has ordered some new prints of several different subjects, he says.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S newest picture, "Sunnyside," will soon be ready for release, according to announcement from the Chaplin studios. The picture will be handled by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and Branch Manager W. E. Knotts believes the subject will have a remarkable run in this territory.

T. L. TALLY, of Tally's Broadway theatre, and Seymour Tally, his son, in company with B. E. Loper, branch manager of Select exchange, left Los Angeles on January 30 for a hunting trip in the vicinity of Balboa. They took advantage of the last two days of the hunting season, and returning to Los Angeles they reported "much luck, most of it rain." They had hardly arrived in "the happy hunting grounds" until the belated rains of Southern California overtook them.

HARVEY GAUSMAN, salesman for the First National, visited in the Riverside and San Bernardino territory during the last few days of January, where he reported business as slightly improved.

THE Long Beach influenza ban has again been lifted, and the theatres of the beach city were opened on Friday, January 31. The houses had been closed since January 22. The Pasadena City council on January 30 repealed its "mask ordinance," and immediately thereafter the theatres reported increased business. The cities of Globe and Miami, Ariz., as well as Ontario, Cal., after several days under the flu ban, have been reopened. Only a few towns in Southern California and Arizona now remain closed because of influenza restrictions.

EARL SINKS, Universal salesman, left February 1 by automobile for a trip through Arizona, where he will pass about two weeks calling on the exhibitors of that territory.

R. L. TAYLOR, an exhibitor of Brawley, Cal., was in Los Angeles during the last few days of January and announced that he has opened a new theatre in Brawley. He booked a number of Universal subjects.

DAVID BERSHON, branch manager for Universal exchange, who has been ill with influenza since early in January, has not as yet been able to return to his work, although he made a few brief visits to the exchange last week. He expected to be on the job by February 5, or thereabouts, according to word sent by him to Assistant Branch Manager C. L. Theuerkauf, who has been handling the affairs of the office during Mr. Bershon's illness.

LEWIS AND BAIRD, who operate the Neptune theatre at Venice, have booked Universal service, according to announcement by Assistant Branch Manager Theuerkauf. The first picture booked by the Venice house was the Universal special "Kiss or Kill," and it was repeated. The next picture was the Priscilla Dean production, "The Wild Cat of Paris."

In and Around the Coast Studios

DENNIS O'BRIEN, attorney for Mary Pickford, who came west several weeks ago, or when the United Artists' association, comprising Miss Pickford, D. W. Griffith, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin was first launched, planned to leave for New York on February 8.

"SOMETHING FOR SOMEBODY," the newest Douglas Fairbanks play, will be completed about February 15, it is announced at the Fairbanks studios in Hollywood. For several weeks production has been more or less delayed on this play, it is said, inasmuch as Mr. Fairbanks has been devoting much time to perfecting the United Artists' association.

THE Dorothy Gish Company has resumed work at the Sunset Studios, and is now filming a story titled "Peppy Polly" written by Frank E. Garbutt. Richard Bartholomew is to play

News of the Week in San Francisco

THE Alhambra Theatre, one of the Market street first run houses, which is under the direction of M. L. Markowitz, manager of the Universal Film Exchange, Inc., is about to abandon the exclusive use of pictures, and beginning February 9 will run as a musical comedy house, retaining pictures as a part of its entertainment.

THE San Francisco Chronicle has signed up with the Universal News Weekly for a new screen magazine to be known as the S. F. Chronicle Screen Magazine. The Chronicle will co-operate with Universal in every way.

IT looks as if the news end of motion pictures is about to be pretty thoroughly exploited in this territory. The new Pacific Coast section of the Gaumont Graphic and the Gaumont News, which will be devoted exclusively to Coast news, is about ready for circulation through Sol Lesser. This Pacific Coast section is said to be meeting with a great deal of favor among exhibitors.

THE new "Kinograms," a news service circulated by the World, is also meeting with favor among the exhibitors, who seem very keen to sign up for the service. This service will start in this territory on February 9.

FLOYD ST. JOHN, manager of the World Film Corp., is back from a trip to Los Angeles. He says that while he was in the Southern metropolis he failed to sign up with the "Big Five." However, he believes it is no disgrace to fail to get all five of them to agree to the exclusive World circulation.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for the World Film Corp. to care for the physical distribution of the pictures of the United. The sales in this territory will continue to be handled, as formerly, by W. J. Citron, who will move his office from the General to the World headquarters. Alterations are now under way at the World to take care of the change.

HADDON STEPHENS, one of the oldest World salesmen in this territory, has been promoted to become manager of the World office in Salt Lake. He left February 3 for his new position. Mr. Stephens will be succeeded on the sales force of the local branch by George Schlessinger, who formerly conducted a theatre in the central part of the State and will be able to bring the exhibitor's viewpoint into his sales talks.

IRVING LESSER is to be released from the navy at an early date. He will go to Chicago at once and there take charge of the Chicago interests of Sol Lesser. On the start he will be mainly concerned with the "Hearts of the World."

M. L. MARKOWITZ, manager of the Universal, says that bookings on "Hearts of Humanity" are proceeding rapidly and the picture promises to go big.

M. J. COHEN, manager of the General Film Co., announces his resignation, to take effect on February 8. Regarding his future he says that at present he has nothing to say.

M. L. MOORE, who was assistant manager of the George Kleine System, has also resigned.

F. E. SAMUELS, special representative of the General Film Co., New York, has returned from Portland for the purpose of assuming charge of the General office until such time as he can arrange for the appointment of a successor to Mr. Cohen. One report has it that Mr. Samuels may himself take the management of the office.

L. J. MEYBERG, motion picture producer and distributor of Los Angeles, was a visitor to San Francisco this week.

NEWTON E. LEVI, of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corp., is just back from a visit to the offices in the North under his jurisdiction. He is very enthusiastic over the theatrical business in Seattle and Portland, where he says that despite the influenza conditions business is above normal. The Northern audiences are being carried away with "The Cannibals of the South Sea." This picture is playing to capacity houses at advanced prices, and is booked through solid in that territory to May.

THE Mutual has three first run pictures in San Francisco this week. At the Tivoli Billie Rhodes is appearing in "The Girl of My Dreams." This same picture is being shown at the T & D Theatre, Oakland, and Billie is appearing at both theatres in person to add to the attractiveness of the film. The second picture is "Life's a Funny Proposition," starring William Desmond, at the Rialto, and "The Cannibals of the South Sea" film is being shown at the Strand.

ANOTHER theatre which is enjoying the advantage of the personal appearance of the actress in the play appearing is the Rialto, where Gladys Brockwell is appearing in person and "The Call of the Soul" on the screen.

THE ALL STAR FEATURES DISTRIBUTORS, INC., has just taken on Jack Frazier as road salesman. He has been connected with the Mutual and also has worked in the Los Angeles territory and in Arizona. He is making the towns in the San Joaquin valley on his first trip with his new connection.

MR. PERRY, for a short time manager of the Rialto theatre in this city and formerly connected with the game in the East, has just been appointed manager of the T & D theatre in Oakland. Sam Edwards, who has been acting manager of that theatre, has returned to the main office of that corporation.

THE Duhem Motion Picture Manufacturing Company has been making an important picture of the steel industry, especially in its connection to making steel casting for use in torpedo boats and other warships. The picture will show the entire process from the melting of scrap and pig iron to the launching of the warship. The pictures relating to the steel end were made at the Columbia Steel Works at Pittsburg, Cal. Other pictures were made in foundries and brass works. Most of the pictures are interiors, and were made with the radium flares which, Ray Duhem says, have acted very satisfactorily in the dark interiors he had to take. The picture will be completed at an early date, and it is intended to have it shown for the first time to a gathering of steel and iron men toward the end of the present month.

Flickers on the Screens of Butte

LAST Sunday there were around 3,000 paid admissions to the Liberty theatre, a house that has a seating capacity of 400.

TWO Montanans, A. Buchanan of Miles City and A. H. Dutton of Butte, are interested in the Historical Motion Picture Company, organized to picture events of historical interest relating to Montana. The studio is at Hollywood, Cal., and the first production will be entitled "The Montana Colony in California."

UNDER new management the Liberty is now doing excellent business. A little more attention to detail, a little improvement in the class of pictures offered and the spending of a little money for advertising did the trick. But then, the show game is made up largely of little things, the combination, in the right way, resulting in the big thing, success.

C. H. ARCHIBALD, well-known Pocatello showman, reports business as gradually picking up and now being practically what it was a year ago. He is interested in the Princess, Orpheum and Olympic, the latter being dark at this time, but due to open in a week. The influenza ban hit Pocatello hard for a ten weeks' shutdown. The theatres resumed business December 15, but it was the first of the year before the box office began to approach normal, according to Mr. Archibald. "Business is now good, and we will reopen our third downtown house with confidence shortly," he said. "Conditions in this city are generally excellent, although the 'flu' did hit us hard."

SEVERAL Montana men attended the Idaho Theatre Managers' Association meetings in Boise February 6 and 7. Exhibitors from all over the state were present at the annual convention, and a number of matters pertaining to the welfare of the business were given consideration.

SINCE President Phil Levy of the Montana State Exhibitors' League has removed to California, establishing his residence there, Al Heinecke of the Judith, Lewiston, as vice-president, is at the head of the organization. It is thought that he will soon summon the showmen to meet in annual convention, probably in Butte, the usual meeting place and the theatrical centre of Montana.

BESSIE LOVE, always a local favorite, appeared this week to good business at the Ansonia in "The Dawn of Understanding," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon special.

A CECIL B. B. DE MILLE Artcraft special, "Don't Change Your Husband," held the boards last week to good business at the Rialto. It proved to be a high class production, and pleased.

THE American theatre has given notice of an appeal in the case against the Goldwyn Corporation and the Ansonia, the case to come up in the State Supreme Court. The right to show the Goldwyn productions in Butte is at issue, the Ansonia now being in possession of the service.

MOVING PICTURES figured strongly at the Broadway when Potash & Perlmutter appeared in "Business Before Pleasure." The play is based on the "movie" making game, and Butte people had many a laugh over the troubles of being a film producer as depicted in the laughable farce.

ROBERT A. BRACKETT, Select Picture Corporation's representative, was in Butte the past week from his headquarters in Seattle.

What They Say in Seattle

FRIENDS of Menedel Nieder, a former independent salesman on Seattle's Film Row, have been glad to learn that he has been cited for bravery over in France by Major General Johnson, commander of the famous 91st Division. There were many thousands of brave men in this big Wild West division and to receive special recognition for bravery means more than mere praise.

GUS METZGER, general manager of the West Coast for Universal, brought with him to Seattle on his return trip from New York that big Universal feature, "Hearts of Humanity." Manager Mead, of the Seattle office, invited a half-hundred guests to view a pre-release of this picture at the Liberty at a midnight matinee. The Liberty organ was used to interpret the picture and all the guests were more than pleased.

CHARLES CLARY, a Seattle actor, well known in motion pictures and among Seattle's actors, was grasped with the influenza, just as he was beginning work on Hampton's production, "What Every Woman Wants."

M. J. DAVIS and C. F. Jones have bought The Dream Theatre of Los Angeles, Wash., from James Chenaux.

ED FORD has bought Mrs. O. C. Leiter's interest in The Arcade Theatre, Le Grande, Oregon.

KLAMATH FALLS recently closed once more, having been opened from a "flu" quarantine that extended over several weeks.

J. C. UGLOW has changed the name of his Dallas, Oregon, house from the Orpheum to The Majestic.

HARRY IRWIN'S new theatre building in Lewiston, Montana, will be ready for opening in the early spring.

MANAGER BROWER will reopen the Houlton theatre, St. Helens, under the name of the Sunset.

MANAGER KRECH of The Cozy Theatre, Spirit Lake, Idaho, has announced that he has made arrangements to rebuild it.

M. L. BROWN, of the Yesler, Seattle, is back on the job after a severe illness.

LLOYD MORGAN has sold his theatre in Marysville, Wash., to Art E. Oril.

MR. McCLELLAND, traveling light for the Northwest Goldwyn office, has just returned from a trip through eastern Oregon where he found conditions very good. They were a little better than expected, as it was thought that the "flu" would do more damage than it did in the screen line.

JACK BARBOUR, well-known Alaskan and manager of the Liberty, Ketchikan, Alaska, was a prominent figure on Film Row last week. Mr. Barbour said that the picture business has been poor the last few months, but it is beginning to pick up now as old residents are coming back to the Northland together with friends. Every boat from Seattle brings up new settlers.

MRS. BOSWORTH, also a resident of Ketchikan, was a visitor on the row.

FRANK STANNARD, of Wenatchee, Wash., was told the "flu" ban was lifted and he could open his theatre. He did. In a short time he was ordered to close it, on account of the "flu."

A. J. KENNEDY, formerly publicity manager for the Northwest office of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, recently resigned this position to handle the automobile section of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

DICK ROSEBAUM, manager of the Northwest office of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, has returned to his office in Seattle after a short successful trip through Montana.

CHAS. M. THALL, booker and office manager for the De Luxe Film Co., of Seattle, has left for San Francisco, where he will take up new duties. Mr. Thall has been succeeded by Mr. Featherstone.

R. H. ALLAN, manager of the Seattle branch of the General Film Company, announces that he has four big releases for February. They are two Edgar Lewis special productions starring Mitchell Lewis and the Sherry service big specials.

opposite Miss Gish, and others selected as players are Raymond Cannon, Edward Peil, Josephine Crowell, Kate Toncray, Emily Chesterton, Pearl Lovei, and John Leezer will be the cameraman. Elmer Clifton who has directed all previous Dorothy Gish subjects, will be in charge of this production.

THE May Allison picture, "The Island of Intrigue," which has been in course of production for several weeks, was finished during the first week in February. Miss Allison made two trips to Santa Cruz and Catalina islands, and only returned from the second cruise on February 4.

THE Hale Hamilton, Anna Q. Nilsson and Viola Dana productions are about half finished. Bert Lytell's picture, "The Blind Man's Eyes," directed by John Ince, was completed the first week in February. Naomi Childers is his leading woman. Others in the cast are Joseph Kilgour and Frank Currier.

"GAMBLING FOR SOULS" is the title of the production finished during the week of February 3 at the Fox studios by Harry Millard starring Madlaine Traverse. The play had been in course of production for several weeks. Herbert Heyes is leading man for Miss Traverse. As soon as the production was completed Miss Traverse left Los Angeles for a few day's visit at Redlands, where she owns an orange grove.

TOM MIX, Fox western star, having in mind a story but not being decided as to settings and backgrounds, left for Arizona to find some suitable locations for the filming of a few of his ideas, according to announcement from the studios February 3. His company, headed by Director Edward Le Saint planned to leave for Arizona, also, on the following Sunday, having full confidence in the ability of Mix to locate the scenes desired in the picture. In the meantime Mix has finished his latest screen effort, "Fighting For Gold," in which he was the joint director with Edward Le Saint.

UPON the completion of production of "Mary Regan" starring Anita Stewart, Lois Weber will go east for a surgical operation, and following this plans to take a long vacation and make a tour of the world. Miss Weber fell in a Los Angeles store in September, and fractured the bones of her forearm just at the elbow. She has never had use of the arm since, and X-ray examinations show that a splinter of bone is embedded in the elbow.

ANITA STEWART Productions are to go forward under the direction of Marshall Neilan. The next picture to be made with this star will be "Her Kingdom of Dreams" from the story of the same name by Agnes Louise Provost. Following this it is the intention to film the old time favorite melodrama, "In Old Kentucky," written by Charles Dazey.

Additional Los Angeles News

MARY PICKFORD'S first production for First National, titled "Daddy Long Legs," will be ready for release within a few weeks, it has been announced from the studios, where she returned to work the latter part of January. The production was held up during the twenty-three days of her illness with influenza and subsequent quarantine. Inquiries from exhibitors in California and Arizona relative to the release dates of the production are already reaching the First National exchange, Branch Manager W. E. Knotts announces.

THE first print of "The Fighting Roosevelts" has arrived in Los Angeles, and a preview will be arranged at an early date. It is possible that the subject will be booked at either Grauman's or the Kinema theatre, Branch Manager Knotts of the First National exchange announces. "The Fighting Roosevelts" is appearing serially in story form in the Los Angeles Evening Express.

J. M. BOLAND, Fox salesman, on January 31 returns from a three day's visit to the Riverside and Redlands territory. He announces that Howe and Merrill at Redlands have just completed improvements on their theatre, which is known as the Loring theatre, which entailed a cost of $50,000, and the house has been reopened for business.

THE Annette Kellerman production, "Queen of the Sea," has been booked for a week's run at Ray's Garden theatre, beginning February 9, and Theda Bara in "Salome" will follow the picture for another week's showing, beginning February 16.

J. SLIPPER and company announced on February 1 the sale of two Type S Simplex projecting machines to Frank Schaeffer, manager of the De Luxe theatre. The machines have already been installed.

R. E. McINTYRE, auditor for Famous Players-Lasky company, is in Los Angeles for an indefinite visit.

TWO Arcraft-Paramount pictures running simultaneously at the California theatre during the week of January 27, played to capacity business, according to a report made to Branch Manager Harry Ballance of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange. The pictures were Shirley Mason in "Come On In," and Roscoe Arbuckle in "Camping Out."

THE Paramount-Arcraft Sidney Drew comedies have been booked at the California theatre.

A. S. ARONSON, district manager for Goldwyn, will make his headquarters at the Los Angeles Goldwyn exchange, it was announced by Branch Manager Ben Fish. Mr. Aronson has been in Los Angeles about ten days.

INTRODUCES ANOTHER FEATURE

To the projectionist running his reels on schedule time the new SIMPLEX FILM FOOTAGE REGISTER makes a special appeal.

WHAT IT IS—A simply constructed register which accurately indicates the number of feet of film that are passing through the mechanism.

WHAT IT ELIMINATES—When the time approaches for making a dissolving "pick-up" from one reel to another there is no nervous opening of the upper magazine, no tense watching of the screen to the neglect of everything else—no guess work.

A glance at the register shows exactly when the "pick-up" is to be made.

Upon re-loading the magazine, a simple turn will instantly set the register back to "O."

Increases projection room efficiency.

Insures a smoothly running program.

NOTE

The SIMPLEX FILM FOOTAGE REGISTER is to be regarded purely as an accessory and not a part of the regular Simplex equipment. Will only be attached upon request to new Simplex Projectors at an additional charge of $15.00.

"And let us not conclude the catalogue of excellencies without a word for one Watterson Rothacker, a sort of Griffith of film mechanics, so to speak. Rothacker's toning and tinting are so apropos that they become absolute and vital parts of Tucker's drama."

From First National Exhibitors everywhere came other welcome words praising "picture" and prints.
